The Canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim

The Formation and Function of the Sunnī Ḥadīth Canon

ΒY

JONATHAN BROWN

The Canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim

Islam History and Civilization

Studies and Texts

Edited by Wadad Kadi Rotraud Wielandt

VOLUME 69

The Canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim

The Formation and Function of the Sunnī Ḥadīth Canon

> By Jonathan Brown

BRILL

LEIDEN • BOSTON 2007 This book is printed on acid-free paper.

ISSN 0929-2403 ISBN 978 90 04 15839 9

© Copyright 2007 by Koninklijke Brill NV, Leiden, The Netherlands. Koninklijke Brill NV incorporates the imprints Brill, Hotei Publishing, IDC Publishers, Martinus Nijhoff Publishers and VSP.

All rights reserved. No part of this publication may be reproduced, translated, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording or otherwise, without prior written permission from the publisher.

Authorization to photocopy items for internal or personal use is granted by Koninklijke Brill NV provided that the appropriate fees are paid directly to The Copyright Clearance Center, 222 Rosewood Drive, Suite 910, Danvers, MA 01923, USA. Fees are subject to change.

PRINTED IN THE NETHERLANDS

And they made their camp near [the tents of] Maysūn... Where the sun forever rose first over the dry land...

– Jundub b. Suʿūd al-Asmarī

To Maisoon, who inspired me to seek knowledge

List of Chart	XV
Acknowledgments	xvii
Dates and Abbreviations	xix
Preface	xxi

PART ONE

I.	Intro	oduction	3
	I.1.	Introduction	3
	I.2.	Thesis	5
	I.3.	Scholarship on the Ṣaḥīḥayn and the Ḥadīth
		Canon	8
	I.4.	Addressing the Sahihayn as a Canon	15
	I.5.	Note on the Sources and Approaches of this Study	15
	I.6.	Problems in Approaches	18
II.	The	Study of Canons and Canonization	20
		Introduction	20
		Canons in Context and the Emergence of Canon
		Studies	21
	II.3.	Canon Studies and the Islamic Tradition	31
	II.4.	Theoretical Tools and Common Historical Processes: Canon Studies and the Hadīth
		Canon	38
		II.4.a. Canons and Community	39
		II.4.b. Kanon and the Measure of Revealed
		Truth	41
		II.4.c. The Principle of Charity and Canonical Culture	42
	II.5.	Conclusion	46

III.	The G	enesis of al-Bukhārī and Muslim	42
	III.1.	Introduction	47
	III.2.	The Development of Hadith Literature	42
	III.3.	· ·
		Hadīth Tradition	54
	III.4.		60
	III.5.	, 0
		Muslim	64
	III.6.	Reality: Al-Bukhārī, Ṣāḥib al-Ṣaḥīḥ	6
		a. The $Sah\bar{l}h$	69
	111.0.0	III.6.b. Legal Identity and Method	7
		III.6.c. Al-Bukhārī and the Controversy over the	,
		Created Wording of the Qur'ān	74
	III.7.	Reality: Muslim, the Junior Partner	8
	111.7.	III.7.a. Muslim's Methodology in his $Sah\bar{t}h$	8
	III.8.	Perception: Al-Bukhārī, Muslim and the	0.
	111.0.	Greatest Generation	8
	III O		0
	III.9.	Reception: The Immediate Response to	0
	III 10	al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's Works	90
	111.10	. Conclusion	98
IV	A "Per	riod of Intense Canonical Process": Imagination and udy of the Ṣaḥīḥayn in the Long Fourth/Tenth ry	9
	IV.1.	Introduction	99
	IV.2.	The Mustakhraj Genre	104
	IV.2. IV.3.	Mustakhraj: The Sahīhayn as Formative Texts	10
	1 v.J.	IV.3.a. Al-Ismāʿīlī: Rationalist Muhaddith	10
		IV.3.b. Abū Nuʿaym al-Isbahānī and	10.
		Shiite-Sunni Polemic	11
			11
		IV.3.c. Abū 'Awāna and an Independent Legal	11
	TT 7.4	Path	11:
	IV.4.	Ilal and Ilzāmāt : Interaction with the Standards
	TT 7 -	of al-Bukhārī and Muslim	11.
	IV.5.	Required Study: Clarifying an Unclear Subject	120
	IV.6.	Regional and Temporal Distribution of the
		Ṣaḥīḥayn Network	124
		IV.6.a. Naysābūr: The Hometown Cult of Muslim	12^{-1}

viii

		IV.6.b. Jurjān: A Cult of al-Bukhārī Among Friends	128
		IV.6.c. Baghdad: Inheriting the Study of the Sahihayn Among the Baghdad Knot	131
		IV.6.d. Other: Isfahan and Central Asia	134
		IV.6.e. An End to Regional Cults After 370AH	135
	IV.7.	The Sahīhayn Network: A Shāfi'ī Enterprise	135
	IV.8.	Intense Canonical Process: Imagining a New
		Epistemological Status for Hadīth Books	144
	IV.9.	Why the Sahīhayn ?	149
	IV.10.	Conclusion: The Eve of Canonization	151
V.	Canor	n and Community: al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī and the nization of the Sahīhayn	154
	V.1.	Introduction	154
	V.2.	The Life and Works of al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī	155
	V.3.	Al-Bukhārī and Muslim in al-Hākim's Vision of
		Ḥadīth	160
	V.4.	The Shurūt According to al-Hakim: The Requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim	162
		V.4.a. Two Rāwīs and the Elimination of Jahāla	163
		V.4.b. Doubling Transmission: $1 \rightarrow 2 \rightarrow 4$	166
		V.4.c. A Standard for Authenticity and a Standard for the Sahīhayn	168
	V.5.	Admitted Exceptions: al-Mustadrak and the Standards of the Shaykhayn as Ideal Rather Than Reality	170
	V.6.	Al-Hākim's Politics: The Expansion of the
		Authentic Umbrella	172
	V.7.	Al-Hakim's Mubtadi'a and the Ten Thousand	175
	V.8.	Al-Hākim's Target Audience: The Mu'tazilites and their Criteria for Authentic Hadīths	178
	V.9.	The Mustadrak as a Common Measure of Authenticity	181
	V.10.	The Discourse of Legal Theory: The Consensus of the Umma on Hadīth	183
		V.10.a. The Hanafis	184
		V.10.b. The Later Mu ^c tazilites	187
		V.10.c. The Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī Orthodoxy	188

ix

V.10.d. The Ḥanbalī Orthodoxy: Abū Yaʿlā
Ibn al-Farrā'	191
V.10.e. The Mālikīs	193
V.10.f. Al-Hākim and the Consensus of the Umma	193
V.11. A New Common Ground between the Hanbalī/
Über-Sunnis and the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī Schools	194
V.12. An Articulate Über-Sunni: Abū Nașr al-Wā'ilī	196
V.13. Imām al-Haramayn al-Juwaynī: A Consummate
Shāfi'ī and Ash'arī	200
V.14. The Sahāhayn Canon: The Authority of Convention and Common Ground	201
V.15. Conclusion: Why the Sahāhayn Now?	205

PART TWO

VI. The Canon and the Needs of the Community: The Sahāhayn as Measure of Authenticity, Authoritative Reference and Exemplum	209
VI.1. Introduction	209
VI.2. 1. The Need for a Common Measure of Authenticity: The Sahīḥayn in Scholarly Debate	210
VI.2. Takhrij: Applying the Measure of Authenticity	211
VI.3. The Origins of Takhrij Among the Students of al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī	217
VI.4. The Historical Application of Takhrij	222
VI.4.a. Polemics and Debate	222
VI.4.b. Bolstering Formative Texts	229
VI.5. 1. Misuse of the Sahihayn Canon	239
VI.5. 2. The Need for an Authoritative Reference:
The Saḥīḥayn and Non-Ḥadīth Specialists	240
VI.6. 3. The Need for an Exemplum: Aristotle's Poetics and the Canon that Sets the Rule	247
VI.7. The Limits of the Canon's Authority: The Dialogic
Power of the Sahīhayn	251
VI.8. Conclusion	260

VII.	The Pr	inciple of Charity and the Creation of Canonical
	Culture	2	26
	VII.1.	Introduction	26
	VII.2.	The Beginnings of Canonical Culture: Between
		390-460/1000-1070	26
	VII.3.	The Character of the Canonical Culture:
		Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī and Defining the Personas of al-Bukhārī and Muslim	26
	VII.4.	Charity and the Maintenance of Canonical
		Culture	27
		VII.4.a. Reinventing the Etiology: Charity and Legitimizing al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ	27
		VII.4.b. Charity and Maintaining the Superiority of al-Bukhārī over
		Muslim	27
		VII.4.c. Charity and Muslim's Meeting with
		Abū Zurʿa al-Rāzī	28
	VII 5	Reconciling the Canon with Convention: the	40
	v II.J.	Sahīhayn and the Rules of Hadīth	28
		VII.5.a. Charity and Tadlis	28
		VII.5.b. Charity and Transmitters	28
	VII.6.	Rebutting Earlier Criticisms	29
	VII.0. VII.7.	0	29
	V 11.7.	Conclusion	4,5
VIII	The C	anon and Criticism: Iconoclasm and Rejection of v 111		ical Culture from Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ to the Modern Movement	30
		Introduction	30
		Rejection of the Canonical Culture: Criticism	50
	V 111.4.	after Ibn al-Şalāh	30
	VIII 3	Iconoclasm and Institutional Security in	50
	v 111.J.	Islamic Civilization: The Salafi Tradition	30
		VIII.3.a. Revival and Reform in the Early	50
		Modern and Modern Periods	30
		VIII.3.b. Traditionalist Salafis in the	50
		Middle East	30
		Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl al-Ṣanʿānī: A Yemeni	50
	v 111.4.		31
		Salafī Shāh Walī Allāh and the First Condemnation	31
	v111.3.		21
		of Criticizing the Canon	31

xi

	VIII.6.	Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī: Iconoclast	0.0
	VIII 7	Extraordinaire	32
	V 111. / .	the Sahīhayn and His Detractors	32
			32
	V 111.0.	Conclusion: Al-Albānī's Reply and the Continuity of Iconoclastic Hadīth	33
		Criticism	33
IX.	Canon	and Synecdoche: The Ṣaḥīḥayn in Narrative and
	Ritual		33
	IX.1.	Introduction	33
	IX.2.	Delimiting the Infinite: Managing the Sunna through the Hadīth Canon	33
	IX.3.	Synecdoche in Ritual: Usage of the Sahīhayn
		Canon in Ritual Contexts	33
		IX.3.a. Supplicatory and Medicinal Rituals	34
		IX.3.b. Calendrical Rituals	34
		IX.3.c. Political Rituals	34
	IX.4.	The Ritual Power of the Saḥīḥayn : The
		Muhammadan Blessing	34
	IX.5.	The Canon and Synecdoche in Narrative:
		A Salvational Trope in a Narrative of Decline and Salvation	34
		IX.5.a. Kh ^w āje ʿAbdallāh al-Anṣārī and the Beginning of Synecdoche in Narrative	35
		IX.5.b. Al-Ghazālī's Return to the Straight
		Path: The Ṣaḥīḥayn as Synecdoche	35
		IX.5.c. Al-Dhahabī's Narrative of Islamic History: The Sahīhayn as Synecdoche	35
	IX.6.	Conclusion	35
v	C 1		9.0
Х.			36
	X.1.	Why the Sahīhayn and Not Other Books?	36
	X.2.	What Forces Led to the Canonization of the	0.0
	NZ O	Sahīhayn?	36
	X.3.	Why Did the Canon Form at the Beginning of	0.0
		the Fifth/Eleventh Century?	36
	X.4.	Did the Canon Emerge from Ferment and Strife?	37

xii

X.5. Was the Canon a Response to Shiism or the Product of the Seljuq State?	372
X.6. Was the Sahāhayn Canon the Product of or Limited to a Specific Region?	374
X.7. Conclusion	378
Appendices
Appendix I: References for the Sahīhayn Network Chart Appendix II: The Question of the Attribution of the	379
Şahīhayn	384
Select Bibliography	387
Index	411

xiii

LIST OF CHART

Chart 1.1	Şahīhayn Network Char	t	103
-----------	-----------------------	---	-----

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Acknowledgements for this book must begin with Dr. Wadad Kadi of the University of Chicago, who served as an excellent teacher, editor and role model throughout my graduate career there. Drs. Fred Donner and Tahera Qutbuddin also served generously as wonderful professors and helpful advisors on this book. I must also thank John Voll, John Esposito, John Woods, Heshmat Moayyad, Donald Whitcomb, Cornell Fleischer, Gene Gragg, Holly Shissler, Maysam al-Faruqi and Haifaa Khalafallah for assisting me in developing this project. Dr. Menachem Brinker in particular played an enormous role in helping me construct the book's theoretical framework, and I am indebted to him for his support. My friend Dr. Scott Lucas also provided invaluable assistance with his rigorous and positive criticism. I must also thank profusely my family, in particular my mother, Dr. Ellen Brown, for showing me the joys of learning and unhesitatingly supporting my interests throughout life. My friends in Hyde Park and Washington DC also deserve my sincere thanks.

I am hugely indebted to the financial generosity of the Mellon Foundation, the Council for American Overseas Research Centers, the American Institute for Iranian Studies, and the Center for Arabic Study Abroad.

I must also acknowledge the indispensable assistance granted by the Library of Congress Middle East and North Africa Reading Room; the American Research Institute in Turkey for its hospitality; the Khizāna al-'Āmma in Rabat; the Maktabat al-Asad in Damascus; the Süleymaniye Library, the Topkapı Sarayı Library and the Istanbul University Rare Books Library for allowing me continuous access to their unparalleled manuscript collections; and Drs. Gozashte and Pakechi at the Greater Islamic Encyclopedia ($D\bar{a}$ 'erat al-ma' \bar{a} ref-e bozorg-e esl \bar{a} m \bar{i}) in Tehran, for their valuable assistance. Of course, this book would not exist if not for the University of Chicago, its singular Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations, and the great Regenstein Library. I must also thank Shaykh Osama al-Syed Mahmoud al-Azhari and 'Imād al-Dīn 'Abbās Sa'īd in Cairo and Muḥammad Mujīr al-Khatīb in Damascus for their patient assistance.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Finally, I must acknowledge the honor of working in the shadow of two great minds, Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl al-Bukhārī and Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj, as well as the inimitable generations of scholars who preceded and followed them in elaborating the Islamic scholarly tradition. As the Seljuq vizier Niẓām al-Mulk said: "Indeed I know that I am not worthy of this, but I wish to tie myself to the train of those who transmit the ḥadīths of God's Messenger, may the peace and blessings of God be upon him."

xviii

DATES AND ABBREVIATIONS

Dates in this book will follow the Hijrī/Common Era format for all dates through the eleventh/seventeenth century. After that, Hijrī dates are of little use, and only CE dates will be provided.

The phrase "may the peace and blessings of God be upon him (sallā Allāh 'alayhi wa sallam)," which usually follows the Prophet Muḥammad's name in Muslim sources will be abbreviated as (s). The phrase "may God be pleased with him/her/them (radiya Allāh 'an...)," which usually follows the names of Companions, will be represented with (r).

PREFACE

In the most immediate sense, this book consists of a revised version of a dissertation submitted to the Department of Near Eastern Languages and Civilizations of the University of Chicago under the supervision of Dr. Wadad Kadi. As a project, however, it represents an attempt to answer a question that perplexed me for many years before I ever sat down to begin dissertation research: in the history of Sunni Islam, why are the Şaḥīḥayn of al-Bukhārī and Muslim so special, what is their true station, and how did they achieve this status? To rephrase this question more broadly, what are the origins, nature and applications of authority in the Sunni ḥadīth tradition?

In the West, the study of the Sunni hadīth tradition has focused mainly on the 'Authenticity Question'—to what extent does the hadīth corpus provide a historically reliable documentation of early Islamic political, doctrinal and legal history. In its scope (but not in its sources), the investigation of the Authenticity Question stops in the early and mid third/ninth century with the appearance of extant documentary evidence in the form of historical and legal works like the Muwațța' of Mālik and the Ṣaḥīḥayn.

This book is not about the Authenticity Question. It is about the Sunni hadīth tradition and its role in Islamic civilization after the Authenticity Question fades from view. Whether or not the Şahīhayn or any collection of hadīth truly communicate the original teachings of Islam across the gulf of time separating us from Muhammad is ultimately beyond the ken of historians. It will remain a question hobbled as much by the exigencies of faith as a paucity of sources. How the hadīth tradition reflects, facilitates and informs the choices that the Sunni community has made in the thousand some years since its emergence lies more squarely within the historian's purview: the study of continuity and change in a human tradition. It is my hope that this book will assist any reader interested in engaging this topic.

Tackling the origins, development and function of the Sahīhayn canon—the two most famous books in Sunni Islam after the Qur'ān—required casting a very wide net across the diverse and preposterously rich historical landscape of Islamic civilization. In order to produce a study of any thematic consistency and manageable size, I have almost certainly done great injustice to many genres of Islamicate intellectual, literary or religious history. I can only hope that this study is worthy of correction.

PREFACE

Finally, this is book is not a criticism of al-Bukhārī and Muslim or their collections. The genius, rigor and dedication of those two scholars stand beyond my reach and abilities. To fully appreciate the Sahīhayn within the context of the collection and criticism of hadīths is to move beyond a common first impression of the hadīth tradition—that of an erratic and ultimately contrived game of religious telephone—to grasp the simple logic and eerie internal consistency of a widely scattered but uniformly dedicated community of scholars who, over the past 1,400 years, have repeatedly demonstrated that what we historians have deemed the limits of the possible for human memory and attention to detail simply need to be rethought.

xxii

PART ONE

CHAPTER ONE

INTRODUCTION

Introduction

In 465/1072–3, the grand vizier of the Seljuq empire, a statesman so spectacularly powerful that he was hailed as Nizām al-Mulk (The Order of the Realm), heard of a scholar who possessed a particularly authoritative copy of the most famous collection of traditions (hadīth) related from the Prophet Muḥammad: the Ṣaḥīḥ of al-Bukhārī (d. 256/870). Nizām al-Mulk ordered this scholar brought to his newly founded college in the Iranian city of Naysābūr, where the vizier gathered the children of the city's judges, scholars and other notables to hear a reading of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ.¹ Why did Nizām al-Mulk order such a promulgation of the Ṣaḥīḥ, and why did he convene the next generation of the Sunni Muslim elite in attendance?

Niẓām al-Mulk stood at the intersection of the great forces of Islamic religious history at a time when Sunni Islam was coalescing in its institutional form. While serving the Seljuq sultans, who were generously endowing educational institutions for the Hanafī school of law, he established his Niẓāmiyya college network in the principal cities of the empire for the use of the rival Shāfiʿī school. Yet Niẓām al-Mulk also held ḥadīth study circles that glorified the 'partisans of ḥadīth (asḥāb al-ḥadīth)' closely associated with the contending Hanbalī school.²

¹ Abū al-Hasan 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī (d. 529/1134–5), selections made by Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm al-Ṣarīfinī (d. 641/1243–4), Tārīkh Naysābūr al-Muntakhab min al-Siyāq, ed. Moḥammad Kāzem al-Hamūdī (Qom: Jamā'at al-Modarresīn, 1403/1983), 65.

² Ibn al-Jawzī evidently had seen the founding charter of the Baghdad Nizāmiyya; Abū al-Faraj 'Abd al-Raḥmān Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200), al-Muntazam fī tārīkh alumam wa al-mulūk, ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā and Muṣṭafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā, 19 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1412/1992); 16:190–1, 304; 17:32; see also 'Abd al-Hādī Ridā, ''Amālī Nizām al-Mulk al-wazīr al-saljūqī fī al-ḥadīth,'' Majallat Ma'had al-Makhūṭāţ al-ʿArabiyya 5, no. 2 (1959): 355. From the material of his transmission sessions, it is clear that Nizām al-Mulk made a special effort to hear ḥadīths that were shibboleths of Sunnism as opposed to Muʿtazilism, such as reports affirming that the believers will see God on the Day of Judgment; Ridā, ''Amālī;'' 356, 366. See also Richard W. Bulliet, ''The Political-Religious History of Nishapur

These policies unfolded in the threatening shadow of the Sunni Seljuqs' principal rival, the Ismāʿīlī Shiites, whose assassins would eventually bring Niẓām al-Mulk's career to an end.

In this divided milieu, Nizām al-Mulk sought to foster a common ground of Sunni Islam. In 469/1076–77, when the leading Shāfi'ī scholar of Baghdad tried to win Nizām al-Mulk's support in a bitter debate with Ḥanbalī rivals, the vizier sent him a missive refusing to intervene on his behalf. "We believe in bolstering the Sunni ways (al-sunan), not building up communal strife (al-fitan)," he explained. "We undertook the building of this [Nizāmiyya] college in order to support and protect the people of knowledge and the welfare of the community, not to create divisions amongst Muslims (tafīīq al-kalima)."³

By gathering the children of the empire's scholarly and administrative elite around a reading of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ, Niẓām al-Mulk was reinforcing a sense of Sunni communalism. As we shall see, by the vizier's time scholars from most of the disputing legal and theological schools that would comprise the Sunni fold had together deemed the Ṣaḥīḥayn, the two 'Authentic' ḥadīth collections of al-Bukhārī and his student Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj (d. 261/875), authoritative representations of the Prophet's legacy. By convening this reading, Niẓām al-Mulk was inculcating al-Bukhārī's book as a touchstone of Sunni identity in the impressionable young minds of the next generation.

The canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim thus forms part of the greater drama of the formation of Sunni Islam. Niẓām al-Mulk's fifth/eleventh-century world brought together all the leading characters in this saga. Among them were the textualist Ḥanbalīs and the more rationalist Shāfi'īs, both heirs to the heritage of 'the partisans of ḥadīth' but divided over the role of speculative theology in Islam. We also find the Ḥanafīs, rooted in their own distinct, ḥadīth-wary hermeneutic tradition. These groups composed competing 'orthodoxies,' each independent and self-righteously justified. The canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim is the story of how these and other disjointed segments of what became the Sunni community forged a common language for addressing the shared heritage of the Prophet's legacy (sunna).

in the Eleventh Century," in Islamic Civilization 950-1150, ed. D.S. Richards (Oxford: Cassirer, 1973), 85 ff.

³ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 16:190–1.

INTRODUCTION

This drama began in the classical period, but it has continued into modern times. Indeed, the questions that arise in a study of the formation, function and status of the Sahīhayn canon reflect tensions between the competing schools of thought within today's Sunni community. Why does a modern Hanafī scholar from India seeking to defend his school against Salafī critics prominently cite a hadīth from Sahīh al-Bukhārī on the cover of his book?⁴ Why does a Salafī scholar insist on his right to criticize al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections, while his opponents vociferously condemn him for "violating the integrity of these motherbooks"?⁵ These questions, which fuel fierce debates in Muslim discourse today, descend from the centuries of historical development that forged and maintained the canon of al-Bukhārī and Muslim.

