Abstrak

Gone are the days of the hegemony of la pensée unique (or the one-and-only-way of thinking) and the euphoria created by the globalization of markets. Rising unemployment and insecurity, the insidious dismantling of public services, repeated financial crises, ecological imbalances and US unilateralism: all these have helped to undermine the neoliberal discourse. People have lost their confidence in the capacity ? or will ? of those who govern to guarantee priority for collective security, even rights, over the interests of powerful private groups. This is responsible for the emergence of a ?world citizens? movement? that seeks new forms of collective and democratic regulation. It has taken only a few years for the ?alternative world galaxy? to force its way, often in a spectacular fashion, on to the international scene and attract responses from broad sectors of the population.