After the Qur'ān, the $\underline{Sah\bar{u}hayn}$ are the two most venerated books in Sunni Islam. Yet until now no one has explained this undeniable reality. This study examines the canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim in order to discover how, when and why the two $\underline{Sah\bar{u}hs}$ attained their authoritative station. It explores the nature of this authority, the tensions surrounding it, and the roles that the $\underline{Sah\bar{u}hayn}$ canon has played in Islamic civilization.

Thesis

Canons form at the nexus of text, authority and communal identification. Their formation, however, is neither a random nor an inevitable process. Canonization involves a community's act of authorizing specific books in order to meet certain needs. It entails the transformation of texts, through use, study, and appreciation, from nondescript tomes into powerful symbols of divine, legal or artistic authority for a particular audience. In their own time, al-Bukhārī and Muslim were accomplished representatives of the transmission-based tradition of Islamic law. Like their teacher, Aḥmad Ibn Ḥanbal (d. 241/855), they saw collecting and acting on the reports of the early Muslim community as the only legitimate means by which believers could ascertain God's will and live according to it. Yet they were only two of many such scholars, with al-Bukhārī's career in particular marred by scandal. For over two centuries after al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's deaths, the study and collection of hadīths continued unabated. Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's remarkable contribution came with their decision to compile books devoted only to hadīths they considered authentic (sahīh). This act broke stridently with the practices of the transmission-based school and thus met with significant disapproval in the immediate wake of the authors' careers.

⁴ Abdur-Rahman Ibn Yusuf, Fiqh al-Imam: Key Proofs in Hanafi Fiqh, 2nd ed. (Santa Barbara: White Thread Press, 2003), cover.

⁵ See www.sunnah.org/history/Innovators/al_albani.htm, last accessed 5/31/04.

CHAPTER ONE

In the fourth/tenth century, however, the initial controversy surrounding the Sahīhayn and their authors dissipated as a relatively small and focused network of scholars from the moderate Shāfi'ī tradition began appreciating the books' utility. These scholars found the Sahīhayn ideal vehicles for articulating their relationship to the Prophet's normative legacy as well as standards against which to measure the strength of their own hadīth collections. Employing the Sahīhayn for these purposes required intimate familiarity with the two books and thus spurred an intensive study of the works and their authors' methodologies. Simultaneously, between the end of the third/ninth and the middle of the fifth/eleventh century, the broader Muslim community began imagining a new level of authority for Prophetic traditions. Scholars representing a wide range of opinion started to conceive of certain hadīths and hadīth collections as providing loci of consensus amid the burgeoning diversity of Islamic thought.

One scholar in particular inherited the body of scholarship on the Sahīhayn and harnessed the two works as a new measure of authenticity for evaluating reports attributed to the Prophet. Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī (d. 405/1014) recognized that the Sahīhayn possessed tremendous polemical value as common measures of hadīth authenticity that met the requirements of both the transmission-based scholars whom he championed and the Mu^ctazilites whom he bitterly opposed. He thus conceived of the criteria that al-Bukhārī and Muslim had used in compiling their works as a standard he claimed authorized a vast new body of hadīths binding on both parties. A cadre of his students, hailing from the rival Hanbalī and Shāfi'ī strains of the transmission-based school, agreed on the Sahīhavn as a commonly accepted tract of the Prophetic past. Drawing on developments in legal theory shared by all the major non-Shiite schools of the fifth/eleventh century, they declared that the community's alleged consensus on the reliability of the Sahīhavn guaranteed the absolute certainty of their contents.

This ability of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections to serve as an acknowledged convention for discussing the Prophet's authenticated legacy would serve three important needs in the Sunni scholarly culture of the fifth/eleventh century. As the division between different schools of theology and law became more defined, scholars from the competing Shāfi'ī, Ḥanbalī and Mālikī schools quickly began employing the Ṣaḥīḥayn as a measure of authenticity in debates and polemics. By the early eighth/fourteenth century, even the ḥadīth-wary Ḥanafī school could not avoid adopting this convention. With the increased division of labor between jurists and ḥadīth scholars in the mid-fifth/eleventh century, the Ṣaḥīḥayn also became an indispensable authoritative reference for jurists who lacked expertise in ḥadīth evaluation. Finally, al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works served as standards of excellence that shaped the science of ḥadīth criticism as scholars from the fifth/eleventh to the seventh/thirteenth century sought to systematize the study of the Prophet's word.

INTRODUCTION

The authority of the canon as a measure of authenticity, however, was an illusion conjured up in the dialogic space of debate and exposition. It vanished outside such interactive arenas. Scholars directed the compelling authority of the Sahihayn only against others, and within the closed doors of one school of law or theology, they had no compunction about ignoring or criticizing reports from either collection.

Although occasional criticism of the Sahīhayn continued even after their canonization at the dawn of the fifth/eleventh century, advocates of institutional Sunnism found it essential to protect the two works and the important roles they played. Beginning at the turn of the fourth/tenth century and climaxing in the mid-seventh/thirteenth, a set of predominately Shāfiʿī scholars created a canonical culture around the Ṣahīḥayn that recast the two books' pre-canonical pasts as well as those of their authors according to the exigent contours of the canon. The canonical culture of the Ṣahīḥayn also had to reconcile instances in which al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's methods had fallen short of what had emerged as the common requirements of Sunni ḥadīth criticism in the centuries after their deaths.

While most influential participants in the Sunni tradition accepted the canonical culture of the Sahāḥayn, some ḥadīth scholars refused to safeguard the canon at the expense of the critical standards of ḥadīth study. The tension between the majority's commitment to the institutional security of the Ṣaḥāḥayn and this iconoclastic strain came to a head with the emergence of the modern ḥadīth-based Salafī movement in the eighteenth century. In a conflict that reflects the anxieties of redefining Islam in the modern world, the impermissibility of criticizing the Sahāhayn has become a rallying cry for those devoted to defending the classical institutions of Islamic civilization against the iconoclastic Salafī call to revive the primordial greatness of Islam through the hadīth tradition.

CHAPTER ONE

Beyond the Sahīhayn's roles as a measure of authenticity, an authoritative reference and exemplum among Sunni scholars, the canon has played an important role in a variety of ritual domains and broader historical narratives about Islamic civilization. Here the Sahīhayn have become a synecdochic representation of the Prophet himself, essentializing his role as a liminal figure and medium of blessing. The two works have also come to serve as a literary trope, symbolizing the Prophet's unadulterated teachings in the Sunni tradition's self-perception.

Scholarship on the Ṣaḥīḥayn and the Ḥadīth Canon

Western scholars have regularly spoken of 'canonical' hadīth collections in Islamic civilization.⁶ This recognition follows the Muslim sources themselves, which refer to this canon in a myriad of ways, such as 'the relied-upon books (al-kutub al-mu'tamad 'alayhā),' 'the Four Books,' 'the Five Books,' 'the Six Books,' and finally 'the Authentic Collections

⁶ For examples, see G.E. von Grunebaum, Classical Islam: A History 600-1258 (London: George Allen & Unwin, 1970), 95; Marshall Hodgson, The Venture of Islam (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1974), 1:332; Norman Calder, Studies in Early Muslim Jurisprudence (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1993), 189; Richard W. Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge (New York: Columbia University Press, 1994), 19; Uri Rubin, The Eye of the Beholder: The Life of Muhammad as Viewed by the Early Muslims (Princeton: Darwin Press, 1995), 224; Josef van Ess, Theologie und Gesellschaft im 2. und 3. Jahrhundert Hidschra, 6 vols. (New York: Walter de Gruyter, 1997), 1:62; Christopher S. Taylor, In the Vicinity of the Righteous: Ziyara and the Veneration of Muslim Saints in Late Medieval Egypt (Leiden: Brill, 1999), 191; Daphna Ephrat, A Learned Society in a Period of Transition: The Sunni Ulama' of Eleventh-Century Baghdad (Albany: State University of New York Press, 2000), 40; Shahab Ahmad, "Mapping the World of a Scholar in Sixth/twelfth Century Bukhara: Regional Tradition in Medieval Islamic Scholarship as Reflected in a Bibliography," Journal of the American Oriental Society, 120, no. 1 (2000): 25; G.H.A. Juynboll, "Sahih" Encyclopaedia of Islam CD-ROM Edition v. 1.0, henceforth El²; Jonathan Berkey, The Formation of Islam: Religion and Society in the Near East 600-1800 (New York: Cambridge University Press, 2003), 116; Sabine Schmidtke, "The ijāza from 'Abd Allāh b. Şālih al-Samāhījī to Nāşir al-Jārūdī al-Qatīfī: A Source for the Twelver Shi'i Scholarly Tradition of Bahrayn," in Culture and Memory in Medieval Islam: Essays in Honour of Wilferd Madelung, ed. Farhad Daftary and Josef W. Meri (London: I.B. Tauris, 2003), 73; Natana J. DeLong Bas, Wahhabi Islam (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2004), 46; Harald Motzki, "Dating Muslim Traditions: a Survey," Arabica 52, no. 2 (2005): 206.

INTRODUCTION

 $(\underline{Sih\bar{a}h})$.' We can discern three strata of the Sunni hadīth canon. The perennial core has been the Sahīhayn. Beyond these two foundational classics, some fourth/tenth-century scholars refer to a four-book selection that adds the two Sunans of Abū Dāwūd (d. 275/889) and al-Nasā'ī (d. 303/915). The Five Book canon, which is first noted in the sixth/twelfth century, incorporates the $J\bar{a}mi^{\circ}$ of al-Tirmidhī (d. 279/892). Finally the Six Book canon, which hails from the same period, adds either the Sunan of Ibn Mājah (d. 273/887), the Sunan of al-Dāraqutnī (d. 385/995) or the Muwațța' of Mālik b. Anas (d. 179/796). Later hadīth compendia often included other collections as well.⁷ None of these books, however, has enjoyed the esteem of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works.

A study tackling the entirety of the Sunni hadīth canon would require many more volumes than the present project allows. Because ⁷ Sa'īd b. al-Sakan of Egypt (d. 353/964) and Ibn Manda of Isfahan (d. 395/1004-5) mention the four foundational books of al-Bukhārī, Muslim, Abū Dāwūd and al-Nasā'ī (see Chapter 4 ns. 175 and 176). Although he did not denote them as a unit, the fifth/eleventh-century Shāfi'ī scholar Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī (d. 458/1066) stated that the six collections of al-Bukhārī, Muslim, Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī, al-Tirmidhī and Ibn Khuzayma (d. 311/923) had identified a substantial amount of the authentic hadīths in circulation. Abū al-Fadl Muhammad b. Ţāhir al-Maqdisī (d. 507/1113), who spent most of his life in Iran and greater Syria, described the Six Books as the Sahāhayn, the Jāmi' of al-Tirmidhī, and the Sunans of al-Nasā'ī, Abū Dāwūd and Ibn Mājah. 'Abd al-Karīm b. Muhammad al-Rāfi'ī of Qazvīn (d. 623/1226) also enumerates this six-book series, as does the Indian Hanafī al-Şaghānī (d. 650/1252), who also adds the Sunan of al-Dāraqutnī. The Andalusian Mālikī hadīth scholar, al-Saraqustī (d. 524/1129), on the other hand, counts the Six Books as those of al-Bukhārī, Muslim, al-Tirmidhī, Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī and Mālik. Al-Rāfi'ī's father, Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm al-Rāfi'ī (d. 580/1184), wrote a book called Hāwī al-usūl min akhbār al-rasūl, which included all the hadīths from the collections of al-Bukhārī, Muslim, al-Tirmidhī, Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī, and Ibn Mājah, as well as the Musnad of al-Shāfi'ī. Al-Silafī of Alexandria (d. 576/1180), Abū Bakr al-Hāzimī (d. 584/1188-9) and al-Nawawī of Damascus (d. 676/1277) mention only Five Books: the works of al-Bukhārī, Muslim, al-Tirmidhī, Abū Dāwūd and al-Nasā'ī (although al-Silafī notes that these are the works Muslims have agreed on after the Muwatta'). See Abū Bakr Ahmad al-Bayhaqī, Ma'rifat alsunan wa al-āthār, ed. Sayyid Kusrawī Hasan, 7 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1412/1991), 1:106; Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm al-Rāfi'ī, al-Tadwīn fī akhbār Qazwīn, ed. Azīz Allāh al-Utāridī (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1408/1987), 1:377; 2:49; al-Hasan b. Muhammad al-Saghānī, al-Durr al-multagat fī tabyīn al-ghalat wa yalīhi Kītāb al-mawdū at, ed. 'Abdallāh al-Qādī (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1405/1985), 20; Abū Ţāhir Ahmad b. Muhammad al-Silafī, "Muqaddimat al-hāfiz al-kabīr Abī Ţāhir al-Silafi," in Hamd b. Muhammad al-Khattābī, Maʿālim al-sunan, 3rd ed., 4 vols. (Beirut: al-Maktaba al-Ilmiyya, 1401/1981), 4:357-8; Muḥyī al-Dīn Abū Zakariyyā Yaḥyā b. Sharaf al-Nawawī, al-Taqrīb li'l-Nawawī (Cairo: Maktabat Muhammad Alī Şubayh, 1388/1968), 4; Abū al-Fadl Muhammad al-Maqdisī and Abū Bakr Muhammad al-Hāzimī, Shurūţ al-a'imma al-sitta wa shurūţ al-a'imma al-khamsa, ed. Muhammad Zāhid al-Kawtharī (Cairo: Maktabat al-Quds, 1387/[1967]).

CHAPTER ONE

the Ṣaḥīḥayn form the unchanging core of the canon, and because the roles that the two books have played and the station they have achieved differ qualitatively from the other components of the canon, this study addresses only the canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. A comprehensive study of the Sunni ḥadīth canon as a whole must wait until another day.

Oddly, although the broader hadith canon and the Sahihayn are frequently mentioned in Western scholarship, neither topic has received significant attention. Despite its having been published over a century ago, the work of the prescient Orientalist Ignaz Goldziher (d. 1921 CE) remains the most profound and detailed study of the hadīth canon. His interest in the entire span of the hadith tradition and his special attention to the question of the hadīth canon have made his study the most useful to date. Even Muslim authors who regularly criticize Goldziher and other elder statesmen of Orientalism quote him in order to explain when certain hadīth collections entered the canon.8 Following the predominant Sunni division of the hadīth canon into the Sahīhayn and the four Sunans of al-Tirmidhī, Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī and Ibn Mājah, Goldziher devotes separate sections to each of these two groups. He fixes approximately where and by what time the four Sunans had gained canonical status and the Six Book canon had formed. He asserts that this authoritative selection coalesced gradually and was in place by the seventh/thirteenth century, perceptively adding that the Maghrib and the Islamic heartlands had varying opinions on which books constituted the canon.⁹

Aside from Goldziher's appreciable contributions to our understanding of the hadīth canon's emergence, his most astute observation was that formidable questions about the canon await answers. He evinces a particular pessimism about dating the canonization of the Sahīhayn: "[W]e cannot establish with chronological accuracy the date which brought the consensus publicus for the two Sahīhs to maturity...."¹⁰ Goldziher also notes the extreme difficulty of determining why the hadīth

⁸ See, for example, Muhammad Zubayr Şiddīqī, Hadīth Literature: Its Origin, Development & Special Features, ed. Abdal Hakim Murad (Cambridge: Islamic Texts Society, 1993), 73–4.

⁹ Ignaz Goldziher, Muslim Studies II, trans. and ed. S.M. Stern and G.R. Barber (Chicago: Aldine Atherton, 1971), 242, 244. Goldziher's German original, Mohammedanische Studien, was published in 1889–90.

¹⁰ Goldziher, 240.

INTRODUCTION

canon was closed and why it excluded certain collections, such as the $Sah\bar{\iota}h$ of Ibn Khuzayma (d. 311/923), written in the same period as the $Sah\bar{\iota}hayn$.¹¹ The present study will offer answers to both these questions.

Goldziher also made a rare foray into the function of the hadīth canon and the nature of the veneration for al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works. He submits that the hadīth canon as a whole served as a legal "reference in order to find out the traditional teachings about a given question."¹² He touches on other functions of al-Bukhārī's work in particular, alluding to the ritual dimension of the canon and its role in defining communal identity. He notes how oaths were sworn on al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ, an honor otherwise reserved for the Qur'ān.¹³ Most importantly, Goldziher hints that the canonization of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works was a dynamic process of interaction between the texts and the needs of the Muslim scholarly community.¹⁴ In our discussion of the multivalent functions of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon in Chapters Six and Nine, both the insight and limitations of Goldziher's comments will become evident.

Goldziher also makes a unique effort to explain how the Sahāhayn were both venerated and open to criticism. The heart of the canonical status of the books, he explains, was not a claim of infallibility, but rather the community's demand that these two works be recognized as legally compelling indicators of "religious praxis" on the basis of the community's consensus on their authenticity. He says: "[v]eneration was directed at this canonical work [i.e., al-Bukhārī's collection] as a whole but not to its individual lines and paragraphs."¹⁵ Goldziher concludes that "the veneration [of the Sahāhs of al-Bukhārī and Muslim] never went so far as to cause free criticism of the sayings and remarks incorporated in these collections to be considered impermissible or unseemly...."¹⁶ As we shall see in Chapter Eight, Goldziher's assessment proves correct until the early modern period, when criticism of the Sahāhayn became anathema to many scholars.

Since Goldziher, scholars investigating Islamic intellectual history or evaluating the sources for the formative first three centuries of the ¹¹ Goldziher, 239.

¹² Goldziher, 240.

¹³ Goldziher, 234.

¹⁴ Goldziher, 222.

¹⁵ Goldziher, 247.

¹⁶ Goldziher, 236–7.

Muslim community have found acknowledging the existence of the hadīth canon inevitable. Few discussions of Islamic thought or society fail to mention the canon and the unique status of the Sahīhavn. Most scholars, however, have been content to either reproduce Goldziher's conclusions or devote only cursory remarks to the issue.¹⁷ The superficial character of these observations stems from the frequency with which they treat the hadith canon as ancillary to some larger topic, such as early Islamic historiography or a survey of the sources of Islamic law. Such studies have followed Goldziher by dating the emergence of the canon from anywhere between the third/ninth century and the seventh/thirteenth century, devoting little thought to the actual nature or function of the canon. In his unparalleled study of Islamic civilization, for example, Marshall Hodgson only notes the existence of "canonical collections" of hadīth, adding that al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's Sahīhs "came to be revered as especially holy."18 In his otherwise comprehensive study of the formation of Islamic dogma and society in the second and third centuries AH, Josef van Ess acknowledges the existence of the hadīth canon but does not devote further attention to it.¹⁹ Likewise, other excellent studies of Muslim scholarly culture in the classical period cast only cursory glances at the hadīth canon, interpreting it as a natural product of the salient role that Prophetic traditions played in Islamic thought. In A Learned Society in a Period of Transition, Daphna Ephrat thus states that "by the third Muslim century, hadith had also achieved a central place in Muslim religious life, and the basic canons of the prophetic Sunna had been codified."20

Scholars have generally perceived the canonical hadīth collections as representative of the Sunni worldview, and as such they have discussed them as a final chapter in the development of Islamic orthodoxy in the third/ninth century. Henri Lammens attributed the success of the Six Books to "the fact that they came at the right time, at the moment when Qorānic religion was about to take definitive shape...."²¹ In the conclusion to The Eye of the Beholder, a study on how the Sunni com-

¹⁷ For a deferral to Goldziher by one of the leading Western scholars on hadīth, see Eerik Dickinson, "Ibn al-Ṣalāh al-Shahrazūrī and the Isnād," Journal of the American Oriental Society 122, no. 3 (2002): 488.

¹⁸ Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, 1:332.

¹⁹ Van Ess, Theologie und Gesellschaft, 1:62.

²⁰ Ephrat, A Learned Society in a Period of Transition, 40.

²¹ H. Lammens, Islām: Beliefs and Institutions, trans., Sir E. Denison Ross (New York: E.P. Dutton and Co., [1926]), 79.

INTRODUCTION

munity articulated an image of the Prophet as an act of self-definition, Uri Rubin refers to the large collections that appeared in this century as "canonical hadīth compilations" that defined orthodox Muslim stances. They "served as the venue for the authoritative formulation of an Islamic sense of spiritual and legal identity in Umayyad and early Abbasid times...."²² Rubin recognizes the intimate connection between these canonical works and the question of communal identity, but his focus on Islamic origins prevents him from pursuing this discussion further.

Other scholars concerned with Islamic historiography and the development of the hadīth tradition have stressed that the Ṣaḥīḥayn and their authors represent the culmination of hadīth study. In his Arabic Historical Thought in the Classical Age, Tarif Khalidi states that in Muslim's time "Hadith had reached its quantitative limits and spelled out its method."²³ "Bukhārī and Muslim," he adds, "gave definitive shape to Hadith."²⁴ Both Rubin and Khalidi focus on the writing of the Ṣaḥīḥayn as one of the seals of orthodoxy, paying little attention to their role as a medium through which an ongoing process of institutional authorization and communal identification would take place.

Scholarship on the continuing development of hadīth literature after the appearance of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections has granted more space to discussions of the canon. It has not, however, followed the promising lead of Goldziher's work. In his Islam: The View from the Edge, Richard Bulliet refers to the canonical hadīth collections as a watershed event in the Muslim community's transition from the oral transmission of the Prophet's sunna to limiting it to specific texts. He prefers to identify the formation of the canon with this transition rather than with the genesis of the Ṣahīḥayn themselves. Following Goldziher, he says that the "evolution of hadith culminated in the general acceptance, by the thirteenth century, of six books of sound traditions as canonical, as least for the Sunni majority of the population."²⁵ In his valuable discussion of the development of ḥadīth literature in the The Cambridge History of Arabic Literature, Muhammad Abd al-Rauf straddles the two opinions: that the special recognition of the Ṣahīḥayn followed on the

²² Rubin, The Eye of the Beholder, 224.

²³ Tarif Khalidi, Arabic Historical Thought in the Classical Period (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994), 43.

²⁴ Khalidi, Arabic Historical Thought, 59.

²⁵ Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge, 19.

heels of their compilation, and that their final canonization took place in the seventh/thirteenth century. Thus Abd al-Rauf describes how al-Bukhārī's book in particular was "almost immediately and universally acknowledged as the most authentic work in view of the author's stringent authentication requirements."²⁶ But after the famous systematizer of the ḥadīth sciences, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ (d. 643/1245), announced that the Muslim community (umma) had decisively acknowledged the Ṣaḥūḥayn's unquestioned authenticity, "no more criticism [of the two books] could be tolerated..."²⁷

Modern Muslim scholarship on this question resembles its Western counterpart in its failure to answer questions about the canon's emergence and functions. This is largely due to the polemic motivation of Muslim authors addressing this subject. Khalīl Mullā Khāțir's Makānat al-Sahīhayn (The Place of the Ṣaḥīḥayn) (1994)²⁸ proceeds from an orthodox Sunni standpoint and seeks to defend al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's work from opponents who criticize them. The Ibadī Sa'īd b. Mabrūk al-Qanūbī's ingenious al-Sayf al-hādd fī al-radd 'alā man akhadha bi-hadīth al-āhād fī masā'il al-i'tiqād (The Incisive Sword: A Refutation of Those Who Use Ahad Hadiths in Questions of Dogma)²⁹ (1997-8) and the Twelver Shiite Mohammad Sādeq Najmī's Sayrī dar Sahīhayn: sayr va barrasī dar do ketāb-e mohemm va madrak-e ahl-e sonnat (A Voyage through the Sahīhayn: An Exploration and Examination of two Important Books and Sources of the Sunnis) (2001)³⁰ approach the issue of the Sahīhayn from non-Sunni stances, seeking to expose what they consider undue Sunni reverence for the two works. Although they offer few analytical insights into the function or formation of the canon, the invaluable citations found in these three books guide the reader to pertinent primary sources. These Arabic- and Persian-language secondary sources are thus indispensable aids in studying the Sahīhayn. Without them, ²⁶ Muhammad Abd al-Rauf, "Hadīth Literature—I: The Development of the Science of hadīth," in The Cambridge History of Arabic Literature: Arabic Literature until the End of the Umayyad Period, eds. A.F.L. Beeston et al. (London: Cambridge University Press, 1983), 275.

²⁷ Abd al-Rauf, "Hadīth Literature," 285.

²⁸ Khalīl Mullā Khāţir, Makānat al-Ṣaḥāḥayn (Jeddah: Dār al-Qibla li'l-Thaqāfa al-Islāmiyya, 1415/1994).

²⁹ Sa'īd b. Mabrūk al-Qanūbī, al-Sayf al-hādd fī al-radd 'alā man akhadha bi-hadīth alāhād fī masā'il al-i'tiqād, 3rd ed. (Oman: n.p., 1418/[1997-8]).

³⁰ Mohammad Şādeq Najmī, Sayrī dar Şahīhayn: sayr va barrasī dar do ketāb-e mohemm va madrak-e ahl-sonnat ([Tehran]: Daftar-e Enteshārāt-e Eslāmī, 1379/[2001]).

navigating the vast expanses of the Islamic intellectual heritage would be nearly impossible.

Addressing the Sahīhayn as a Canon

Scholars of Islamic history have been unsuccessful in addressing questions concerning the hadith canon in great part because they have not sufficiently articulated what precisely canons are, why they form and how they function. As Goldziher sensed, canons are not agents that simply leap onto the stage of history. They are created by communities in acts of authorization and self-definition because they meet certain pressing needs for their audiences. Studies on canons have proven that they are complicated creatures, whose emergence and functions must be examined as a network of interactions between a community's needs, its conceptions of authority, and the nature and uses of specific texts. Goldziher realized that to understand the canonical place of the Sahihavn, one must appreciate their functions. In the absence of clear expectations about what these could be, however, Goldziher's efforts to explore the canon could not move beyond a few initial observations. A more comprehensive discussion of the emergence and function of the Sahīhayn canon requires a sensitivity to issues of communal identity, institutional authority and the way in which texts can serve as mediums for their expression.

Conversely, some scholars have cultivated an acute sensitivity to employing the term 'canon' when treating the Ṣaḥāḥayn and the other authoritative ḥadīth collections. The term 'canon' is so culturally loaded and so inevitably evokes the Biblical tradition that a commendable commitment to distinguishing the Islamic tradition from the Occidental has led some to deny that any ḥadīth canon existed. Our ability to discuss the history of the Ṣaḥāḥayn in the language of canons and canonicity therefore requires an investigation of these fecund terms and their historical application.

Note on the Sources and Approaches of this Study

The study of canonization is more a study of historical perceptions than of historical reality. Although al-Bukhārī, Muslim and their Ṣaḥīḥs are the centerpieces of this story, they are not its primary actors. It is the community that received, used and responded to their legacies that forged the Sahāhayn canon. Establishing the background, context and historical realities of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's careers is certainly essential for appreciating the genesis of the canon. This study, however, is not about the Sahīhayn as much as it is about the drama that unfolded around them. This interest in reception and perception spares us a prolonged focus on the questions of textual authenticity that so concern scholars of early Islamic history. As we will see in Chapter Three, surviving textual sources from the late third/ninth and early fourth/tenth centuries provide multi-dimensional and generally reliable biographies of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. Sources from this period also leave little doubt that the texts of the Sahīhayn reached complete, although perhaps not polished, forms during their respective authors' lives.³¹ For us, however, the true significance of the details of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's lives lies in their roles as stimuli for later Muslims looking back at these two personages.

Of course, our interest in reception and perception does not in any way relieve us of our duty to assume a historical critical approach to our source material. Because the Sahīhayn canon is one of the most salient features of Sunni orthodoxy, it has attracted a tremendous amount of sacralizing attention from the Sunni tradition. According to the historical critical method, we will exert all efforts to rely on multiple sources of close temporal proximity to the subjects they address, relying on isolated or later works only if the probability of their accuracy outweighs that of contrivance. If a source does not meet the requirements of the Principle of Contextual Credibility, which dictates that a source must conform to the known features of its historical context, and the Principle of Dissimilarity, which states that a non-'orthodox' account probably precedes an 'orthodox' one, then we must treat it as suspect from a historical critical standpoint.³² Such material, however, remains tremendously valuable in charting the development of historical perceptions about al-Bukhārī and Muslim.

The Ṣaḥīḥayn are arguably the most famous and prominent books in the Sunni tradition after the Qur'ān, and al-Bukhārī and Muslim are titanic figures in Islamic civilization. We must thus cast a very wide ³¹ See Appendix II.

³² For a valuable and very concise discussion of these important principles of the historical critical method, see Bart D. Ehrman, The New Testament: A Historical Introduction to the Early Christian Writings, 2nd ed. (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2000), 202–7.

INTRODUCTION

net in the sources we examine for tracing the historical development of the canon. Narrative sources such as biographical dictionaries and local histories provide invaluable source material. The $T\bar{a}r\bar{k}h$ Baghdād of al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī (d. 463/1071), the Muntazam fī tārīkh al-umam wa al-mulūk of Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200), the Siyar a'lām al-nubalā' and Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz of Shams al-Dīn al-Dhahabī (d. 748/1348), and the Daw' al-lāmi'li-ahl al-qarn al-tāsi' of al-Sakhāwī (d. 902/1497) exemplify these two genres. In addition to providing essential biographical data, these works also record the manner in which al-Bukhārī, Muslim and their books were perceived in different periods and localities.

Normative sources from the various genres of hadīth literature provide another major source for the history of the canon. Hadīth collections that postdate the Sahīhayn, such as al-Baghawī's (d. 516/1122) Masābīh al-sunna; works on the technical science of hadīth collection and criticism, such as al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī's Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth and Ibn Hajar al-'Asqalānī's (d. 852/1449) al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Salāh; dictionaries of hadīth transmitters such as al-Khalīlī's (d. 446/1054) al-Irshād fī ma'rifat 'ulamā' al-hadīth, and commentaries on the Sahīhayn such as Ibn Hajar's Fath al-bari provide the bulk of data on the manner in which the Sahīhayn were studied and used by the Sunni community. We must also draw from a wider range of normative sources. Works on jurisprudence, such as the Kitāb al-mabsūt of al-Sarakhsī (d. ca. 490/1096); legal theory, such as the Kitāb al-burhān of al-Juwaynī (d. 478/1085); mysticism, like the 'Awārif al-ma'ārif of 'Umar al-Suhrawardī (d. 632/1234), and sectarian literature, such as 'Abd al-Jalīl Abū al-Husavn Oazvīnī's (fl. 560/1162) Ketāb-e nagd, allow crucial glimpses into the various usages of the Sahīhayn beyond the limited realm of hadīth study.

As our investigation reaches the modern period, even the most recent Muslim scholarship can serve as a source for grasping the nature and function of the Ṣaḥāḥayn canon. Furthermore, the modern period furnishes oral sources such as lectures from scholarly centers like Cairo's al-Azhar University, or the recorded lectures of Salafī *shaykh*s like Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī (d. 1999 CE).

Historians can work only with what history has preserved for them. Like all other historical data, the sources on the origins, development and function of the Sahihayn canon have been subject to the vicissitudes of time and fortune. The manner in which we collect and interpret such data is similarly prisoner to our own interpretive choices and biases. Yet we must have answers, whatever they may be, and for the period since the two books emerged as a canon their very prominence in Islamic civilization has preserved a plethora of textual sources in manuscript or published form. For the occasionally disreputable period of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's pre-canonical gestation, we have only what Muslim scholars dutifully preserved for us. That we can even attempt a history of this early period is a testament to the integrity of those tireless 'seekers of knowledge (talabat al-'ilm)' who for centuries led pack animals weighed down with notebooks from teacher to teacher along the dusty road between Baghdad and Khurāsān.

Problems in Approaches

In the coming chapters, our discussion of the Sahīhayn canon will hinge on themes such as 'standards' and 'convention' and will ultimately involve the routinization of the Prophet's charismatic authority. Although not consciously driven by his theory, this study is perhaps irretrievably Weberian. Readers will also note that it is imbued with the corporeal language and organic idiom intimated by British scholars like E.B. Tylor (d. 1917) and J.G. Frazer (d. 1941), who described the global phenomenon of religion as a stage in the maturation of human consciousness. In our very biological history of the Sahīhayn canon, 'needs' will be 'felt' and 'met.' Sunnism will 'mature,' and 'strains' within it will 'develop.' The canon 'emerges' and fulfils certain 'functions.' Using such phrasal representations to move from one thought to another or from particulars to the general betrays certain assumptions about the nature of the hadith canon and Islamic civilization. Are we justified in treating a human society or a faith tradition as organisms that are born and mature until they attain some state of advancement?

I believe this approach serves us faithfully in a study of Islamic intellectual history. Inquiring into the history of the Sahīhayn is a natural reaction to their conspicuous prominence in Sunni Islam today. Yet the fact is that Islam existed as a religion and faith tradition before al-Bukhārī and Muslim and flourished for some time after them without paying any remarkable attention to the two books or their authors. We are thus inevitably faced with a question of change, of growth or emergence. Like the compound of Sunni orthodoxy itself, the canon was not then and is now. Faced with such a stark instance of transformation or change, examining the canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as a linear process of maturation and subsequent tensions seems reasonable or even inevitable.

INTRODUCTION

Perhaps the most dangerous pitfall of employing a biological metaphor for the movement of history is the ambiguous status granted to human agency by such an approach. One could describe a 'canon emerging' without identifying the specific individuals or class who promulgated it. One could mention a community 'feeling needs' without stipulating exactly how those needs were expressed. We will try to prevent these problems by adhering closely to textual sources and emphasizing the role of individuals in the development of the canon. We will rely on historical actors to explain their own actions either directly through their own words or indirectly by reading their works critically against an established context. We will avoid attributing individuals' actions to broader political, cultural or economic forces unless there is explicit evidence for such a link. Certainly, we may speculate about the manner in which political context or the allocation of resources affected the canon, but we cannot definitively explain the canon as the direct result of these factors without some discernable evidence. In this way, we hope to avoid what Peter Brown describes as "drawing the net of explanation too tightly" around participants in the Islamic scholarly tradition.33

³³ Peter Brown, The Making of Late Antiquity (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1987), 4.

THE STUDY OF CANONS AND CANONIZATION

Introduction

What happens when a book begins to be read as a classic or part of a selection of classics? A sentence or turn of phrase, previously bereft of significance beyond its literal import, is suddenly pregnant with meaning and worthy of exegesis. What happens if a collection of texts is deemed an authentic conduit to God's will or legal right? Its very ontological status is raised, and minute inconsistencies within the texts themselves or challenges from outside sources can undermine the very definition of truth to which a community adheres. In neither of these cases are the texts themselves agents. Rather it is their body of readers who, out of a need for exemplary literature or select writings through which to approach the divine, make the books more than the sum of their pages, endowing them with a new authority and significance. This elevation binds these texts, their writers and audiences together in a new authoritative relationship. It creates a new universe of possible meanings and functions for these valorized works. This reverence or appreciation for the texts draws lines around the audience, including, excluding and defining the community. At this nexus of text, authority and communal identity, a canon has been formed.

Regardless of their specific qualities, canons can be studied as a unified phenomenon that appears when communities authorize certain texts, radically changing the ways they are interpreted and used. The Greek work kanòn originally meant 'measuring stick' or a tool used to guarantee straightness, thus connoting the notion of a standard. Aristotle employed the term in the context of the virtuous man, whom he considered to be 'the standard of good measure' in ethics.¹

¹ Jan Gorak, The Making of the Modern Canon: Genesis and Crisis of a Literary Idea (London: Athlone, 1991); 10, 17. For a brief history of the word 'canon,' see Bruce M. Metzger, The Canon of the New Testament (Oxford: Clarendon, 1997), 289–93. For a more engaged discussion of this historical definition, see Gerald T. Sheppard's "Canon," The Encyclopedia of Religion, ed. Mircea Eliade (New York: MacMillan, 1987), 3:62–9.

Epicurus would consider logic to be the 'kanòn' of true knowledge.²

In the early Christian tradition Paul used the word to refer to the 'straight path' of correct belief, and 'canon' soon acquired the meaning of the 'list' of sacred writings that guided the believer. Over the centuries the term 'canon' has thus come to indicate a set of authoritative or exemplary texts within a specific community of readers. Fierce debates have raged of late and much ink has been spilled in efforts to provide more exact definitions for the word.³ Its true and global import, however, is best grasped not through restricting it to an exhaustive definition, but rather through viewing its reflections in the myriad studies on canons and canonicity produced by scholars from different fields. By examining the variety of canons, their commonalities, and efforts to distill the essence of canonicity, we can identify common historical processes and acquire conceptual tools useful for understanding the emergence and function of the hadīth canon in Islam.

Canons in Context and the Emergence of Canon Studies

Canons have emerged in scriptural, literary or legal contexts, and it was in these fields that the study of canons and canonization began.⁴ In the 1970s, however, the various strands of critical theory and postmodernism penetrated these arenas and presented a common challenge to the master narrative of canons and objective criteria. Although there remains scholarship devoted to religious, literary and legal canons, these fields have increasingly adopted the common language of hermeneutic studies in a joint investigation of the "politics of interpretation." Leading experts such as Frank Kermode and Stanley Fish have exemplified this development, as they straddle Biblical studies and literature, and literature and law, respectively. This unified field of canon studies has matured sufficiently to produce a series of reflections on debates over the notion and value of canons, and works such as Jan Gorak's The Making of the Modern Canon (1991) have traced the Western concept of 'the canon' from its origins in classical Greece until modern times.

² Harry Gamble, The New Testament Canon (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1985), 15.

³ In his study of the canon as a tool of social control, M.B. Ter Borg, for example, tries to distill the "primordial definition" for the concept of canon, concluding that its essence is that of an "objectified standard rule"; see M.B. Ter Borg, "Canon and Social Control," in Canonization and Decanonization, ed. A. van der Kooij and K. van der Toorn (Leiden: Brill, 1998), 411–2; see also Jonathan Z. Smith's "Canons, Catalogues and Classics" in the same volume, pgs. 299–303.

⁴ Scholars such as Jonathan Z. Smith, H.J. Adriaanse and Jan Assmann have sought to remind audiences that it is the theological usage of canon that lies at the root of all modern discussion of the issues; see Jonathan Z. Smith, "Canons, Catalogues and Classics," and H.J. Adriaanse's "Canonicity and the Problem of the Golden Mean" in Canonization and Decanonization; 295, 316.

An early attempt to study canonization as a phenomenon in religious traditions was Allan Menzies's prescient 1897 article "The Natural History of Sacred Books: Some Suggestions for a Preface to the History of the Canon of Scripture." Menzies ultimately aims at applauding the Christian Biblical canon for its unique excellence and assumes an evolution of religion from primitive to advanced, but his work nonetheless possesses remarkable foresight. Indeed, Menzies's description of the raw emotive forces that build canons beautifully encapsulates the place of hadīth in the Muslim worldview. These forces are:

books which place the believer where the first disciples stood, which enable him to listen to the Master's words, and overhear perhaps even his secret thoughts and prayers, so that he feels for himself what that spirit was which reached the Master from the upper region and passed forth from him to other men....⁵

According to Menzies, the two essential conditions for the formation of any scriptural canon are, first, "the existence of books which the nation is prepared to recognize as the norm of its religion," and, second, "the existence of a religious authority of sufficient power to prescribe to the nation what books it shall receive as that norm."⁶

Menzies's approach to canons and canonization touches on themes central to later examinations of the issue. Even at this early stage of theorizing the canon, we see the importance of communal identity (Menzies's "nation"), authority and a standard, or norm, for truth and authenticity in a religious community. His stipulation of an extant and sufficiently powerful "religious authority" to declare and enforce the canon is compelling, raising questions about the potential forms such authorities could assume across various communities.

Further study of scriptural canons owes a great deal to the investigation of the formation of the Old and New Testament canons, which began in earnest in Germany during the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries. The rival works of Theodor Zahn (1888–92) and Adolf Harnak (1889) were formative in this field. In the twentieth century, Hans von Campenhausen's Die Entstehung der christlichen Bibel (1969) is arguably the most frequently cited, although it has been surpassed by Bruce Metzger's definitive The Canon of the New Testament (1987). In 1977 a series of studies on the Old Testament, most notably Joseph Blenkinsopp's Prophecy and Canon: A Contribution to the Study of Jewish Origins, focused on the canonization of the Hebrew Bible but bound it to the universal issues of communal conflict and identity, thus providing an apt point of transition into the study of the canon as a phenomenon.

⁵ Allan Menzies, "The Natural History of Sacred Books: Some Suggestions for a Preface to the History of the Canon of Scripture," American Journal of Theology 1 (1897): 83.

⁶ Állan Menzies, "The Natural History of Sacred Books," 90.

The approach to canon qua canon owes much to the field of literary criticism. Classical Greek literary and aesthetic criticism originated in the book Kanon of the mimetic artist Polycletus (fl. 450 BCE). Although merely a manual on how to most perfectly mimic the human form in sculpture, Polycletus's work was appreciated by later classical figures in ways the author never intended, with Pliny the Elder (d. 79 CE) stating that Polycletus's exemplary statues were the "canon" or standard for artistic expression.⁷ Although he never uses the Greek term kanon in his Poetics, Aristotle presents aesthetic criteria for the literary genres of epic and tragedy.8 Each genre culminates in an unsurpassable masterpiece, such as the Homeric epics or Sophocles's tragedy Oedipus Rex, which embody the standards of excellence for their respective genres. Implied is the notion that there exists a set of these exemplary works, a collection that one might term a canon. Indeed, later Hellenistic scholars applied the term to a group of books whose high level of language made them worthy of imitation.9 In the classical Greek and Hellenistic worlds, the term canon thus communicated the notion of 'model' or 'exemplum,' what Gorak calls "a set of unsurpassable masterpieces to be studied and copied by all later practitioners in the field."10

Since the advent of the novel and the bourgeois tragedy in the eighteenth century, the fixed canon of classical literature has dissolved amid debate over which works of literature merit the title of master-

⁷ Jan Gorak, The Making of the Modern Canon, 11.

⁸ Aristotle uses the term in his Nicomachean Ethics in the context of the good person as "a canon and measure' of the truth." See Metzger, The Canon of the New Testament, 289.

⁹ Metzger, 289.

¹⁰ Gorak, The Making of the Modern Canon, 11.

piece and who possesses the authority to pronounce them canonical. Following the post-modernist assault on the cultural systems and normative assumptions that framed both scriptural and literary canons, the study of canons and canonization as phenomena has progressed continuously during the last quarter century. Much of this discussion has centered on the proper place of a literary or cultural canon within a modern pluralistic society, an issue that Jan Gorak has termed "the canon debate."

The masterful literary and hermeneutic scholarship of Frank Kermode, exemplified in his book The Classic (1975), made the daring and lasting association between the notion of the literary classic, a shared historical vision, and empire.¹¹ For Kermode the exemplification of pre-modern canonical literature was Virgil's Aeneid, which embodied both the Catholic Church's and European rulers' dream of a Holy Roman Empire.¹² Not only was a canon an expression of a shared worldview, it could entail the imperial extension and maintenance of that vision. In 1979, Kermode adopted a unified approach to literary and scriptural canon with his hermeneutic study The Genesis of Secrecy: On the Interpretation of Narrative and his article "Institutional Control of Interpretation."¹³ These studies linked the canon more closely to notions of hermeneutic authority, control and the institutional constraint of a scholarly or priestly class.

The 1970s and 1980s saw the publication of a wave of comprehensive studies on the formation of the Biblical canon, with a renewed emphasis on the role of the canon in forging identity. In his numerous books and articles, James Sanders has exerted a strong influence on canon studies, adopting the term 'canonical criticism' for the study of the "function of authoritative traditions in the believing communities...."¹⁴ Principally aimed at undoing the historical-critical obsession with finding the original sitz im leben of Biblical texts, his interests lie in the way that the needs of a community shape and define a canonical corpus over time. Sanders focuses on the "period of intense canonical process" between the crafting of a text by its author and the stabilization of a ¹¹ See Frank Kermode, The Classic (New York: Viking Press, 1975), 23 and 28.

¹² Jan Gorak, Critic of Crisis: A Study of Frank Kermode (Columbia, Missouri: University of Missouri Press, 1987), 62.

¹³ See Kermode, "Institutional Control of Interpretation," Salmagundi 43 (1979): 72–87.

¹⁴ James A. Sanders, Canon and Community (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1984), 24.

discrete canon. "It was in such periods that the faithful of believing communities...shaped what they received in ways that rendered it most meaningful and valuable for them."¹⁵ Due to very real and pressing needs that appear in this period, a society's conception of the authority a text could acquire leaps forward. For Sanders, it is not merely the canonization of a text that changes its ontological status; rather, the pressing needs and dynamics of a faith community lead to a leap in that society's conception of what authority a text can attain.¹⁶ Canonization is therefore not simply a ritual of raising a text's ontological status that a community can perform at any time. Rather, communities undergo certain processes in which they acquire the imaginative ability to canonize. These ideas were further developed in Kermode's article "The Canon" (1987) in *The Literary Guide to the Bible.*¹⁷

Canon studies has also generated a number of studies in comparative religion. Miriam Levering's Rethinking Scripture: Essays from a Comparative Perspective (1989) tackled issues of canonization and authority in a wide range of scriptural traditions. This collection contains a chapter by Kendall W. Folkert entitled "The 'Canons' of 'Scripture'" in which the author presents a novel distinction between the scriptural power of a canonical text and its actual physical presence in ritual. Gerald T. Sheppard's influential entry on "Canon" in the Encyclopedia of Religion distributes this loaded term out along a continuum between two poles that he terms Canon 1 and Canon 2.¹⁸ The former represents the notion of canon as a criterion between truth and falsehood, inspired and uninspired. Canon 2 manifests itself as a list, catalog or "fixed collection, and/or standardized text."¹⁹ Sheppard proposes these two denotations of canon as "an illuminating heuristic device" for examining the textual traditions of different faiths.²⁰

One of religious studies' most influential contributions came in 1977 when Jonathan Z. Smith presented a definition of the canon as ¹⁵ Sanders, 30.

¹⁶ Sanders, 32–33.

¹⁷ See Kermode, "The Canon," in The Literary Guide to the Bible, eds. Robert Alter and Frank Kermode (Cambridge: Belknap Press, 1987).

¹⁸ Folkert uses the same distinction with no reference to Sheppard in his "The 'Canons' of 'Scripture,'" published in 1989; see "The 'Canons' of 'Scripture,'" in Rethinking Scripture, ed. Miriam Levering (Albany: State University of New York Press, 1989), 173.

¹⁹ Sheppard, "Canon," 66.

²⁰ Sheppard, 64.

a religious phenomenon partially based on several sub-Saharan African religious traditions. Smith claims that canonization is "one form of a basic cultural process of limitation and of overcoming that limitation through ingenuity."²¹ That ingenuity, he proposes, is the hermeneutic process by which a religious community applies the tradition delineated by the canon to new problems. "A canon," Smith states, "cannot exist without a tradition and an interpreter."²² Through canonizing a set of texts, a tradition can deposit religious authority in a manageable and durable form. Later interpreters of that tradition can then bring the authority embodied in this canon to bear on new issues.

A landmark issue of Critical Inquiry in the early 1980s, developed into a book in 1984, brought canon studies fully under the rubric of critical theory and the postmodernist focus on the politics of expression. This volume pursued the structural study of the canon and its relationship to power and communal identity by bringing together articles on literature, scripture, music and theory. Its editor, Robert von Hallberg, built on the recognition that canons had become commonly understood as expressions of social and political power. Referring to questions of aesthetics, he states that "the question is not whether or not canons serve political functions, but rather how fully their potential functions account for their origins and limit their utility."23 The most striking chapter in this collection is Gerald Burns's "Canon and Power in the Hebrew Scriptures," in which Burns addresses the distinction between scripture and canon. Against the previous supposition that scripture is authoritative and open to additional texts whereas a canon is authoritative but closed. Burns asserts that the defining characteristic of canons is their power. Canons are not simply inspired or authentic collections of texts, they are "binding on a group of people."²⁴ Burns goes on to link this powerful notion of the canon as binding to the act of a public reading of the text. He recalls the story of the discovery of Deuteronomy in 2 Kings. Circa 621 BCE, a Jewish priest finds this bound revelation from God in the Temple and brings it to King Josiah, who, after rending his clothes in awe, orders the new text read ²¹ Jonathan Z. Smith, "Sacred Persistence: Toward a Redescription of Canon," in Imagining Religion (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1982), 52.

²² Smith, "Sacred Persistence," 49.

²³ Robert von Hallberg, "Introduction," in Canons, ed. Robert von Hallberg (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1984), 2–3.

²⁴ Gerald L. Burns, "Canon and Power in the Hebrew Scriptures," in Canons, 67.

to the people.²⁵ Burns adds that Ezra was also commanded to read the Torah to his people in public places as part of his reconstruction of the Jewish community in Palestine.²⁶ For Burns, the Biblical canon is primarily textual power, and the binding act of canonization takes place through an authoritative public reading of the text in front of a populace it compels to heed and obey.

The 1980s and 1990s witnessed the publication of a series of books and articles that turned these new theoretical models back on scriptural and literary traditions. Edward Said's The World, the Text and the Critic (1983) and Lilian S. Robinson's essay "Treason our Text: Feminist Challenges to the Literary Canon"²⁷ (1985), represent attacks on the concept of a literary canon from the two dominant trends of feminist and postcolonial studies. A conference held at the Leiden Institute for the Study of Religion in 1997 produced a massive volume entitled Canonization and Decanonization, which includes essays addressing the phenomenon of scriptural canonization and also examining the canonical traditions of every major religion. In another collection, Guy Stroumsa's fascinating essay "The Body of Truth and its Measures: New Testament Canonization in Context" emphasizes that "[c]anonization processes should be understood as part and parcel of religious and social processes of identification."28 This article seconds Metzger's emphasis on the role of the Gnostic and Montanist movements in the articulation of the New Testament but also points out the effect that Christian-Jewish polemics had on the formation of these two communities. Christians and Jews each claimed to possess the correct interpretation of the Hebrew Bible, the former with the oral teachings of Christ and the latter through the hermeneutic tradition descending from the Oral Torah revealed to Moses at Sinai. That the New Testament's codification of Christ's words and the Mishna's setting down the interpretive methods of the Rabbis found written expression in the late second or early third centuries CE suggests that both communities were canonizing "secondary" holy texts. These were competing keys to understanding and unlocking a shared ²⁵ Burns, 69–70.

²⁶ Burns, 87.

²⁷ See Lilian S. Robinson, "Treason our Text: Feminist Challenges to the Literary Canon," in The New Feminist Criticism: Essays on Women, Literature, and Theory, ed. Elaine Showalter (New York: Pantheon, 1985).

²⁸ See Guy G. Stroumsa, "The Body of Truth and its Measures: New Testament Canonization in Context," in Gnosisforschung und Religionsgeschichte, eds. Holger Preissler and Hubert Seiweret (Marburg: Diagonal-Verlag, 1994), 314.

legacy.²⁹ In this strongly polemical context, Stroumsa's discussion of the Greek expression "kanòn tès alètheias," the 'rule of revealed truth,' as used by Irenaeus in his writings against what he considered heretical Christian sects, illustrates a powerfully normative function of "canon" as the criterion distinguishing truth from heresy.³⁰

Stroumsa also highlights the distinction between cultural and religious canons. The cementing of the New Testament as a religious canon in the late second century proved a very separate event from its emergence in the fourth century as a cultural canon, or selection of classics to be studied as part of the curriculum of an educated man in the Roman world.³¹ The notion of the scriptures functioning as a cultural as well as a religious canon highlights the importance of Kermode's discussion of "the classic" and its power to extend a communal vision through the imperial gravity that 'proper taste' and 'proper edification' exert in a society.

The study of canons in law has proven much more insular than its literary or scriptural counterparts. Recently, however, scholars such as Stanley Fish have brought legal canons under the aegis of canon studies. Lenora Ledwon's collection Law and Literature: Text and Theory (1996) is one of the most comprehensive efforts to join these two fields. More recently, J.M. Balkin and Sanford Levinson produced a collection of essays addressing specific questions of canonicity and law. Although these essays deal with topics of an explicitly legal nature, the editors' introduction articulates a visionary and overarching aim for canon studies: "[t]he study of canons and canonicity is the very key to the secrets of a culture and its characteristic modes of thought."32 They echo truisms of canon studies such as the important influence of ferment and change on the visibility of a canon, but also explore topics unplumbed by other scholars. Balkin and Levinson introduce the idea of "deep canonicity," or those canonical modes of thinking, master narratives and canonical examples that form the background for a culture's process of expression and argument.³³ Most importantly, however, Balkin and Levinson are perhaps the first scholars since Sanders stressed the ²⁹ Stroumsa, 315–16; see also Sanders, 14.

³⁰ Stroumsa, 314. See also Elaine Pagels, Beyond Belief: The Secret Gospel of Thomas (New York: Vintage Books, 2003), 114–141.

³¹ Stroumsa, 308.

³² J.M. Balkin and Sanford Levinson, eds., Legal Canons (New York: New York University Press, 2000), 4.

³³ Balkin and Levinson, 15–18.

"multivalency" of canonical texts to explain how canons can function differently depending on the audience that they are supposed to guide or bind together.³⁴

The study of legal canons has produced some of the most articulate and incisive observations about the phenomenon of the canon in general. Stanley Fish's 1993 article "Not for an Age but for All Time: Canons and Postmodernism" identifies the intersection of legal and literary canons in the realm of high culture, where both fields stress the "valorization of the life of the mind."35 Fish stresses the probative force possessed by canonical works. Addressing a case in which a judge rejected a proposed law banning all forms of racist expression because it would prohibit teaching Shakespeare's The Merchant of Venice, Fish notes that "if Shakespeare is on your side in an argument, the argument is over." Much like Irenaeus's kanon as 'rule of revealed truth,' the function of the canon, Fish concludes, is not to encourage thought, but rather to stop it. His explanation of Shakespeare's compelling power harks back to Aristotle's Poetics, for the bard is "the very canon-role, norm, measure, standard-in relation to which canonicity is established." A text becomes canonical when a community recognizes that it is the thing to which "all workers in the enterprise," or, in Aristotle's case, the genre, aspire.³⁶

A new standard in canon studies was set by Moshe Halbertal's 1997 People of the Book: Canon, Meaning and Authority. In this work, Halbertal uses the Judaic tradition as a case study to synthesize applicable theory on the canon as it pertains to both the Hebrew Bible and the phenomenological study of canonization. In doing so, Halbertal draws on fields ranging from jurisprudence to the philosophy of language. Unlike previous scholars, he constructs a revolutionary yet practical framework for studying the relationship between canonization, authority and identity in what he terms "text centered communities," whose members are bound together through a common commitment to canonical texts. Halbertal explains that a text centered community exhibits several characteristics. First, expertise in the canonical text is a source of authority and prestige within the community. Second, study of the canonical text is itself an act of devotion urged upon all. Third, the text becomes "a locus of ³⁴ Balkin and Levinson, 8.

³⁵ Stanley Fish, "Not for an Age but for All Time: Canons and Postmodernism," Journal of Legal Education 43 (1993): 13.

³⁶ Fish, 12–15.

religious experience," with those who pore over or imbibe it engaging in "a religious drama in and of itself." Finally, the canonical text defines the boundaries of the community. It is the only recourse and source for the justification of ideas.³⁷ "In a text centered community the boundaries of a community are shaped in relation to loyalty to a shared canon," asserts Halbertal.³⁸

Another important concept explored by Halbertal is the notion of the formative text, a type of canonical text that serves as a template for the development of expression and interpretation within a community. Beyond simply being a classic worthy of study and imitation, "[a] formative text is one in which progress in the field [, in this case, of understanding revealed law] is made through interpretation of that text."³⁹

Halbertal also proposes a principle by which the vague and intangible notion of canonicity can be gauged. Drawing on literary hermeneutics, Halbertal employs the well-traveled Principle of Charity (a concept whose development and use will be traced later in this chapter), stipulating that the canonicity of a scripture can be measured by the charity with which it is read and interpreted. If a community reads a text in the best possible light, attempting to minimize internal contradictions and reconcile notions of truth established by the text with those evident in the outside world, their reading is charitable and the text's canonicity secure. Readings that either highlight problems within the text or challenge its probity by preferring external truths, such as those provided by modern science, pose threats to the canon and indicate a decrease in the text's holiness.

Halbertal's work thus constitutes a new stage of canon studies. His promulgation of discrete definitions and conceptual tools for the study of canons in text centered communities is a corollary to Menzies' prescient if parochial work a century earlier. Both scholars grasp that canonization in religious communities is an irrepressible reality and that our understanding of canonization is nothing more than a tool for understanding "the secrets of a culture and its characteristic modes of thought."⁴⁰ As von Hallberg noted, it has been widely acknowledged ³⁷ Moshe Halbertal, People of the Book (London: Harvard University Press, 1997), 7–8.

³⁸ Halbertal, 129.

³⁹ Halbertal, 94.

⁴⁰ Balkin and Levinson, 4.

that sacred canons are intimately bound to the profanity of self-identification and authority. Given this reality, our ability to increase our knowledge of what the great Muslim scholar Abū Hāmid al-Ghazālī (d. 505/1111) called "the truth of things (haqā iq al-umūr)" hinges on our mastery of a lexicon and conceptual framework capable of advancing our understanding of how canons are informed by and govern historical processes.

Canon Studies and the Islamic Tradition

The study of canons emerged in the West. With the exception of more global efforts such as those of Kendall Folkert and Jonathan Z. Smith, inquiries into canons and canonization have often been directly tied to the religious or literary aspects of Christianity or Judaism. To what extent can the history of certain authoritative hadīth collections in Islamic civilization be read in this light? Scholars of Islam, Islamic civilization and its varied genres of literary and religious expression have been cautious in applying approaches developed in the Occidental tradition to their corresponding fields in Islamic studies. One might argue that scholars of other civilizations should not blunder into seeing canons where none exist or assume that they function in the same manner as those in the West. As Folkert pointed out, Western scholars of South Asian scriptural traditions had been misrepresenting the nature and contents of the Jain canon since 1882. Not only had generations of scholars based their understanding of the Jain canon on only one primary source, their conceptualization of a canon as a discrete and complete list of texts distracted them from the fact that "it is not specific texts or scriptures" but a specific "class of knowledge" that the Jain community considers authoritative.⁴¹

Tackling the mighty task of summing up the "Muslim Canon" from late Antiquity to the modern era, Aziz al-Azmeh is thus duly cautious. Al-Azmeh confines himself to a broad discussion of how the Islamic scriptural tradition of the Qur'ān and the hadīth took shape over centuries as part of a process of communal identification. He admits that his efforts are hobbled by the primitive state of Islamic studies, which leads him to identify more questions than he answers. He concludes that the process of canonization in the Muslim tradition is "historically obscure except in some of its details."⁴²

⁴¹ John E. Cort, "Śvetāmbar Mūrtipūjak Jain Scripture," in Texts in Context: Traditional Hermeneutics in South Asia, ed. Jeffrey R. Timm (Albany: State University of New York Press, 1992), 171–2.

Two more directed forays into the study of the canon in the Islamic legal and literary worlds have been William Hanaway's article "Is there a Canon of Persian Poetry?" (1993) and Brannon Wheeler's Applying the Canon in Islam: The Authorization and Maintenance of Interpretive Reasoning in Hanafi Scholarship (1996). Hanaway believes that one of a canon's primary functions is that of a "heavy weapon to fire at the enemy as well as a means of defining the collective self."43 He thus cites the homogeneity of the courtly audience to which classical Persian poetry was addressed, and the lack of any "significant other" or "counter canon" contesting it, as evidence against the existence of a poetic canon in medieval Persia.⁴⁴ Here he echoes the argument of scholars such as Kermode, Blenkinsopp and Metzger that it was communal tension and competing identities that defined the canons of the Hebrew Bible and the New Testament.⁴⁵ Jonathan Z. Smith's inclusive definition of a religious canon proved more easily applicable to the Islamic tradition, and Brannon Wheeler employed it to understand how the Hanafi school of legal scholarship preserved the authority of the Qur'anic revelation and the Prophet's precedent through its chain of authorized legal interpreters.⁴⁶

Although extremely valuable, Hanaway's and Wheeler's studies nonetheless demonstrate the Scylla and Charybdis of forcing a conceptual framework onto the complex terrain of textual history. This framework may distract a scholar from crucial areas that might otherwise be explored, while accommodating the idiosyncrasies of the local tradition in question might neutralize a theory's efficacy. Hanaway's focus on a very narrow definition of a canon, for example, limits his inquiry to determining whether one existed or not. But canon studies

⁴² Aziz al-Azmeh, "The Muslim Canon from Late Antiquity to the Era of Modernism," in Canonization and Decanonization, 197 and 203.

 $^{^{43}}$ William L. Hanaway Jr., "Is there a Canon of Persian Poetry?" Edebiyât 4, no. 1 (1993): 3.

⁴⁴ Hanaway, 3; for a reply, see Julia Rubanovich, "Literary Canon and Patterns of Evaluation in Persian Prose on the Eve of the Mongol Invasion," Studia Iranica 32 (2003): 47–76, esp. 48.

⁴⁵ See Metzger, 90–104.

⁴⁶ See Brannon M. Wheeler, Applying the Canon in Islam: The Authorization and Maintenance of Interpretive Reasoning in Hanafi Scholarship (Albany: State University of New York Press, 1996).

has generated a diversity of approaches to the issue of canonicity and identified the manifold functions canons can serve. If, as Moshe Halbertal contends, "canon and heresy are twins,"⁴⁷ must we seek the emergence of religious canons only in times of ideological combat or sectarian strife? Is its role as a weapon in conflict an essential function of a canon? Or, as Menzies alone has argued, is the formulation of a religious canon the result of consolidation in the wake of tumult?⁴⁸

Conversely, the definition of canon that Wheeler borrows from Smith proves too broad and insubstantial when he tackles the topic of the hadīth canon. Wheeler's Applying the Canon in Islam is a fascinating study of the Islamic legal tradition, affirming von Hallberg's stance by concluding that the notion of canon in the Hanafī case "is best understood as a device to promote the pedagogical agenda of those who use certain texts to represent the authority of the past."⁴⁹ Wheeler's applied definition of canon, however, is so distanced from the physicality of a text that in his study the distinction between 'canonicity' and 'authority' sometimes collapses. In terms of Sheppard's and Folkert's distinction between Canon 1—the criterion of truth in interpretation—and Canon 2—a set of representative texts—Wheeler emphasizes the former to the latter's exclusion.

Wheeler explains that "[t]he Six Books are different attempts to delineate in 'written' form what was, at that time, considered to be the 'text' of the Sunnah." For Wheeler, however, these attempts do not merit mention as a canon. The author follows Schacht and others in emphasizing the transition exemplified by al-Shāfi'ī (d. 204/819– 20) from local schools of customary law to an exclusive reliance on Muḥammad's precedent as a source of law. He thus states that it was the entirety of the Prophet's sunna that was canonized as opposed to certain collections of his ḥadīth. Wheeler warns that "the canonical text of the Sunnah...is not to be equated with a particular book or a group of books, nor even necessarily with a written text."⁵⁰ This distinction between the incalculably vast and amorphous corpus of the Prophet's legacy and distinct collections of ḥadīth is valuable. What

⁴⁷ Halbertal, 5.

⁴⁸ Menzies, 91.

⁴⁹ Wheeler, 2. See also page 238.

⁵⁰ Wheeler, 59. Here Wheeler repeats the same oversight committed by Sheppard, whose very brief discussion of hadīth describes the Sunna, as manifested in hadīth, as providing a "normative and, therefore, 'canonical' (Canon 1) guide to Muslim exegesis." See Sheppard, 67.

lies unrealized in Wheeler's dismissal of physical tomes, however, is that those books that the community recognized as successful efforts to "delineate...the 'text' of the Sunnah" themselves became a canon (Canon 2). As we shall see in Chapter Nine, it was precisely the ability of these books to function as physical, manageable symbols of the Prophet's sunna that met a need in the Muslim community and created one of the canonical dimensions of the Sahāhayn. By choosing a definition of 'canon' easily divorced from actual physical texts and treating 'canon' on the ethereal plane of religious authority, Wheeler misses a canonical function of the Six Books.

A skeptic might argue that any Western definition of canon will adulterate our perceptions of other traditions. Should we even employ the term 'canon' in our reading of hadīth literature and its functions, or are we naïve in suggesting that they could fit into our compartments of canon and canonicity?

A more germane question might be whether popular senses of scriptural canon in the West really acknowledge the potential subtleties and varied stages of a canon's development. Bernard Weiss, for example, dismisses the existence of a hadīth canon in Sunni Islam by stating that in Islamic civilization "[God] guides no council of elders or divines in the formation of a sacred canon...."⁵¹ Indeed, at first glance the acephalous, consensus-based religious leadership in classical Islam might seem completely incomparable to the Pauline authority or council-driven first few centuries of Christian history that gave us the Biblical canon. As our view shifts, however, these images dissolve into one another. It seems evident that neither the Christian nor the Jewish scriptural canons were the products of councils or the decrees they issued. Rather, they emerged gradually through consensus, external pressures and liturgical use within these two believing communities.⁵² Indeed, the final exercise of papal power that yielded the present canon of the Catholic Bible, declaring its text infallible and making any rejection of its content anathema, did not occur until as late as the Council of Trent in 1546.53 The Biblical canon had thus existed for well over a ⁵¹ Bernard G. Weiss, The Search for God's Law: Islamic Jurisprudence in the Writings of Sayf al-Dīn al-Āmidī (Salt Lake City: University of Utah Press, 1992), 266.

⁵² There is startling agreement on this point. See Metzger, 7; Kermode, "The Canon," 601; Stroumsa, 314.

⁵³ Metzger, 246. For more on the various sessions of the Council of Trent and its decrees, see Eugene F. Rice Jr. and Anthony Grafton, The Foundations of Early Modern millennium before it reached the stringency imposed on the Qur'ānic text by the caliph 'Uthmān (d. 35/655) roughly two decades after the death of the Prophet.

Even when the long centuries of consensus on the Tanakh were sealed with a final debate over the Song of Songs and the Esther scroll, it was the tremendous scholarly reputation of Rabbi Akiva and not the edict of the Sanhedrin that gained these two books admittance into the canon. Biblical scholars like Guy Stroumsa and Blenkinsopp even reject the notion that it was the Council of Jamnia ca. 90 CE that resulted in the final closure of the Hebrew Bible.⁵⁴ Indeed, the state-sponsored promulgation of the Qur'ānic text by 'Uthmān, or state attempts (even if unsuccessful) to produce official compilations of fiscal ḥadīths or the Prophet's biography under the caliphs 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz (d. 101/720) and al-Manṣūr (d. 158/775), seem much more suited to prevalent Western ideas of a decreed canon than the truly gradual maturation of the Biblical canon.⁵⁵ Why, then, must we tie canonization so firmly to councils?

Weiss's understanding of canon formation, drawn no doubt from a belief that New Testament writings were produced and received as canonical texts ab initio, further limits his ability to conceive of a hadīth canon. He states that while the Qur'ānic text "may be regarded as a canon of sorts, the great compilations of Sunnaic hadīth material are definitely not canons." Rather, he continues, "they represent a purely individual attempt on the part of the renowned compilers to gather together what was in their judgment the most reliable of the Sunnaic material known to them."⁵⁶ One might ask if the authors of the synoptic gospels were striving to do anything more than set down on paper Europe 1460–1559 (New York: W.N. Norton and Company, 1994), 174–5; and Joseph G. Prior, The Historical Critical Method in Catholic Exegesis (Rome: Gregorian University Press, 1999), 11.

⁵⁴ Stroumsa, 308; Joseph Blenkinsopp, Prophecy and Canon (Notre Dame: University of Notre Dame Press, 1977), 3; Sanders, 10–11.

⁵⁵ Citing a report about this order that appears in Muhammad b. al-Hasan al-Shaybānī's (d. 189/805) recension of the Muvatta', Nabia Abbott states that 'Umar b. 'Abd al-'Azīz did not order the recording of the whole sunna, but only aspects relating to administrative concerns. There are numerous reports that the Abbasid caliphs al-Manşūr, al-Mahdī and Hārūn al-Rashīd tried to make Mālik b. Anas's Muvatta' the source of imperial law; see Nabia Abbott, Studies in Arabic Literary Papyri II: Qur'ānic Commentary and Tradition (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1967), 2:26; and Muhammad Abū Zahra, Mālik (Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-'Arabī, 2002), 184–6.

⁵⁶ Weiss, The Search for God's Law; 260, cf. 266.

"what was in their judgment" the most appropriate understanding of Christ's life. Ultimately, canon studies has demonstrated unequivocally that canonization is not the product of an author's intention, but rather of a community's reception of texts.

Like Wheeler, Weiss concludes that "while the Qur'an was a fairly discrete entity with discernible boundaries, the body of hadīth narratives constituted an amorphous mass whose boundaries no one could hope to catch sight of, at least with any degree of clarity." Yet on the same page he acknowledges the crucial role of the canonical hadīth collections. The concept of the Prophet's 'sunna,' he states, "conjures up the great compilations of hadīth material such as those of al-Bukhārī and Muslim."⁵⁷ Should we not, then, consider the possibility that the collections of al-Bukhārī and Muslim played precisely the role of synecdochic symbols for the Prophet's sunna in a community that understood the need to delimit an otherwise amorphous entity?

Although canon studies may be a product of the Western intellectual tradition, it has been demonstrated that even within one civilization the term 'canon' is multivalent. Within this diversity, however, canon studies has recognized that when communities authorize texts this involves common historical processes that change the way these texts function and are used. Addressing concerns about whether or not one can truly term the Bible a 'canon,' Kermode states that "works transmitted inside a canon are understood differently from those without...."58 It is thus ultimately the manner in which the Muslim community has treated the Sahāhayn and the functions that they have served, not any external and sometimes rigid definitions of canon, that determine the two works' canonicity. More importantly, we turn our backs on any canonical status that these texts may possess-and the discourse of canonization of which they may be a part-to the detriment of our own understanding of Islamic civilization.

The existence of a set of authoritative hadith collections is certainly not the construct of an outside mind. Its reality as an indigenous product of Muslims' understanding of their own scriptural tradition is exemplified by Rashīd al-Dīn (d. 718/1318), the famous minister and court historian of the Ilkhan Mongol sultan Ghāzān Khān (d. 703/1304). Directing the writing of one of humanity's first world histories in the wake of Ghāzān's conversion to Islam, this Persian scholar, physician and historian devotes a section of its introduction to an epistemology of historical knowledge. The reports from the past on which historians rely, he explains, fall into two categories. The first are so well known (tavātor) that they convey epistemological certainty. The vast majority of information, however, falls into the second category of less well-attested narrations ($\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$), which are subject to uncertainty and distortion. Even reports culled from eyewitnesses can transform and eventually become cause for disagreement as they pass from person to person. This reality, he states, has even affected the Prophet's legacy. "The foremost imāms," however, "conducted thorough research and made certain selections, and they called them the Authentic [Collections] (Ṣihāh)." "All else," he adds, "remains within the sphere of doubt and hesitation."⁵⁹

⁵⁷ Weiss, The Search for God's Law, 260.
⁵⁸ Kermode, "The Canon," 609.

Rashīd al-Dīn was not writing a religious history. The overpowering charisma of the "Golden Family" of Genghis Khan and the dictates of classical Persian political theory occupied him far more than the distinctly theological or sectarian concerns of the first centuries of Islam. The Islam to which the Mongol rulers of Iran and Rashīd al-Dīn himself had converted was a fully mature civilization that initiated its citizens into a cosmopolitan worldview and shared vision of history. Rashīd al-Dīn's historical epistemology is itself a product of Hellenistic Near Eastern discussions of mediate and immediate (apodictic) knowledge. Yet even in this context, the Six "authentic" hadīth collections represent religious and social order amid the polyglot historical roots of Islamic civilization. The Ṣihāh canonized a tract of the past, securing the Prophetic authority so central to Islamic communal identification in the medium of specific texts.

The unique status of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's *Sahīh*s similarly constitutes an undeniable historical reality. From his seat in Delhi, capital of the Moghul Empire in the 1700s, Shāh Walī Allāh (d. 1762) summarized the legal and doctrinal controversies that had unfolded over more than a millennium of Islamic history in his masterpiece, Hujjat Allāh al-bāligha (God's Conclusive Argument). In his chapter on hadīth, he concludes that "as for the two *Sahīh*s [of al-Bukhārī and Muslim], the scholars of hadīth have agreed that everything in them attributed to the Prophet is absolutely authentic," adding that "anyone who belittles their stature is guilty of corruptive innovation (mubtadi[']) and not following the path of the believers."⁶⁰

⁵⁹ Rashīd al-Dīn Fadlallāh, Jāme'-e tavārīkh, ed. Moḥammad Rūshan and Moṣṭafā Mūsavī (Tehran: Nashr-e Elborz, 1373/[1994]), 1: 9–10.

The existence of a set of authoritative hadīth collections in general, and the exceptional status of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's books in particular, are thus historical realities that we ignore at our own peril. As this study will demonstrate, in both their capacity as a standard of truth (Canon 1) and a set of delimited and representative texts (Canon 2), the Ṣahīhayn are in the fullest sense of the word 'canonical.' Not only may we dispense with the quotation marks that often so cautiously adorn the "canons" of Islam, we can use tools developed in canon studies to better understand and articulate the form and functions of the hadīth canon. Doing so is nothing more than responding to voices from within the Islamic tradition that call us to view the Ṣahīhayn as part of the broader phenomenon of canonicity.

Theoretical Tools and Common Historical Processes: Canon Studies and the Hadīth Canon

The present study is neither theory-driven nor comparative. To the extent possible, the story of the hadīth canon must be read on its own. This study does, however, contend that any canon represents the interaction of text, authority and communal identification. The foregoing discussion of different canons and the phenomenon of canonicity has highlighted this common historical process and provided a conceptual lexicon that is useful for addressing the hadīth canon. Investigating this issue in light of the way other literary and scriptural communities have conceived of canonization can bring elements otherwise unperceived into relief. In tackling a subject that lies at the nexus of text, community and authority, we must expect to address the same themes as studies of other canons. It is the extent to which the Muslim community's perception and use of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's *Ṣahīh*s meets these expectations that justifies this approach. Ultimately, it is the prominence of questions of self-definition, the institutionalization of religious authority and a qualitative change in the way the community viewed these two works that qualifies them as canonical.

38

⁶⁰ Shāh Walī Allāh al-Dihlawī, Hujjat Allāh al-bāligha, 2 vols. in 1 (Cairo: Dār al-Turāth, [1978]), 1:134.

Having reviewed the development of canon studies, let us now elaborate more fully some of the central themes and constructs that will be employed in the study of the Sahahayn canon.

a. Canons and Community

Texts may become authoritative, but they are not binding on all mankind. Canons are necessarily the creations of specific communities or audiences. Because the act of authorizing certain books draws lines excluding other works, canons have been understood as tools of inclusion and exclusion within a broader community. As Gerald Burns and Joseph Blenkinsopp have observed in the case of the Hebrew scriptures, "what we call 'canon' is intelligible only in the context of conflicting claims to control the redemptive media and, in particular, to mediate and interpret authoritatively the common tradition."⁶¹ Scriptural canons thus form when certain sections of a community attempt to monopolize the true interpretation of a religious message shared by all its members, excluding those audiences that identify with the non-canonical.

In the case of the formation of the New Testament canon, one of the first to advance a set of authoritative media for understanding Christ's legacy was the second-century Gnostic Marcion.⁶² His list of works, one of the first 'canons,' excluded the Hebrew Bible as the corrupt revelation of the Old Testament God who had plunged the world into darkness. The true salvational teachings of Christ that could reunite man's soul with the Divine, Marcion contended, were contained solely in a purified version of Luke's gospel and a selection of Paul's letters.⁶³ Championing what would become orthodox Christianity, Irenaeus, the second-century bishop of Lyons and inveterate enemy of the Gnostics, responded by affirming the unity of the Old and New Testaments. More importantly, he proclaimed a closed canon consisting of the "four-formed gospel" of Matthew, Mark, Luke and John. These books alone, not the myriad of other gospels circulating among Christians at the time, captured Jesus's life and teachings; like ⁶¹ Burns, 81; Blenkinsopp, Prophecy and Canon, 96.

⁶² Gerald Sheppard, "Canon," 3:63.

⁶³ Kermode, "Institutional Control," 77. For an excellent treatment of Marcion's beliefs and sources, see Metzger, 90–94.

the four directions of the compass, there could be no more and no less.⁶⁴ As Metzger and Elaine Pagels have shown, the formation of the New Testament canon cannot be grasped without acknowledging the catalyst of Marcion's heretical counter-canon. By declaring that only certain books were authentic and binding for Christians, Irenaeus had dubbed not only the Gnostics but also the audiences of other innocuous gospels heretics. Halbertal's stipulation that "canon and heresy are twins" succinctly represents this vein of scholarship.⁶⁵

This conception of canonicity as tied to competing claims to the control of a common tradition has so dominated canon studies that Hanaway concluded that the absence of such a "significant other" as an opponent in medieval Persian literature precluded the existence of a canon of Persian poetry. This trend's commanding role in canon studies is not difficult to understand. Canons are necessarily vehicles for identification. Just as 'non-canonical' works are a byproduct of their formation, so canons must delineate a new community of believers from the old, wider audience.

Such assumptions, however, leave unexplored another function of canons in community. Canons can also emphasize inclusion and agreement more than exclusivity. They can function as a tool of reconciliation, a medium for communication or for creating common ground between adversaries. Although one sect might advance a canon as a polemical tool in a time of strife, this canon need not serve to exclude other forms of redemptive media. Rather, its compelling power could dwell in its broad appeal. As Hanaway contends, canons may serve chiefly as a "heavy weapon to fire at the enemy,"⁶⁶ but only evidence also accepted by that enemy will prove compelling in debate. Even in polemic, a canon's power must spring from its status as part of a shared language. Considering the powerful role of the consensus $(ijm\bar{a})$ of the Muslim community in Islamic epistemology, we must take care to consider the emergence of the Sahīhayn canon as an inclusive effort to force various sects to recognize a common medium for discussing the Prophet's legacy.

⁶⁴ Pagels, 81–5; Metzger, 153–7.

⁶⁵ Halbertal, 5.

⁶⁶ Hanaway, 3.

b. Kanon and the Measure of Revealed Truth

Despite its overwhelming denotation of "authoritative list" in modern and many pre-modern minds, the kanòn that meant "measure" to Aristotle and lent itself so readily to the "rule of revealed truth" in early Christian polemic has survived as one of the most useful tools for conceptualizing canonicity. Canon studies has emphasized canonization as an impetus for interpretative activity, with Kermode underscoring that authorizing books transforms them into potentially inexhaustible mines of interpretation. "Licensed for exegesis," he concludes, "such is the seal we place upon our canonical works."⁶⁷ This focus has somewhat overshadowed the role of the canon as a categorical measure of truth, a tool that Fish notes is designed to end discussion rather than encourage it. Here the kanòn as measure is "an authority that can be invoked in the face of almost any counterevidence because it is its own evidence and stronger in its force than any other."⁶⁸

Indeed, the original purpose of the kanon tes aletheias, or 'measure of revealed truth,' advanced by Irenaeus was to limit interpretation of the gospels. Just as the early church father had proclaimed an authorized collection of four gospels, so too he propounded a hermeneutic lens to ensure an orthodox reading of his canon. When reading rich and pregnant texts like the Gospel of John, so favored by many Gnostics, one must apply "the measure of revealed truth" that interprets them in as literal a manner as possible and in the light of Jesus's 'true' teachings. To open the doors of esoteric interpretation of the canonical gospels would mimic the methods of pagan philosophers such as the Stoics, who interpreted Homer's epics allegorically.⁶⁹ Irenaeus sought to end the subversive preaching of the Montanist movement of Asia Minor, whose wandering prophets claimed to be seized by the Holy Ghost and proclaimed the continuing revelation of Christ in the community. The message and authority of Christ thus had to be contained in the canon and interpreted properly. As rabbis debating questions of holy law had declared when some scholars claimed that God had validated their position in a dream, "we do not listen to voices from heaven."70

⁶⁷ Kermode, "Institutional Control," 83.

⁶⁸ Fish, 12.

⁶⁹ Pagels, 117.

⁷⁰ The contemporary Shāfi^{$\overline{1}$} scholar Sa^{$\overline{1}$}d Abd al-Lațīf Fūda concurs, stating that "inspiration (ilhām) is not a conduit for revealed knowledge (ilm) among the people of

For Irenaeus, the canon as text and kanòn as measure were guarantors of an orthodox monopoly on interpretation. In J.Z. Smith's definition of the canon as a tool in which the authority of a tradition is deposited in order to extend its implementation into future circumstances, Irenaeus's "measure of truth" would be a trump card in determining the authentic vision of Christianity. Indeed, the authority of his canon, Irenaeus claimed, stemmed from its authenticity. He had chosen his "four-formed gospel" because they were the only books supposedly written by eyewitnesses of the events they described.⁷¹

Like Irenaeus, Muslim scholars of hadīth have been preoccupied with questions of authenticity. The traditions of the Prophet were certainly subject to interpretation as scholars applied them to questions of law, morality and doctrine, but in debates over their meaning it was the question of authenticity that was paramount in their collection and criticism. The more authentic the Prophetic report, the more authoritative it was. In the elaboration of the faith, and certainly in inter-school polemics, "interpretation is a function of authentication (al-ta'wil far' ' $al\bar{a} al-ithb\bar{a}t$)." While Irenaeus's canon required a canonical lens for proper viewing, for hadīth collections the kanòn of truth was the canonical books themselves. A collection deemed an authentic repository for the Prophet's hermeneutic authority was the tool through which that authority could be employed decisively in the further elaboration of Islam. For Kermode the canon is licensed for exegesis; for Muslims a canonical hadīth collection was licensed for common use.

c. The Principle of Charity and Canonical Culture

One of the most useful conceptual tools for studying the emergence and development of the hadīth canon is the Principle of Charity, a notion only recently applied to canonicity. In its most general sense, the Principle of Charity assumes that people interpret signs in the best possible light. It was first developed as a tool of analytical philosophy, and later explored by N.L. Wilson in a 1959 issue of Review of Metaphysics. Wilson proposes that, presented with a field of data or propositions, humans will choose the designation that makes the maximum number truth"; see http://www.al-razi.net/website/pages/warakat.htm, part 10 (last accessed 9/14/2005).

⁷¹ Pagels, 111.

of statements true.⁷² Here an individual forced to come to terms with a set of propositions treats reality with charity, reading its 'text' in the best possible light. He charitably assumes a system must exist, so he reasons that one should select the data that best support some notion of order.

The Principle of Charity has also found significant use in the study of language. Members of a speech community all subscribe to rules that govern the common activities of construction and interpretation, so every sentence and expression is a new proposition that must fit into this shared system. If one's interlocutor says, "I ran the light at the introspection," one would automatically assume that he or she had meant to say 'intersection.' At a certain point in conversation, it becomes more likely that a speaker has simply erred than that he or she is trying to subvert grammar or convention.⁷³ It is not simply due to a reliance on the stability of convention that one treats the interlocutor's remarks with charity; we automatically view them in the best possible light in order to uphold the very conventions of language that allow us to understand one another. As Donald Davidson explains, "We do this sort of off the cuff interpretation all the time, deciding in favour of reinterpretation of words in order to preserve a reasonable theory of belief."⁷⁴ As a result, context can overwhelm isolated or fleeting divergences in an otherwise consistent system.

The Principle of Charity has been similarly applied to the communication between author and reader through the medium of text. In textual interpretation, the Principle involves approaching a work with the assumption that its author is rational and that its elements of plot, theme and character conform to some sense of order. Here grammar and semantic convention morph into notions of intra-textual uniformity and interpretive harmony. The Principle of Charity manifests the reader's need for what Kermode calls "that concordance of beginning, middle and end which is the essence of our explanatory fictions...."⁷⁵

⁷² N.L. Wilson, "Substance without Substrata," Review of Metaphysics 12, no. 4 (1959): 532.

 ⁷³ See Willard Quine, Word & Object (Cambridge, Massachusetts: MIT Press, 1960), 59.

⁷⁴ Donald Davidson, Inquiries into Truth and Interpretation, 2nd ed. (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 2001), 196.

⁷⁵ Kermode, The Sense of an Ending, 3rd ed. (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2000), 35–36.

Drawing on Ronald Dworkin's Law's Empire, Halbertal extends the Principle of Charity to the domain of canonicity.⁷⁶ Given several possible interpretations of a canonical passage, the 'correct' one will be the one that supports the text's internal consistency and compatibility with accepted notions of truth or propriety. Canonizing a legal or scriptural text thus "not only endows it with authority but also requires a commitment to make the best of it."⁷⁷ The Principle of Charity recognizes that in the case of a scriptural or legal canon, "there is an a priori interpretive commitment to show the text in the best possible light. Conversely, the loss of this sense of obligation to the text is an undeniable sign that it is no longer perceived as holy." Halbertal thus stipulates the principle that "the degree of canonicity of a text corresponds to the amount of charity it receives in its interpretation."⁷⁸

The assumed existence of an ordered reality in Wilson's study, and the manifest authority of linguistic context and convention in a speech community, here become the worldview that a community has constructed around a canonized text. One might refer to this surrounding system as the text's canonical culture. It is the system that trains readers or listeners to interpret a canonical text in a reverential manner and with suitable awe. In short, canonical culture obliges readers to treat the canon with charity. Unlike grammar or linguistic convention in a speech community, however, a canonical culture cannot be taken for granted or unconsciously defended. It must be consciously created and nurtured through careful control of the manner in which the canon is read and discussed. Upholders of this canonical culture must themselves actively propagate it and condemn its breaches. A canonical culture would demand that interpreters of the canon observe certain respectful formalities, accord the text and its authors the proper accolades and gloss over possible flaws. Like a language, however, one can identify the rules of canonical culture and recognize certain violations of its grammar. By measuring the charity extended, one can observe the construction of a canonical culture as it seeks to cast a text, and perhaps even its author, in the best possible light. Once one gains a familiarity with this canonical culture, one can detect lapses and even perceive its participants interacting with its boundaries and demands.

⁷⁶ For an analysis and commentary on Dworkin's work, see Andei Marmor, Interpretation and Legal Theory (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1992), 57–60.

⁷⁷ Halbertal, 28.

⁷⁸ Halbertal, 29.

The Principle of Charity is ideally suited for studying the canonization of the Sahihayn because the canonical culture surrounding them has depended entirely on the compatibility of the two texts and their authors with prevailing notions of truth and authenticity.⁷⁹ From the early second/eighth century, many pious Muslims who collected the sayings of their Prophet recognized that an exacting criticism of both those who reported these traditions and the traditions themselves was necessary to identify forged material. Their opponents from among the Muslim rationalists and the more analogy-based legal schools of Iraq, however, were very skeptical of their claims to be able to collect and authenticate statements transmitted orally. The image that the hadīth scholars therefore cultivated in the Muslim community highlighted their caution, lack of tolerance for lapses in memory or inconsistencies in transmission, and an almost pathological devotion to amassing and sifting through the Prophet's legacy. The idealized muhaddith (hadīth scholar) was singularly devoted to mastering the Prophet's word, dismissing as corruptive innovation anything that did not extend back to him. For them the hadīth's chain of transmission (isnād), the only lifeline to the Prophet's teachings and an Islam unpolluted by the cosmopolitan religious atmosphere of the Near East, became the center of a cult of authenticity. "The isnād for us is religion; were it not for the isnād," they claimed, "whoever wanted could say whatever they wanted."80 It was the very authenticity of these isnāds, however, that the hadīth scholars' opponents doubted. To canonize the Sahīhayn, the hadīth scholars' cult of authenticity had to become both more intensified and accepted in the wider Sunni community. It was argued, as we shall see, that these two demanding books met the whole community's requirements for hadīth authenticity. The canon thus rested on a claim that required the approval of segments of the community that had been perennially mistrustful of the hadīth scholars' methodology and the ever-critical hadīth scholars themselves. As we shall see in Chapter Seven, a perpetual reinforcing of this cult of authenticity would prove the salient feature of the canonical culture surrounding the two works. The two books and their authors had to be lifted above their peers and any possibility of error. The extent to which different segments of the Sunni community gradually extended the charity of this unblemished authenticity to al-Bukhārī and Muslim and their works charts the emergence of this canonical culture.

⁷⁹ For a very brief but parallel discussion of the "critical gentleness" with which Muslim scholars treated their canonical texts, see Aziz al-Azmeh, "The Muslim Canon," 212.

⁸⁰ "Al-isnād 'indanā dīn, law lā al-isnād la-qāla man shā'a mā shā'a, wa lākin idhā qīla lahu man haddathaka baqiya;" see al-Khaţīb al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād, ed. Mustafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aţā, 14 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1417/1997), 6:164.

Conclusion

Whether scriptural, legal or literary, canons lie at the intersection of text, authority and communal identification. They are no more unique to the Occidental tradition than are these three seminal notions. Indeed, canons are undeniable historical realities that change the manner in which the books function and are treated by their audiences. Where exactly the canon of the Sahih collections of al-Bukhārī and Muslim fits in this nexus is a question only a study devoted to their unique history can answer. The remarkable efforts of scholars such as J.Z. Smith, Halbertal and Kermode to understand canons in their various contexts, however, must serve as guides in alerting us to the possibilities and perhaps even the inevitabilities facing the study of a canon's emergence and functions. Canon studies has drawn our attention to the role of the canon as a possible tool for inclusion in a community. It has provided the Principle of Charity as a device to measure canonicity and chart the development of a canonical culture. Finally, we can conceive of the canon as a common measure of truth in which the authority of tradition is deposited for later application. As Menzies, the earliest student of canonization as phenomenon, so ably pointed out, a canon must begin with books.⁸¹ What, then, was the genesis of those two books that allowed Muslims to stand "where the first disciples stood..., to listen to the Master's words, and overhear perhaps even his secret thoughts and prayers," feeling "what that spirit was which reached the Master from the upper region and passed forth from him to other men...?"⁸²

46

⁸¹ Menzies, 90.

⁸² Menzies, 83.

CHAPTER THREE

THE GENESIS OF AL-BUKHĀRĪ AND MUSLIM

Introduction

Leafing through the pages of al-Bukhārī's Sahīh today, the book seems to be the natural culmination of the Muslim study of the Prophetic legacy: Muhammad's authenticated words and actions, enclosed in a few volumes. For the hadīth scholars and pious Muslims of the third/ninth century, however, hadiths were not bound tomes taken off the shelf and read. They were living links to the Prophet and the manifestation of his charismatic authority in everyday life. Although Muslim scholars of the first three centuries of Islam strove to prevent forged hadīths from being attributed to the Prophet, even in the case of dubious transmissions the powerful formula "the Messenger of God said..." made reports from Muhammad prima facie compelling to many jurists. Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's compilation of works limited to authenticated reports was thus a revolutionary act. The two Sahīhs were destined for eventual canonization, but in the decades after their authors' deaths important segments of the scholarly community saw them as an insolent departure from tradition. The Sahīhayn possessed an elitism and finality that clashed with the manner in which hadīth-based jurists employed the Prophetic legacy. Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's work thus constituted a split in the hadīth tradition; although the Sahīhayn would become an authoritative institution, they would exist side by side with the continued amassing of Prophetic traditions through the living isnād.

The Development of Hadith Literature

When he was sixteen years old, Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl al-Bukhārī left his hometown of Bukhara in Transoxiana with his mother and brother Aḥmad on a pilgrimage to Mecca. The small party would probably have attached themselves to one of the merchant caravans carrying luxury goods west along the Silk Road. Traversing the desert, they would have passed through the bustling garrison-city of Merv before climbing the mountains to Sarakhs and then descending into the rolling green and golden valleys of Khurāsān.¹ They would have made a stop in the city of Naysābūr, its northernmost orchards lying against the foothills of the mountains. As they continued west along the northern edge of the Iranian desert, they would have passed through Bayhaq, the great commercial and scholarly center of Rayy, before voyaging across the Zagros Mountains and descending onto the flood plain of Iraq. They may have stopped in Baghdad, the "navel of the world" and a throbbing center of trade, scholarship and political intrigue. They would have continued along the caravan trail, now crowded with pilgrims, across the north Arabian deserts to the rugged mountains of the Hijāz. Skirting jagged ridges interspaced by yellow tracts of sand, they would have ended their journey where Islam began over two centuries earlier, in the dry and rocky valley of Mecca.

Al-Bukhārī, like generations of dedicated and pious Muslims before him, devoted his life to answering the question that lies at the heart of the Islamic religious tradition: how does one live according to God's will as revealed in the Qur'ān and taught by His Prophet? Almost two centuries before al-Bukhārī set off on his pilgrimage, the same road had carried the Muslim armies into Eastern Iran and Transoxiana as they triumphantly spread their new religion outwards in time and space from its epicenter in the Ḥijāz. His voyage back to Mecca, the Prophet's home and location of the Ka'ba, fulfilled the duty ordained upon all Muslims to return to the place where God had revealed their religion and where the Prophet had served as its first authoritative interpreter.

In the two hundred years since the beginning of the Islamic tradition, Muslims such as al-Bukhārī had turned back again and again to the authoritative legacy of the Prophet's teachings as it radiated outwards through the transmission and interpretation of pious members of the community. In Medina, al-Qāsim b. Muḥammad b. Abī Bakr (d. 108/726-7), the grandson of the first caliph, and Sa'īd b. al-Musayyab (d. 94/ 713), the son-in-law of the most prolific student of the Prophet's legacy, Abū Hurayra, became two of the leading interpreters of the new faith after the death of the formative first generation of Muslims. Their interpretations of the Qur'ān and the Prophet's legacy, as well as those of founding fathers such as 'Umar b. al-Khattāb, were collected and synthesized by the seminal Medinan jurist Mālik b. Anas (d. 179/796). In Kufa, the Prophet's friend and pillar of the early Muslim community, 'Abdallāh b. Mas'ūd (d. 32/652-3), instructed his newly established community on the tenets and practice of Islam as it adapted to the surroundings of Christian, Jewish and Zoroastrian Iraq. His disciple 'Algama b. Qays (d. 62/681) transmitted these teachings to a promising junior, Ibrāhīm al-Nakha'ī (d. 95/714), who in turn passed his approaches and methods of legal reasoning to Hammād b. Abī Sulaymān (d. 120/738). His student of eighteen years, Abū Hanīfa (d. 150/767), would become a cornerstone of legal interpretive effort in Iraq and the eponym of the Hanafi school of law. Unlike Medina, the Prophet's adopted home where his legacy thrived as living communal practice, the polyglot environment of Kufa teemed with ancient doctrines and practices foreign to the early Muslim community. Many such ideas found legitimation in spurious reports attributed to the Prophet, and Abū Hanīfa thus preferred a cautious reliance on the Qur'an and his own reasoning rather than to risk acting on these fraudulent hadīths.

¹ 'Khurāsān' as a topographical and administrative term has had a wide range of meanings. In the early Islamic period the name was often used to denote the region extending from Western Iran to Transoxiana. Today it is a relatively contained province in Eastern Iran with its capital at Mashhad. We will use the name as the geographer al-Muqaddisī (d. after 380/990) did: to describe the area in Eastern Iran centered on the four major cities of Naysābūr, Merv, Herat and Balkh. We will distinguish this region from Transoxiana, with its Zarafshān River cities of Bukhara and Samarqand; Paul Wheately, The Places Where Men Pray Together (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 2001), 172–90.

By the mid-second century, two general trends in interpreting and applying Islam had emerged in its newly conquered lands. For both these trends, the Qur'ān and the Prophet's implementation of that message were the only constitutive sources of authority for Muslims. The practice and rulings of the early community, who participated in establishing the faith and inherited the Prophet's hermeneutic authority, were the lenses through which scholars like Abū Hanīfa and Mālik understood these two sources. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Awzā'ī of Beirut (d. 157/773–4) thus stated that "religious knowledge (ïlm) is what has come to us from the Companions of the Prophet; what has not is not knowledge."² When presented with a situation for which the Qur'ān and the well known teachings of the Prophet and his Companions provided no clear answer, scholars like Abū Hanīfa relied on their own interpretations of these sources to respond. Early Muslim intellectuals like Ibn Qutayba (d. 276/889) referred to such scholars as 'ahl al-ra'y,' or practitioners of individual legal reasoning.³ Other pious members of the community preferred to limit themselves to the opinions of the earliest generations and more dubious reports from the Prophet rather than to opine in a realm they felt was the exclusive purview of God and His Prophet. The great Baghdad scholar Ahmad b. Hanbal (d. 241/855) epitomized this transmission-based approach to understanding law and faith in his famous statement: "You hardly see anyone applying reason $(ra^{2}y)$ [to some issue of religion or law] except that there lies, in his heart, some deep-seated resentment (ghill). A weak narration [from the Prophet] is thus dearer to me than the use of reason."4 Such transmission-based scholars, referred to as 'the partisans of hadīth (ahl al-hadīth),' preferred the interpretations of members of the early Islamic community to their own. For them the Muslim confrontation with the cosmopolitan atmosphere of the Near East threatened the unadulterated purity of Islam. A narcissistic indulgence of human reason would encourage the agendas of heresy and the temptation to stray from God's revealed path. Only by clinging stubbornly to the ways of the Prophet and his righteous successors could they preserve the authenticity of their religion.

² Abū 'Umar Yūsuf Ibn 'Abd al-Barr al-Qurṭubī, Jāmi' bayān al-'ilm wa fadlihi, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān Muḥammad 'Uthmān, 2 vols. (Medina: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, [1968]), 2:36.

It was in this milieu that the tradition of hadīth literature emerged. Although Muslims had been memorizing or writing down the words of the Prophet and his followers from an early period,⁵ the first major hadīth collections, called muṣannafs, were essentially transcripts of the legal discourse that had developed during the first two centuries of Islam. Arranged into chapters dealing with different legal or ritual questions, they were topical records of pious Muslims' efforts to respond to questions about faith and practice. Mālik b. Anas's Muvatța' is thus a mixture of Prophetic hadīths, the rulings of his Companions, the practice of the scholars of Medina and the opinions of Mālik himself.⁶ Likewise, the muşannaf of Ibn Jurayj (d. 150/767) is a collection of reports from the Prophet, Companions and Successors such as 'Ațā' b. Abī Rabāḥ (d. 114/732).⁷

³ For more on this subject, see Christopher Melchert, "Traditionist-Jurisprudents and the Framing of Islamic Law," Islamic Law and Society 8, no. 3 (2001): 383–406, esp. 385.

⁴ Muhammad Abū Zahra, Ibn Hanbal (Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-'Arabī, [1965]), 239.

⁵ An example of an early collection of hadīth is the sahīfa of Hammām b. Munabbih (d. circa 130/747), a disciple of Abū Hurayra, which includes 138 hadīths; for more information on the unsystematic collection of written hadīth in the first two centuries of Islam, see Abd al-Rauf, "Hadīth Literature," 272. For more on the emergence of historical writings, see Nabia Abbott, Studies in Arabic Literary Papyri II: Qur'anic Commentary and Tradition; Fuat Sezgin, Geschichte des arabischen Schrifttums, 12 vols. (Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1967), 1:53–84; Fred M. Donner, Narratives of Islamic Origins: The Beginnings of Islamic Historical Writing (Princeton: Darwin Press, 1998), 279; Muhammad al-A'zamī, Studies in Early Hadīth Literature (Kuala Lumpur: Islamic Book Trust, 2000); Harald Motzki, The Origins of Islamic Jurisprudence: Meccan Fiqh before the Classical Schools, trans. Marion H. Katz (Leiden: Brill, 2002), 158.

During the late second and early third centuries, however, the prevalence of specious hadīths attributed to the Prophet led to the emergence of a shared three-tiered process of authentication among transmission-based scholars in Medina, Basra, Baghdad and Naysābūr. In the first tier, scholars such as Abū Dāwūd al-Ṭayālisī (d. 204/818) and Ibn Hanbal strove to anchor core doctrine and practice in the teachings of the Prophet. They thus compiled collections limited to reports possessing explicit chains of transmission (isnād) going back to Muḥammad. These musnad collections would have proven a very effective first line of defense against material entering the Islamic tradition from outside sources; Ibn Ḥanbal and other early transmission-based scholars paid no heed to material lacking an isnād.⁸

These isnāds, however, could be forged or inauthentic material simply equipped with one and then circulated. In what constituted the second tier of hadīth criticism, Iraqi scholars like Ibn Hanbal, Ibn Sa'd (d. 230/845) and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī (d. 234/849) evaluated the quality of these isnāds by collecting opinions about the transmitters who comprised them. As Scott C. Lucas has established in his study of Ibn Sa'd and Ibn Hanbal's work, they drew on two previous generations of hadīth-transmission critics: that of Mālik and his contemporaries like Shu'ba

⁶ Yaḥyā b. Yaḥyā al-Laythī's recension of the Muwatta', which was transmitted to the West into Andalusia, contains 1,720 narrations, of which 613 are statements of the Companions, 285 of the Successors and 61 with no isnād at all; Abd al-Rauf, "Ḥadīth Literature," 273.

⁷ For more on Ibn Jurayj, see Harald Motzki, "The Muşannaf of 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Ṣan'ānī as a Source of Authentic Aḥādīth of the First Century A.H.," Journal of Near Eastern Studies 50 (1991): 1–21.

⁸ Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī quotes the famous early muhaddith Shuʿba b. al-Hajjāj (d. 160/776) as saying, "all religious knowledge (ilm) which does not feature 'he narrated to me' or 'he reported to me' is vinegar and sprouts (khall wa baql)"; al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, Kītāb al-madkhal ilā maʿrifat kitāb al-iklīl, ed. Aḥmad b. Fāris al-Sulūm (Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1423/2003), 58.

CHAPTER THREE

b. al-Ḥajjāj (d. 160/776), and that of the next generation of the great Basran critics 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Mahdī (d. 198/814) and Yaḥyā b. Sa'īd al-Qaṭṭān (d. 198/813).⁹ Ibn Sa'd amassed a huge dictionary of ḥadīth transmitters, his Tabaqāt, which included statements from respected ḥadīth authorities rating transmitters for honesty, piety and their command of the material they conveyed. In addition, works like the Tabaqāt and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī's Ilal also tried to ascertain the personal links between different narrators in order to assure the continuity of transmission and establish the most secure links to the Prophet. A liar, a forgetful person or a break in the isnād could thus weaken the reliability of a ḥadīth.

Finally, the third tier consisted of demanding corroboration for hadīths being circulated among the network of hadīth transmitters that spread from Yemen to Transoxiana. Even though a hadīth narration might possess a sound isnād, it was considered unreliable if only one out of several students of a famous transmitter reported it from him. Reports that either conflicted with similar reports or lacked corroboration were deemed likely errors. A genre of books identifying these `ilal (flaws) thus arose with the work of 'Alī b. al-Madīnī and Ibn Ḥanbal.

A hadīth that passed this three-tiered test was considered sahih, or an authentic saying of Muhammad.¹⁰ Although scholars applied these three tiers of criticism to their corpora of hadīths, they did not dispense with weaker material or require a report to be sahih in order to function in deriving laws. Ibn Hanbal's massive Musnad of approximately thirty ⁹ See Scott C. Lucas, Constructive Critics: Hadīth Literature and the Articulation of Sunnī Islam (Leiden: Brill, 2004).

¹⁰ There has been some contention over the proper translation of the term sahih. G.H.A. Juynboll renders it 'sound' or 'healthy.' Although this translation adheres most closely to the etymological root of the word, in her dissertation on the term sahih, Asma Helali Müller argues that 'authentic (authentique)' more accurately represents the term's significance in the hadīth worldview. The tradition of hadīth criticism, she explains, was ultimately wholly preoccupied with the ideal of 'authenticity (sihha)' and establishing it. Declaring a report sahih was thus to announce that its authenticity had been determined, and hadīth critics like al-Bukhārī and Muslim envisioned this as the highest rating for a report. Although Muslim juxtaposes the 'sound (sahīh)' hadīth with the 'ailing (saqīm)' one on a semantic level, on the conceptual level this discussion occurred between the poles of 'authentic' and 'unauthenticated.' He thus contrasts "well-known and sahih reports with weak hadīths and unacceptable narrations (al-akhbār al-sahīha al-mashhūra with al-ahādīth al-da īfa wa al-riwayāt al-munkara)." A report rated sahīh thus constituted the authenticated words of the Prophet; G.H.A. Juynboll, "Sahīh," EI2; Asma Helali Müller, "Étude sur la tradition prophétique: La question de l'authenticité du I/VIIème au VI/XIIème siècle," (Doctoral diss., l'École Pratique des Hautes Études, 2004), 19; Sahīh Muslim: mugaddima, introduction.

thousand hadīths represented a lifetime of collection and review, with the compiler adding or removing reports as he became aware of their strengths and weaknesses. Ibn Hanbal himself, however, admitted that his collection contained lackluster hadīths, which he readily employed in situations where no stronger reports could be found.¹¹ Of course, that a scholar like Ibn Hanbal could suffice with a report lacking a strong isnād in no way entails that he was comfortable with forged hadīths. Ibn Hanbal himself cited a report in which the Prophet said, "Whoever narrates a hadīth from me thinking that it is a lie, then he is among the liars."¹² But any hadīth with a passable isnād back to the Prophet had a chance of truly being his words and thus outweighed any individual's feeble reasoning. Transmission-based scholars like Ibn Hanbal thus looked to the report attributed to 'Abdallāh b. 'Abbās: "Indeed this knowledge is [our] religion, so incline towards hadīths as long as they have *isnād*s to your Prophet."¹³

Here, one must not fall into the trap of conflating the epistemological worldview of transmission-based scholars in this period with that of later Sunni legal theorists. As we will discuss in Chapter Five, later legal theorists considered the most reliable form of reports to be those that were mutawātir, or reports so massively transmitted that they could not possibly have been forged and thus conveyed epistemological certainty. $\bar{A}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths, those reports that were transmitted from the Prophet by a less impressive number of isnāds and constituted the bulk ¹¹ Ibn Hanbal is reported as saying that none of the twenty-eight narrations of the famous hadīth in which the Prophet tells 'Ammār b. Yāsir that he will be killed by the rebellious party (al-fi'a al-bāghiya, i.e., Muʿāwiya), several of which he includes in his Musnad, are correct; see Muwaffaq al-Dīn Ibn Qudāma (d. 620/1223), al-Muntakhab min al-ʿilal li'l-Khallāl, ed. Abū Muʿādh Ṭāriq b. ʿAwaḍ Allāh (Riyadh: Dār al-Rāya, 1419/1997), 222. For a famous Hanbalī's rebuttal of this attribution to Ibn Hanbal, see Ibn Rajab, Fath al-bārī, ed. Mahmūd Shaʿbān ʿAbd al-Maqsūd et al. (Medina: Maktabat al-Gharāba al-Athariyya, 1417/1996), 3:310. For a more general statement on this from a later hadīth scholar, see Ibn al-Ṣalāh al-Shahrazūrī, Muqaddimat Ibn al-Ṣalāh wa Mahāsin al-istilāh, ed. 'Ā'isha 'Abd al-Rahmān (Cairo: Dār al-Ma'ārif, 1411/1990), 286. Ibn Hanbal is quoted by later scholars as saying that "if we are narrating [hadīths] about prohibition or permissibility (al-halāl wa al-harām) we are strict, but if we are narrating them in matters of the virtues [of the early community] and similar matters, we are lax"; Ibn Hajar al-'Asqalānī, al-Qawl al-musaddad fī al-dhabb 'an al-Musnad li'l-imām Ahmad (Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-'Uthmāniyya, 1386/1967), 12; cf. al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, al-Kifāva fī ma'rifat ilm uşūl al-riwāva, ed. Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm al-Dimyāțī, 2 vols. (Cairo: Dār al-Hudā, 1423/2003), 1:399.

¹² Musnad Ibn Hanbal: 5:14.

¹³ Ibn 'Adī al-Jurjānī, al-Kāmil fī du 'afā' al-rijāl, 7 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1405/1985), 1:156.

of the hadīth corpus dealt with by Ibn Hanbal and his cohort, only yielded 'legally compelling probability (zann)' in the eyes of later legal theorists. The epistemological category of mutawātir, however, did not exist in the discourse of hadīth critics in the third/ninth century. The word 'tawātara' and synonyms like 'tazāhara' simply meant that a hadīth 'appeared widely,' and even the early Sunni legal theorist al-Shāfi'ī (d. 204/819–20) knew no technical definition for the word.¹⁴ Morever, the term zann, a positive concept for later legal theorists, was associated with 'other than truth' and tantamount to 'falsehood (bāţil)' among transmission-based scholars of the third/ninth century.¹⁵ For transmission-based jurists of Ibn Hanbal's time, the ultimate epistemological rating a hadīth could achieve was that it was 'authentically from the Prophet (şaḥha 'an al-nabī)' or 'well-known (mashhūr).'

The Ṣaḥīḥ Movement and the Bifurcation of the Hadīth Tradition

Two of Ibn Hanbal's students found his latitude in the use of weak hadīths unnecessary. Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī (d. 256/870) and Muslim b. al-Hajjāj (d. 261/875) were the first to produce muṣannaf collections devoted only to ḥadīths they felt met the requirements of authenticity (siḥḥa). Their books were the first wave of what Muhammad Abd al-Rauf terms "the ṣaḥīḥ movement."¹⁶ Unlike Ibn Hanbal, Muslim felt that there were enough ṣaḥīḥ ḥadīths in circulation that transmission-based scholars could dispense with less worthy narrations in elaborating Islamic law and doctrine.¹⁷ Such thinking represented a ¹⁴ Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj al-Naysābūrī, Kītāb al-tamyīz, ed. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-A'zamī (Riyadh: Maṭba'at Jāmi'at Riyāḍ, [1395/1975]), 134, 136; Muḥammad b. Idrīs al-Shāfiʿī, al-Umm (Cairo: Dār al-Sha'b, 1968–), 7:258–9. Al-Shāfiʿī does note that there are two kinds of reports transmitted from the Prophet, those narrated by "masses from masses (ʿāmma 'an 'āmma)" and those narrated by individuals (khāṣṣa). For him, however, these two species of reports deal with the importance of the material they convey, not their epistemological strength. 'Mass' reports transmit the practices and beliefs that all Muslims must know, while khāṣṣ reports pertain to the more obscure questions that should only occupy scholars; ibid., 7:255; idem, Mawsūʿat al-imām al-Shāfiʿī, ed. 'Alī Muḥammad, 'Ādil Aḥmad et als., vol. 10 (Beirut: Dār Iḥyā' al-Turāth al-ʿArabī, 1422/2001), 154 (this cited from al-Shāfiʿī's Ikhtilāf al-hadīth, which is included in this volume).

¹⁵ Abū Ja'far al-Taḥāwī (d. 321/933), Sharḥ mushkil al-āthār, ed. Shu'ayb Arnā'ūṭ, 16 vols. (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1415/1994), 1:375.

¹⁶ Muhammad Abd al-Rauf, "Hadīth Literature," 274.

¹⁷ Muslim b. al-Hajjāj, Şaḥīḥ Muslim (Cairo: Maktabat wa Maṭba'at Muḥammad 'Alī Ṣubayḥ, [1963]), 1:22. Al-Bukhārī is also quoted as rejecting the use of non-ṣaḥīḥ new stage in the critical study of hadīth but continued the transmissionbased legal strain in Islamic scholarly culture. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim made the authenticity always prized by hadīth scholars paramount in their books, but the works themselves were still *muṣannaf*s designed for use as comprehensive legal and doctrinal references.

This notion of legal and ritual utility strongly influenced other scholars who soon followed in al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's footsteps. Their students and colleagues Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī (d. 275/889), Muḥammad b. 'Īsā al-Tirmidhī (d. 279/892) and Aḥmad b. Shu'ayb al-Nasā'ī (d. 303/915),¹⁸ as well as Muḥammad b. Yazīd Ibn Mājah (d. 273/887), aimed at providing collections of ḥadīths that combined this utility with high standards of authenticity. These collections none-theless did feature some reports that their authors acknowledged as weak but included either because they were widely used among jurists or because they, like Ibn Ḥanbal, could find no saḥīḥ ḥadīth addressing that particular topic.¹⁹ Saʿīd b. 'Uthmān Ibn al-Sakan (d. 353/964), who lived mostly in Egypt, also collected a small saḥīḥ book consisting of ḥadīths necessary for legal rulings and whose authenticity he claimed was agreed on by all.²⁰

Other contemporaries of al-Bukhārī and Muslim adhered more to the requirement of authenticity than to legal utility. Muḥammad b. Isḥāq

hadīths in issues of prohibition (tahlīl wa tahrīm); Muhammad b. Ibrāhīm Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīh al-anzār fī ma'rifat 'ulūm al-āthār, ed. Muhammad Subhī b. Hasan Hallāq (Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999), 72.

¹⁸ There is some doubt as to whether al-Nasā'ī studied with al-Bukhārī: al-Nawawī affirms this while al-Dhahabī says that al-Nasā'ī never transmitted from al-Bukhārī; see al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām wa wafayāt al-mashāhīr wa al-a'lām, ed. Bashshār 'Awwād Ma'rūf, Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūţ and Ṣāliḥ Mahdī 'Abbās (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1988–present), 19:241.

¹⁹ See Abu Dāwūd al-Sijistānī's letter to the scholars of Mecca, where he states that he alerts the reader to any hadīth with a "serious weakness (wahn shadīd)"; "Risālat al-imām Abī Dāwūd al-Sijistānī ilā ahl Makka fī waşf Sunanihi," Thalāth rasā'il fī ʿilm muṣṭalaḥ al-ḥadīth, ed ʿAbd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda (Aleppo: Maktab al-Maṭbū'āt al-Islāmiyya, 1417/1997), 37; Ibn Manda (d. 395/1004–5) also states that Abū Dāwūd included weak ḥadīths if he could find no reliable reports on a certain subject; see Muḥammad b. Isḥāq Ibn Manda, Shurūţ al-a'imma/Risāla fī bayān fadl al-akhbār wa sharḥ madhāhib ahl al-āthār wa ḥaqīqat al-sunan wa taṣḥīḥ al-riwāyāt, ed. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār al-Farīwā'ī (Riyadh: Dār al-Muslim, 1416/1995), 73.

²⁰ This book was called al-Muntaqā and was highly esteemed by Ibn Hazm. See Muḥammad b. Ja'far al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustaṭrafa fī bayān mashhūr kutub al-sunna al-musharrafa, 2nd ed. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Tlmiyya, 1400/[1980]), 20; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, ed. Zakariyyā 'Umayrāt, 4 vols. in 2 (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Tlmiyya, 1419/1998), 3:231 (biography of Ibn Hazm).

Ibn Khuzayma (d. 311/923), an early pivot of the Shāfi'ī school who both studied with and transmitted ḥadīths to al-Bukhārī and Muslim, compiled a şaḥīḥ work he entitled Mukhtaṣar al-mukhtaṣar min al-musnad al-ṣaḥīḥ 'an al-nabī (The Abridged Abridgement of the Ṣaḥīḥ Musnad from the Prophet).²¹ Abū Ḥafṣ 'Umar b. Muḥammad al-Bujayrī of Samarqand (d. 311/924) produced a collection called al-Jāmi 'al-ṣaḥīḥ.²² Even the famous historian and exegete Muḥammad b. Jarīr al-Ṭabarī (d. 310/923) attempted a gigantic ṣaḥīḥ musnad called Kītāb tahdhīb al-āthār but died before he finished it.²³ Ibn Ḥibbān al-Bustī's (d. 354/965) massive Ṣahīḥ has been highly esteemed by Muslim scholars and is usually considered the last installment in the ṣaḥīḥ movement (though three ṣaḥīḥ works were evidently produced in the fifth/eleventh century).²⁴

Although in retrospect the sahīh movement may appear to be a natural progression of the collection and criticism of Prophetic hadīths, it possessed an inherent elitism and a definitiveness that clashed with underlying characteristics of hadīth transmission. Since the early days ²¹ This work would later become known as Saḥāḥ Ibn Khuzayma. Al-Khalīlī (d. 446/1054) calls this book Mukhtaşar al-mukhtaşar because Ibn Khuzayma had made it out of a bigger collection; al-Khalīl b. 'Abdallāh al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād fī ma'rifat 'ulamā' al-ḥadāth, ed. 'Amir Aḥmad Haydar (Mecca: Dār al-Fikr, 1414/1993), 313. In his very brief introduction to his Ṣaḥāḥ, Ibn Khuzayma says that this book contains material "that an upright ('adl) transmitter narrates from another upstanding transmitter continuously to [the Prophet] (s) without any break in the isnād nor any impugning (jarḥ) of the reports' transmitters''; see Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Ishāq b. Khuzayma, Ṣaḥāḥ Ibn Khuzayma, ed. Muḥammad Muṣtafā al-A'zamī, 5 vols. (Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, [1970?]), 1:3. Al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī felt that Ibn Khuzayma's collection should be ranked closely after al-Bukhātī's and Muslim's Ṣaḥāḥs beccause the author also demanded authenticity (siḥḥa); al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, al-Jāmi' li-ikhtilāf al-rāwī wa ādāb al-sāmi', ed. Maḥmūd Taḥḥān (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1403/1983), 2:185.

²² 'Umar b. Muhammad al-Nasafī (d. 537/1142–3), al-Qand fī dhikr 'ulamā' Samarqand, ed. Yūsuf al-Hādī (Tehran: Āyene-ye Mīrāth, 1420/1999), 472; al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 387.

²³ The full work would have included legal, linguistic and other kinds of commentary; see al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:202. The surviving work has been published as Tahdhīb al-āthār wa tafşīl al-thābit 'an Rasūl Allāh min al-akhbār, ed. Mahmūd Muhammad Shākir, 5 vols. (Cairo: Maṭba'at al-Madanī, 1982), idem, Tahdhīb al-āthār: al-juz' al-mafqūd, ed. 'Alī Riḍā b. 'Abdallāh (Beirut: Maktabat al-Ma'mūn li'l-Turāth, 1995).

²⁴ It is difficult to determine whether or not these works were actually collections devoted to authentic hadīths or just utilized the word sahāh in the title. Abū al-Qāsim 'Alī b. al-Muhassin al-Tanūkhī (d. 407/1016), a Shiite hadīth scholar, evidently had a Ṣahāh. Ibn Hazm had a book called al-Jāmi 'fī sahāh al-hadīth bi-ikhtisār al-asānīd, and Abū Muhammad al-Hasan b. Ahmad al-Kūkhmaythanī (?) (d. 491/1098) wrote book of 800 juz's called Bahr al-asānīd fī sahāh al-masānād that was never studied; see al-Dhahabī, Siyar a'lām al-nubalā', ed. Shu'ayb al-Arnā'ūt (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1982), 17:650; idem, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:230 and 4:21.

of Islam, the transmission of hadīths was a means for everyday Muslims to bind themselves to the inspirational authority of the Prophet and incorporate his charisma into their lives.²⁵ Like all early Muslim scholarship, the collection and study of hadīths was not the product of institutions of learning; it was undertaken by devout individuals whose eventual knowledge and pious allure earned them positions of respect and authority in their communities.²⁶ In the late Umayyad and early Abbasid periods, however, a new perspective emerged in Muslim society. A self-aware scholarly and educated class (al-khāssa) appeared which began distinguishing itself from the masses (al-'āmma).²⁷ The great legal theorist Muhammad b. Idrīs al-Shāfi'ī (d. 204/819-20) thus divided knowledge of Islamic law and ritual into that which is demanded of the masses ($(\bar{a}mm)$) and that which is the purview of the scholars ($kh\bar{a}ss$). This bifurcation between laymen and specialists also appears in the introduction to Muslim's Sahih collection. Just as al-Shāfi'ī articulates the domain and duties of a scholarly elite, so too Muslim urges a specialized corps of hadith scholars to study the sunna and guide the regular folk, who should not concern themselves with amassing hadīths beyond a few authentic reports. Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī evinces the same legal paternalism in a letter to the scholars of Mecca explaining the content and structure of his Sunan. He may not, he warns, alert the reader to all the weaknesses of a hadith because "it would be harmful to the masses (al-'āmma)" to reveal minor flaws that might undermine their faith in the report's legal applicability.²⁸

Furthermore, for Muslim and Abū Dāwūd, their authentic collections provided all the legal and ritual knowledge an ordinary Muslim required. Abū Dāwūd states confidently that he knows of "nothing after the Qur'ān more essential for people to learn than this book [his Sunan], and a person would suffer no loss if he did not take in any more knowledge after this book."²⁹ If the masses of Muslims should leave ²⁵ For the function of Prophetic hadīth as a relic of the Prophet, see Eerik Dickenson, "Ibn al-Şalāh al-Shahrazūrī and the Isnād," 481–505.

 $^{^{26}\,}$ This did not mean that one could not earn money studying hadīth. Some scholars asked fees for narrating hadīths, but this was the subject of much controversy in the scholarly community.

²⁷ For more on this development, see Jonathan A.C. Brown, "The Last Days of al-Ghazzālī and the 'āmm, khāşş and khāşş al-khawāşş of the Sufi World," Muslim World 96, no. 1 (2006): 97 ff.

²⁸ Abū Dāwūd, "Risāla," 50.

²⁹ Abū Dāwūd, "Risāla," 46.

the collection and criticism of hadīths to a class of specialists, and this elite had now provided them with definitive references, what use were the activities of other hadīth scholars?

This elitism and definitiveness was directed not only at the Muslim masses, but also at more serious hadīth collectors, whose laxity in criticism and irresponsible leadership had motivated Muslim to write his Sahih in the first place. He believed that those scholars who strove to collect as many hadīths as possible regardless of their quality were doing so only to win the acclaim of the masses, who would express in awe, "How numerous are the hadīths so and so has collected!"30 In the introduction to his Sahīh, Muslim expresses serious concern over would-be hadith scholars who transmitted material of dubious nature to the exclusion of well-known and well-authenticated hadīths. They provide this material to the common people and thus mislead them in their faith. It is this fact, he says, that has made him feel comfortable about producing a work restricted to only authentic material.³¹ It is in fact the duty of those who understand the science of hadith to leave the common folk with trustworthy reports only. To do otherwise would be a sin (\bar{a} thim^{an}), for the masses would believe and act on these hadīths.³²

The şaḥīḥ movement therefore marked a departure from the mainstream transmission-based scholars and from the masses whose amateur hadīth collection was a means of tying themselves to their Prophet. In fact, there were some who opposed the very notion of criticizing isnāds and the narrators in them. Muslim addresses his Kitāb al-tamyīz (Book of Distinguishing) to someone who had been censured for distinguishing between şaḥīḥ and incorrect hadīths, or asserting that "so and so has erred in his narration of a hadīth." Muslim explains that these skeptics accuse those who attempt to distinguish between correct and incorrect narrations of "slandering the righteous forefathers (al-ṣāliḥīn min al-salaf al-mādīn)" and "raising accusations (mutakharris) in things of which they have no knowledge, making claims to knowledge of the unknown (ghayb) which they cannot attain."³³

³⁰ Muslim, Sahīh, 1:22.

³¹ Muslim, Sahīh, 1:6.

³² Muslim, Sahīh, 1:22.

³³ Muslim, Kītāb al-tamyīz, 123. Muslim's younger contemporary al-Tirmidhī also notes objections to critically evaluating narrators; Ibn Rajab, Sharḥ Ilal al-Tirmidhī, ed. Nūr al-Dīn 'Itr ([n.p.]; [n.p.], 1398/1978), 1:43.

Although such an outright rejection of the ethos of the sahīh movement is extreme, it differs only in degree from the practice of traditionists like Ibn Hanbal. Reports traced back to the Prophet, bearing his name and conveying his authority, were prima facie compelling.³⁴ Not even a problematic isnād necessarily undermined the authority the Prophet commanded. Even in legal issues, scholars like Ibn Hanbal and Abū Dāwūd depended on weak or mediocre hadīths, and such hadīths were indispensable in fields like the history of the Prophet's campaigns, contextualizing Qur'ānic verses or recounting the virtues of the Prophet's Companions.³⁵

From a modern perspective it seems difficult to understand why the study or legal use of hadīths did not culminate naturally in the sahīh movement. Why would scholars elaborating law and doctrine, both ostensibly rooted in revelation, rely on questionable reports when they had authentic collections at their disposal? Answering this question a century after the sahih movement, the seminal systematizer of the hadīth tradition, al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī (d. 405/1014), explained that using hadīths with problematic isnāds to interpret law was an established practice going back as far as Abū Hanīfa. If the early Muslims had acted on a report from the Prophet, for example, then the fact that later hadith critics could not find a strong isnād for the report should not affect its legal reliability-practice had already proven its authenticity. Furthermore, different hadīth critics employed different criteria for authenticity; just because one strict scholar considered a narration weak does not mean that a less demanding legal scholar might not find it acceptable.³⁶

³⁴ Abū Zahra, Ibn Hanbal, 243.

³⁵ Ibn Hanbal, for example, is reported not to have demanded full isnāds for hadīths relating to Qur'ānic exegesis, the campaigns of the Prophet (maghāzī) and apocalyptic prophesies (malāḥim); see Ibn Taymiyya, Majmūʿ fatāwā shaykh al-islām Ibn Taymiyya, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad b. Qāsim al-ʿĀṣimī, vol. 13 (Riyadh: Maṭābiʿ al-Riyāḍ, 1382/1963), 346; Ibn Rajab, Sharḥ 'Ilal al-Tirmidhī, 1:74. Other early scholars like Sufyān al-Thawrī (d. 161/778) and Sufyān b. 'Uyayna (d. 196/811) also allowed the use of lackluster ḥadīths in issues not related to obligation and prohibition (al-ḥalāl wa al-ḥarām); al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, al-Kifāya fī maʿnifat uṣūl ʿilm al-riwāya, 1:398.

³⁶ It is important to note that such weak hadīths were problematic from the standpoint of hadīth scholars, not for Abū Ḥanīfa; al-Ḥākim, al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat kitāb al-iklīl, 66–8.

CHAPTER THREE

The Continuity of the Living Isnād

The şahīh movement thus marks a bifurcation in hadīth literature. In the wake of the şahīh collections, particularly the works of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, the study of hadīth diverged into two parallel streams that would clash and interact as the centuries progressed. Their relationship with one another would remain one of tension, sometimes complementary and sometimes destructive, between the transmission of individual hadīths through living isnāds back to the Prophet and the definitive and institutional power acquired by authentic hadīth collections. The canonical destiny of the Şahīḥayn, the two works that inaugurated and epitomized the şahīḥ movement, will be discussed in the following chapters. Here at the genesis of the Şahīḥayn, however, we must not allow the canonical status these works would acquire to distract us from their powerful alter-ego in the hadīth tradition: the continuity of hadīth transmission through the living isnād.

The hadith tradition from which the Sahihayn emerged remained preoccupied with the continued transmission of hadīths through personal study long after al-Bukhārī and Muslim. The strong legal and pietistic attachment to the living isnād of transmitters back to the Prophet continued to drive the hadith tradition, and both the oral transmission of hadiths and the compilation of major non-sahih works continued unabated. Scholars with strong affiliation to legal schools, such as the Shāfi'ī Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī (d. 458/1066), compiled hadīth collections supporting their madhhab's positions. His massive al-Sunan al-kubrā is a landmark in the Shāfi'ī legal school, supporting its detailed case law with a myriad of reports from the Prophet and his Companions. During the fourth/tenth century several Hanafi scholars produced musnad collections of the hadīths used by Abū Hanīfa and his students. Even non-Hanafīs like Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī (d. 430/1038) participated in efforts to find chains going back to the Prophet for Abū Hanīfa's reports.³⁷ The Mālikī scholar Ibn al-Jabbāb (d. 322/934) even created a musnad of Mālik's hadīths.³⁸ of Isfahan compiled a huge collection, his $Mu'_{jam} al-kab\bar{v}$, that amounted to two hundred fascicules (juz').³⁹ He took pride in gathering rare hadīths found nowhere else as well as their relatively short isnāds. Authenticity was not one of his concerns.⁴⁰ 'Alī b. Ḥamshādh of Naysābūr (d. 338/ 950) produced a personal musnad twice as large as al-Ṭabarānī's, and al-Ḥasan b. Muḥammad al-Māsarjisī of Naysābūr (d. 365/976) compiled a musnad of an astounding 1,300 fascicules.⁴¹

The personal collection of hadīths expanded after and even despite the şaḥīḥ movement, with hadīth collectors amassing titanic works in the fourth/tenth century. Abū al-Qāsim Sulaymān al-Ṭabarānī (d. 360/971)

³⁷ See Fuat Sezgin, Geschichte des arabischen Schrifttums, 1:414-6.

³⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:25.

Even as late as the sixth/twelfth century, for some it was the continued transmission of hadīths through living isnāds, not the study of existing hadith collections, that defined the muhaddith. In his history of his native Bayhag and its prominent citizens, for example, Ibn Fundug 'Alī Abū al-Hasan al-Bayhaqī (d. 565/1169-70) states that "a hadīth from the Prophet (s) will be given for each of the scholars and imāms of hadīth."⁴² Even in very brief entries, Ibn Funduq usually provide a narration of a hadith that goes directly back to the Prophet. His focus on living isnāds for individual hadīths dominates his Tārīkh-e Bayhaq; in a history largely devoted to hadīth scholars, only once does he mention an actual hadith collection: the Sunan al-kubrā of the city's towering native doyen, Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī.43 We know that many of the scholars featured in Tārīkh-e Bayhaq, including Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, heard and mastered major hadīth collections such as the Sahīhayn. Yet so dominant is the role of personal transmission from the Prophet in the worldview of Ibn Funduq that the study or communication of such hadīth books goes undocumented. Soon after Ibn Fundug, however, in the early seventh/thirteenth century, producing compilations consisting of hadiths whose isnāds extended back to the Prophet generally ceased and scholarly energy was totally devoted to studying existing collections.

These living isnāds had flourished for so long, however, because they carried significant pietistic weight due to both their Prophetic origin

³⁹ A juz' seems to have been a fascicule of about 20 folios. To contextualize what this meant in terms of size, Jamāl al-Dīn al-Mizzī's (d. 741/1341) well-known biographical dictionary of hadīth transmitters Tahdhīb al-kamāl, whose present-day published form consists of thirty-five volumes and occupies two library shelves, was 250 juz's; see al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 4:194.

⁴⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:85–7.

⁴¹ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:50, 111.

⁴² Ibn Funduq al-Bayhaqī, Tarīkh-e Bayhaq (Tehran: Chāpkhāne-ye Kānūn, 1317/ [1938]), 137.

⁴³ Ibn Funduq, Tārīkh-e Bayhaq, 183.

and their ability to trace Muhammad's authority outward through the venerated heirs to his legacy. The staunchly orthodox seventh/thirteenth-century Sufi 'Umar al-Suhrawardī (d. 632/1234) began most of the chapters of his popular manual on Sufism, 'Awārif al-ma'ārif, with hadīths whose isnāds extend from him to the Prophet. Many of these chains reach the Prophet through major figures in the Sufi tradition, such as Abū al-Qāsim al-Qushayrī (d. 465/1072) and Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī.⁴⁴

This is not to suggest that books played no role in the continuation of living isnāds. A hadīth scholar's book could simply serve as a vehicle for passing on his transmitted material. Hadīth collections like al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ or Mālik's Muwațța' were transmitted from teacher to student in the same manner as individual hadīths. For hadīth scholars, any referral to such books was contingent upon hearing them from a chain of transmitters back to the author. A book could not simply be taken off the shelf and used. Like a single report, only a student copying a text in the presence of his teacher could protect against the vagaries and errors of transmission.⁴⁵ Furthermore, for hadīth scholars this act of becoming part of the text's isnād to the author is what rendered

⁴⁴ Abū Hafş 'Umar b. Muḥammad al-Suhrawardī, 'Awārif al-ma'ārif, ed. Adīb al-Kamdānī and Muḥammad Maḥmūd al-Muṣṭafā, 2 vols. (Mecca: al-Maktaba al-Makkiyya, 1422/2001), 1:49, 60.

⁴⁵ Abū Bakr Ahmad b. Mālik al-Qatī'ī (d. 368/979), who was the principal transmitter of Ibn Hanbal's Musnad from his son 'Abdallāh, was severely criticized for transmitting one of Ibn Hanbal's books from a copy which he had not heard directly from his teacher. Although al-Qatīī had in fact heard this book from his teacher previously, the copy he had used was destroyed in a flood, leaving him with only the other copy. This case demonstrates the sensitivity of hadīth scholars to the question of aural transmission $(sam\bar{a}^{c})$; even a respected scholar who had actually heard a book from his teacher could be criticized for relying on another copy of that same book if he had not received samā' for that copy; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 4:293-4. The scholar who transmitted the Musnad from al-Qațī'ī, al-Hasan b. 'Alī Ibn al-Mudhhib (d. 444/1052-3), was also accused of lax transmission practices. Specifically, he did not have samā' for certain sections of the Musnad. Al-Dhahabī (d. 748/1348) thus explains that, because of this, "material with unreliable texts (matn) and isnāds entered into the Musnad"; al-Dhahabī, Mīzān al-i tidāl fī naqd al-rijāl, ed. Alī Muhammad al-Bajāwī, 4 vols. ([Beirut]: Dār Ihyā' al-Kutub al-'Arabiyya, n.d. Reprint of the Cairo edition published by 'Isā al-Bābī al-Halabī, 1963–4), 1:511–12. Another fourth/tenth-century scholar, the Hanbalī Ibn Batta (d. 387/997), was also criticized for poor samā practices. A scholar who had received Abū al-Qāsim al-Baghawī's (d. 317/929-30) Mu'jam al-sahāba through Ibn Batta refused to grant any hadiths he found in that book a sahih rating because Ibn Batta's isnad to the book's author was broken. This demonstrates the continuity between the isnāds in a book and the isnāds to a book in this period—as al-Dhahabī points out, a problem in the manner in which a book was transmitted affected the reliability of the material in the book; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 10:373.

the book legally compelling. Speaking from this transmission-based perspective, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Khayr al-Ishbīlī (d. 575/1179) said that no one could introduce a statement with the formula "the Prophet said..." without possessing some personal chain of transmission back to the Prophet for that report.⁴⁶ Scholars like al-Qushayrī and al-Iṣbahānī, through whom al-Suhrawardī linked himself by isnād back to the Prophet, had recorded their ḥadīths in book-form. The religious capital gained by providing living isnāds for ḥadīths transmitted through them, however, proved more compelling to al-Suhrawardī than simply citing their books.

The tension between this centrality of living transmission for hadīth books and the emerging independent authority of the sahīh collections had important implications for the development of legal institutions in the fifth/eleventh century. In this period (and later on), both jurists and hadīth scholars found it necessary to respond to the question, "If you find a well-authenticated copy of a sahīh collection, can you act on or transmit its contents?" Summarizing the majority opinion of the transmission-based scholars, Majd al-Dīn Ibn al-Athīr (d. 606/1210) states that in the absence of a formal transmission of the text (samā^c), one should neither narrate any of the book's contents to others nor feel obligated to act on its legal implications.⁴⁷ Without transmission, the text simply had no power.

Scholars articulating legal theory (usul al-fiqh) and the majority of Sunni jurists disagreed totally with this transmission-based stance. Acknowledging the prohibition of the muhaddithun, the great Shāfi'ī jurist and theologian Abū Hāmid al-Ghazālī (d. 505/1111) asserts that one can utilize a hadīth collection even without hearing it through an $isnād.^{48}$ Here he follows his teacher Imām al-Haramayn 'Abd al-Malik al-Juwaynī (d. 478/1085), who states that if a hadīth appears in Ṣahīh

⁴⁶ Muhammad b. Khayr al-Ishbīlī, Fahrasat mā rawāhu 'an shuyūkhihi min al-dawāwān al-muşannafa fī durūb al-'ilm wa anwā' al-ma'ārif (Beirut: al-Maktab al-Tijārī, 1963), 17. On the issue of the orality of knowledge in Islamic civilization and its tension with the written book, see Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge, 13–22; Paul L. Heck, "The Epistemological Problem of Writing in Islamic Civilization: al-Khatīb al-Baġdādī's (d. 463/1071) Taqvīd al-'ilm," Studia Islamica 94 (2002): 85–114, esp. 96.

⁴⁷ Majd al-Dīn al-Mubārak b. Muhammad Ibn al-Athīr, Jāmi al-uşūl fi ahādīth al-rasūl, ed. 'Abd al-Qādir al-Arnā'ūţ, 15 vols. ([Beirut]: Dār al-Mallāh 1389/1969), 1:88.

⁴⁸ Al-Ghazālī qualifies this by demanding that the copy be well-authenticated; Abū Hāmid Muḥammad al-Ghazālī, al-Mankhūl min ta ʿlīqāt al-uṣūl, ed. Muḥammad Ḥasan Hītū ([Damascus]: n.p., [1970]), 269.

CHAPTER THREE

al-Bukhārī one can transmit it, act on it and ask others to do so as well.⁴⁹ This opinion concurs with the Mālikī jurist Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī (d. 474/1081) and the vast majority of jurists and legal theorists.⁵⁰ The legal utility of the Ṣaḥīḥayn as institutions distinct from the continued tradition of ḥadīth transmission will resurface later in discussions of the two works' canonization.

Reality: The Life and Works of al-Bukhārī and Muslim

Although this study focuses on the perception of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as icons, it is important to understand the historical reality from which the Ṣaḥāḥayn romance developed. Because al-Bukhārī and Muslim were eventually canonized, any accurate portrait of them in their own context must depend on the earliest possible sources and on the evidence they themselves left behind. As we will see later in Chapter Seven, it was not until the beginning of the fifth/eleventh century that a canonical culture formed around al-Bukhārī and Muslim. By referring to their own works and consulting early biographies that preceded this shift towards hagiography, we can broadly outline al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's careers as well as the immediate reactions to their work.

Very brief biographies or references to al-Bukhārī and Muslim appear in fourth/tenth century works such as Ibn Abī Ḥātim al-Rāzī's

64

⁴⁹ Imām al-Haramayn 'Abd al-Malik al-Juwaynī, Kītāb al-burhān fī uṣūl al-fiqh, ed. 'Abd al-'Azīm al-Dīb, 2 vols. (Cairo: Dār al-Anṣār, 1400/[1980]), 1:647.

⁵⁰ Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Bājī al-Qurtubī, al-Ishāra fī usūl al-fiqh, ed. 'Ādil Ahmad 'Abd al-Mawjūd and 'Alī Muhammad 'Awad (Riyadh: Maktabat Nizār Mustafā al-Bāz, 1418/1997), 162-3; Speaking on behalf of all jurists (fuqahā'), Ahmad b. Alī Ibn Barhān al-Shāfi'ī (d. 518/1124) repeats al-Ghazālī's above quote. Al-Suyūțī (d. 911/1505) states that the earlier Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī legal theorist Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 418/1027) claimed a consensus on this stance. There is also a report from al-Shāfi'ī himself allowing this; Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Sakhāwī, Fath al-mughīth, ed. 'Alī Husayn 'Alī, 5 vols. (Cairo: Maktabat al-Sunna, 1424/2003), 1:83; Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūțī, Tadrīb al-rāwī fī sharh Taqrīb al-Nawāwī, ed. 'Abd al-Wahhāb 'Abd al-Lațīf, 3rd ed. (Cairo: Maktabat Dār al-Turāth, 1426/2005), 119. Ibn al-Salāh, however, reports that some Mālikī scholars reject narrating from a hadīth book for which one lacks samā'; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqaddimat Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 360; see also Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīḥ al-anzār, 241-2. Al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, in an apparent attempt to bridge the gap between hadīth scholars and jurists, provides no definitive stance in his al-Kīfāya fī ilm al-riwāya. He includes many citations from early masters like Wakī b. Jarrāh and Ibn Sīrīn condemning even reading a book without having heard it from a trustworthy transmitter, but notes that many have allowed this; al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, al-Kifāya fī ma'rifat 'ilm uşūl al-riwāya, 2:358-6.

(d. 327/938) al-farh wa al-ta'dīl, Ibn Hibbān's (d. 354/965) Kitāb almajrūhīn, and Ibn al-Nadīm's (d. after 385-8/995-8) al-Fihrist. More detailed early information for al-Bukhārī's life and career occurs in sources like Ibn 'Adī al-Jurjānī's (d. 365/975-6) two books: al-Kāmil fi du'afā' al-rijāl and Asāmī man rawā 'anhum Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī min mashāyikhihi alladhīna dhakarahum fī Jāmi'ihi al-sahīh. For both al-Bukhārī and Muslim, the Tārīkh Naysābūr of al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī (d. 405/1014) provides our earliest comprehensive source. Although now lost, this work is guoted at length by al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī (d. 463/1071) in his Tārīkh Baghdād and by Shams al-Dīn al-Dhahabī (d. 748/1348) in his Tārīkh al-islām. Fragments of Tārīkh Navsābūr survive in an eighth/fourteenth-century abridgement by Muhammad b. al-Husayn Khalīfa (fl. 720/1320).⁵¹ But since al-Hākim was one of the central figures in the canonization of the Shaykhayn (the 'two shaykhs,' an honorific for al-Bukhārī and Muslim), we must be very wary of relying on his work for reconstructing pre-canonical perceptions of the Sahīhayn. Unfortunately, with regard to Muslim, he represents the only real source for early information. Both Muslim and al-Hākim were citizens of Naysābūr, however, and al-Hākim's father met the great traditionist. We may thus feel comfortable relying on al-Hākim in outlining Muslim's life and work in their native city.

Reality: al-Bukhārī, Ṣāḥib al-Ṣaḥīḥ

Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl b. Ibrāhīm b. al-Mughīra b. Bardizbeh al-Ju'fī al-Bukhārī was born in Bukhara in 194/810. His family were wealthy landowners (dehqān), and his great-grandfather had converted to Islam from Zoroastrianism at the hands of Yamān al-Ju'fī, the Arab governor of the city.⁵² Al-Bukhārī himself lived off properties he rented out on a monthly or yearly basis.⁵³ He started studying ⁵¹ Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, recension and translation by Mohammad b. Hosayn Khalīfe-ye Nīshābūrī, Tārīkh Nīshābūr, ed. Mohammad Redā Shafī'ī Kadkanī (Tehran: Āgāh, 1375/[1996]).

⁵² Abū Ahmad Abdallāh Ibn Adī al-Jurjānī, Asāmī man rawā 'anhum Muhammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī min mashāyikhihi alladhīna dhakarahum fī Jāmi'ihi al-şahīh, ed. Badr b. Muhammad al-'Ammāsh (Medina: Dār al-Bukhārī, 1415/[1994–5]), 59.

⁵³ Al-Dhahabī cites Muḥammad b. Abī Ḥātim al-Warrāq, al-Bukhārī's secretary, as saying that al-Bukhārī had a piece of land that he would rent every year for 700 dirhams. He quotes al-Bukhārī as saying: "I used to acquire (astaghillu) every month

hadīth at a young age, learning from local Bukharan experts, and in his late teens he began writing books on the sayings of the Companions and the Successors. His pilgrimage to Mecca at age sixteen was the beginning of a long career of traveling that connected him to the most vaunted hadīth scholars of his day. In Khurāsān he visited Balkh, Merv and Naysābūr, where he studied with Ishāq b. Rāhawayh (d. 238/ 853). In western Iran he stayed in Rayy and made numerous trips to Baghdad, where he studied with Ibn Hanbal and Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn. In Basra he heard from ʿAlī b. al-Madīnī, who would become one of his main teachers, and Abū ʿAṣim Daḥhāk al-Nabīl (d. 212/827). He also studied in Wāsit, Kufa and Medina. In Mecca he heard from ʿAbdallāh b. al-Zubayr al-Ḥumaydī (d. 219/834), and also went to Egypt and cities like ʿAsqalān and Ḥimṣ in greater Syria. There is some debate on whether he visited the cities of upper Mesopotamia (al-Jazīra),⁵⁴ and it is unclear whether he reached Damascus.⁵⁵

In his Tarīkh Naysābūr, al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī reports that al-Bukhārī arrived in Naysābūr for the last time in 250/864–5. Later Muslim sources convey the impression that he quickly gained the enmity of Naysābūr's senior ḥadīth scholar, Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā al-Dhuhlī (d. 258/873), who had him expelled from the city due to his statement that the physical recitation (lafz) of the Qur'ān was created. Indeed, we do know from Ibn Abī Ḥātim al-Rāzī's (d. 327/938) al-Jarḥ wa al-ta'dīl, our earliest source on al-Bukhārī, that al-Dhuhlī publicly condemned al-Bukhārī for his beliefs about the lafz of the Qur'ān.⁵⁶ Furthermore, our sources are also unanimous that al-Dhuhlī used this as a pretext to demand al-Bukhārī's expulsion from Naysābūr.

Early information from al-Hākim and Ibn 'Adī, however, suggests that the tension between al-Bukhārī and al-Dhuhlī was multifaceted ⁵⁰⁰ dirhams, and I spent it all in the quest for knowledge"; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:263–4; Ibn Ḥajar, Hady al-sārī, ed. Muḥammad Fu'ād 'Abd al-Bāqī and 'Abdallāh b. 'Ubaydallāh b. Bāz (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Tlmiyya, 1418/1997), 664.

⁵⁴ Al-Subkī cites his teacher al-Mizzī's rejection of al-Hākim's claim that al-Bukhārī had entered the Jazīra and heard from people like Ismā'īl b. 'Abdallāh b. Zurāra al-Raqqī; Tāj al-Dīn 'Abd al-Wahhāb b. 'Alī al-Subkī, Tabaqāt al-shāfi'iyya al-kubrā, ed. Maḥmūd Muḥammad al-Ṭanāḥī and 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Muḥammad al-Halw, 10 vols. ([Cairo]: 'Īsā al-Bābī al-Halabī, 1383–96/1964–76), 2:214.

⁵⁵ Ibn 'Asākir lists al-Bukhārī in his history of Damascus. For more on al-Bukhārī's teachers, see Fuat Sezgin, Buhârî'nin Kaynakları (Istanbul: Ibrahim Horoz Basimevi, 1956); A.J. Arberry, "The Teachers of Al-Bukhārī," Islamic Quarterly 11 (1967): 34–49.

⁵⁶ 'Abd al-Rahmān Ibn Abī Hātim al-Rāzī, al-Jarh wa al-ta'dīl, 6 vols. (Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-ʿUthmāniyya, 1959), 4:1:182–3.

and grew over some time. The earliest detailed report mentioning the lafz scandal, given by Ibn 'Adī, includes no mention of al-Dhuhlī or of al-Bukhārī's expulsion. It certainly portrays al-Bukhārī falling into disfavor with hadīth scholars due to his views on the Qur'ān, but concludes with him retiring to his residence in Naysābūr, not leaving the city. This is not surprising, as al-Hākim states that al-Bukhārī's last stay in Naysābūr was lengthy, lasting five years.⁵⁷

Ibn 'Adī furnishes another reason for al-Dhuhlī's animosity towards al-Bukhārī. He reports third-hand from al-Dhuhlī's son, Ḥaykān b. Muḥammad al-Dhuhlī⁵⁸ (d. 267/881), that he asked his father:

What is with you and this man—meaning Muhammad b. Ismā'īl—when you are not one of those from whom he transmits (wa lasta min rijālihi fī al-'îlm)? He said, "I saw him in Mecca and he was following Shamkhaḍa" (Ibn 'Adī: Shamkhaḍa is a Kufan Qadarite). When I reached [al-Bukhārī], he said, "I entered Mecca and I didn't know anyone from among the hadīth scholars, while Shamkhaḍa knew them, so I would follow him so that he would acquaint me with them; so what is the shame in that?"⁵⁹

Interestingly, with the exception of the encyclopedic Ibn 'Asākir (d. 571/1176), Ibn 'Adī's report appears in none of the later sources, and there is no evidence that Ibn 'Adī's younger contemporary al-Ḥākim took it into consideration in his discussion of al-Bukhārī's relationship with al-Dhuhlī.⁶⁰ Since later apologists for al-Bukhārī never acknowledged the report, and it was the lafz scandal and not this accusation which attracted detractors, we have no reason to doubt the provenance and veracity of Ḥaykān's story. It thus seems likely that the lafz incident was not the immediate cause of al-Dhuhlī's dislike for al-Bukhārī or of the latter's expulsion. It was merely a pretext, the last episode in an aversion that al-Dhuhlī had developed for al-Bukhārī earlier during his lengthy tenure in Naysābūr.

After his consequent expulsion from Naysābūr, al-Bukhārī returned to his native Bukhara in what would prove to be the last year of his life. He was soon driven from there as well. The Ṭāhirid amīr of Bukhara, Khālid b. Aḥmad (coincidentally also surnamed al-Dhuhlī), entertained many ḥadīth scholars, such as Muḥammad b. Naṣr al-Marwazī (d. 294/

⁵⁷ As cited by al-Dhahabī; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:250.

⁵⁸ Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 14:220.

⁵⁹ Ibn 'Adī, Asāmī, 66-7.

⁶⁰ Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, ed. Muḥibb al-Dīn Abū Sa'īd 'Umar al-'Amrawī, 80 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1418/1997), 52:95.

906), as guests at his court.⁶¹ He even ordered the hadīth scholar Naṣr b. Aḥmad al-Kindī 'Naṣrak' (d. 293/905–6) to come to his court and make him a musnad.⁶² When the amīr asked al-Bukhārī to provide his children with a private reading of the Ṣaḥīḥ and the Tārīkh al-kabīr, the scholar refused to extend him preferential treatment. Using al-Bukhārī's controversial stance on the Qur'ān, the amīr ordered his expulsion from Bukhara. Tired and intimidated, al-Bukhārī passed through the city of Nasaf before dying in the village of Khartank a few miles from Samarqand.⁶³

Al-Bukhārī's early works consisted of musings on the sayings of the Companions and the Successors. These writings later matured into a much more ambitious project. He began his al-Tārīkh al-kabīr (The Great History) while a young man in Medina. The extant work is a massive biographical dictionary of over 12,300 entries.⁶⁴ He is reported to have revised it at least three times over the course of his life, as Christopher Melchert corroborates in his analysis of the Tārīkh.⁶⁵ Al-Bukhārī consistently provides neither full names nor evaluations of the persons in question, focusing instead on locating each subject within the vast network of hadīth transmission. The Tārīkh seems to have no connection to the Sahīh.66 Al-Bukhārī produced another smaller dictionary of hadīth transmitters, one large book of weak transmitters (Kitāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr, now lost) as well as a smaller book on weak narrators.⁶⁷ In addition, he wrote several smaller topical works, such as his Khalq af 'āl al-'ibād (On the Createdness of Men's Actions) and Kitāb raf ' al-yadayn fī al-salāt (Book on Raising One's Hands in Prayer).

⁶¹ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 12:225–6.

⁶² Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 8:310–11 (biography of Khālid b. Yaḥyā); Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 13:48.

⁶³ J. Robson, "al-Bukhārī," EI².

⁶⁴ Melchert, "Bukhārī and Early Hadīth Criticism," Journal of the American Oriental Society, 121, no. 1 (2001): 8. Oddly, extant copies of al-Tārīkh al-kabīr feature no female transmitters. Al-Hākim, however, quotes Abū 'Alī al-Husayn al-Māsarjisī as saying that the book contains approximately forty thousand (sic!) "men and women." It thus seems likely that at some crucial point in the transmission of our extant manuscript tradition, a last volume containing women was lost. See al-Hākim, *al-Madkhal ilā al-ṣaḥī*h, ed. Rabīť b. Hādī 'Umayr al-Madkhalī (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1404/1984), 111.

⁶⁵ See Melchert, "Bukhārī and Early Ḥadīth Criticism," 9; al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:7.

⁶⁶ Melchert, "Bukhārī and Early Hadīth Criticism," 12.

⁶⁷ Al-Bukhārī's Tārīkh al-ausat and his Kitāb al-du afā' al-saghīr have both been published in several editions. Al-Dhahabī notes his Kitāb al-du afā' al-kabīr, now lost; al-Dhahabī, Mīzān al-i tidāl, 2:570, 598; 3:311.

Some reports indicate that al-Bukhārī produced an ilal book as well as a large musnad, both now lost.⁶⁸

a. The Ṣaḥīḥ

Al-Bukhārī's Sahīh, actually titled al-Jāmi' al-musnad al-sahīh al-mukhtasar min umūr Rasūl Allāh wa sunanihi wa ayyāmihi (The Abridged Authentic Compilation of the Affairs of the Messenger of God, his Sunna and Campaigns),⁶⁹ was a mammoth expression of his personal method of hadīth criticism and legal vision. It covers the full range of legal and ritual topics, but also includes treatments of many other issues such as the implication of technical terms in hadith transmission and the authority of āhād hadīths (reports transmitted by only a few chains of transmission) in law.⁷⁰ The Sahūh consists of ninety-seven chapters (kutub, sing. $kit\bar{a}b$, each divided into subchapters (abwāb, sing. $b\bar{a}b$). The subchapter titles indicate the legal implication or ruling the reader should derive from the subsequent hadīths, and often include a short comment from the author.⁷¹ Such short legal discussions often feature hadīths not naming al-Bukhārī's immediate source (termed ta'līq or hadīth mu'allaq) or a report from a Companion for elucidation. Al-Bukhārī often repeats a Prophetic tradition, but through different narrations and in separate chapters. Opinions have varied about the exact number of 'hadīths' in the Sahīh, depending on how one defines 'hadīth': e.g. as a 'tradition' (a saying attributed to the Prophet) or a 'narration' (one version of that saying narrated by a specific isnad). Generally, experts have placed the number of full-isnād narrations at 7,397, with Ibn Hajar (d. 852/1449) counting a total of 9,082 including all the incomplete isnāds. Of these around 4,000 are repetitions, placing the number of Prophetic traditions

⁶⁸ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 679.

⁶⁹ Abū Naşr Ahmad al-Kalābādhī, Rijāl Şahīh al-Bukhārī, ed. 'Abdallāh al-Laythī, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, 1407/1987), 1:23. For a discussion of the title of the Şahīh, see 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda, Tahqīq ismay al-Ṣahīhayn wa ism Jāmiʿ al-Tirmidhī (Aleppo: Maktab al-Maţbūʿāt al-Islāmiyya, 1414/1993), 9–12.

⁷⁰ Ibn Hajar al-'Asqalānī, Fath al-bārī sharh Şahīh al-Bukhārī, ed. 'Abd al-'Azīz b. 'Abdallāh b. Bāz and Muḥammad Fu'ād 'Abd al-Bāqī, 15 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1418/1997), 1:191–2; Şahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-'ilm, bāb 4; and Fath al-bārī, 13:302, #7267; Şahīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb akhbār al-āḥād, bāb 6.

⁷¹ The best discussion to date of the nature of al-Bukhārī's legal commentary is Mohammad Fadel's "Ibn Ḥajar's Hady al-Sārī: A Medieval Interpretation of the Structure of al-Bukhārī's al-Jāmi' al-Ṣaḥīḥ: Introduction and Translation," Journal of Near Eastern Studies 54 (1995): 161–197.

between 2,602 (Ibn Hajar's lowest count) and the more widely accepted figure of 3,397–4,000.⁷²

Unlike Muslim, al-Bukhārī provides no methodological introduction to his Sahīh. As we shall see in Chapter Five, later scholars spilled a great deal of ink attempting to reconstruct his requirements (rasm or shurūt) for authenticity (sihha) from his Sahīh and al-Tārīkh al-kabīr. Except for some statements gleaned from his extant works, however, our understanding of al-Bukhārī's methods depends totally on either these later analyses or on statements attributed to al-Bukhārī in later sources.⁷³ It is generally believed that in his Sahīh al-Bukhārī followed his teacher 'Alī b. al-Madīnī in requiring some proof that at each link in the isnād the two transmitters had to have narrated hadīths to one another in person at least once. Later scholars like al-Qādī 'Iyād b. Mūsā (d. 544/1149) verified this by locating an occurrence of "he narrated to us (haddathanā)" between every two transmitters at each link in al-Bukhārī's isnāds.⁷⁴ This is crucial for isnāds in which transmis-

⁷² Abd al-Rauf, "Hadīth Literature," 274–5; Ibn Kathīr Ismā'īl b. Abī Hafş (d. 774/ 1373), al-Bā'ith al-hathīth sharh Ikhtişār 'ulūm al-hadīth, ed. Ahmad Muhammad Shākir (Cairo: Dār al-Turāth, 1423/2003), 22. Ibn al-Şalāh states that al-Bukhārī's book contains 4,000 Prophetic traditions (uşūl); Ibn al-Şalāh, Siyānat Şahīţh Muslim min al-ikhlāl wa al-ghalat, ed. Muwaffaq b. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Qādir (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1408/1987), 101–2; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 648–53; Mullā Khāţir, 41.

⁷³ An example of al-Bukhārī revealing his methods would be his statement in Kītāb raf ^c al-yadayn that one narration adding a phrase in the matn of a hadīth (literal matn addition) is allowed if the narration is authentic (idhā thabata); al-Bukhārī, Kītāb raf ^c al-yadayn fī al-ṣalāt, ed. Badī al-Dīn al-Rāshidī (Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 1416/1996), 131–3.

⁷⁴ The most exhaustive work on this issue from a medieval Muslim scholar is Muhammad b. 'Umar Ibn Rushayd's (d. 721/1321) al-Sanan al-abyan wa'l-mawrid al-am'an fi al-muhākama bayn al-imāmayn fi al-sanad al-mu'an'an, ed. Muhammad Habīb b. Khawja (Tunis: Mațba'at al-Dār al-Tūnisiyya, 1397/1977), esp. 22–32. The first scholar known to have attributed this stance to al-Bukhārī and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī was al-Qādī 'Iyād.; al-Qādī Iyād. b. Mūsā, Ikmāl al-mu lim bi-fawā'id Muslim, ed. Yahyā Ismā'īl, 9 vols. (Manşūra, Egypt: Dār al-Wafā', 1419/1998), 1:164. See also, Abū al-Husayn 'Alī b. Muhammad Ibn al-Qattān al-Fāsī (d. 628/1231), Bayān al-wahm wa al-īhām al-wāqi'ayn fi kitāb al-Ahkām, ed. al-Husayn Āyat Saʿīd, 5 vols. (Riyadh: Dār al-Tayba, 1418/1997), 2:576-7. Several modern Muslim scholars have devoted extensive studies to the question of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's stances on hadīths transmitted by 'an. In his innovative work Ijmā' al-muhaddithīn 'alā 'adam ishtirāt al-'ilm bi'l-samā' fī al-hadīth al-mu'an'an bayn al-muta āsinīn, al-Sharīf Hātim al-'Awnī argues that al-Bukhārī never actually required proof of personal contact, but that this had been incorrectly inferred by al-Qadī Iyad, whose conclusion about al-Bukhārī's methods were parroted uncritically by virtually all later scholars of hadīth; al-Sharīf Hātim al-'Awnī, Ijmā' al-muhaddithīn 'alā 'adam ishtirāt al-'ilm bi'l-samā' fī al-hadīth al-mu'an'an bayn al-muta'āşirīn (Beirut: Dār 'Ālam al-Fawā'id, 1421/2001). See also, Khālid Mansur 'Abdallāh al-Durays, Mawqif al-imāmayn al-Bukhārī wa Muslim min ishtirāt al-luqyā wa al-samā' fī al-sanad al-mu'an an bayn al-muta'āşirīn (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd and Sharikat al-Riyād, 1417/1997).

sion is recorded by the vague phrase "from/on the authority of (an)." Unlike the transmission terms "he narrated to us" or "he reported to us (akhbaranā)," "from/on the authority of" could be used by someone who never met the transmitter of the hadīth in question. This means that in al-Bukhārī's Sahīh any isnād with "from/on the authority of (an) so and so" in the isnād is theoretically equivalent to "so and so narrated to us directly."

b. Legal Identity and Method

Al-Bukhārī never explicitly adhered to any of the nascent schools of law, though he was eventually claimed by all four madhhabs. He studied with several scholars closely associated with al-Shāfi'ī, like al-Ḥusayn al-Karābīsī (d. 245/859) and Abū Thawr (d. 240/854). Although al-Bukhārī never narrates ḥadīths through al-Shāfi'ī, the Shāfi'ī biographers Abū 'Āṣim Muḥammad al-'Abbādī (d. 458/1066) and Tāj al-Dīn al-Subkī (d. 771/1370) use these scholarly links to tie al-Bukhārī to the school's founder.⁷⁵ Ibn Abī Ya'lā al-Ḥanbalī (d. 526/1131–2) claims al-Bukhārī was a Ḥanbalī because he transmitted ḥadīths and legal rulings from Ibn Ḥanbal, and some Mālikīs have considered him one of their own because he transmitted the Muwațța'. Even later Ḥanafīs claim al-Bukhārī, since they argue that one of his teachers, Ibn Rāhawayh, was Ḥanafī.⁷⁶

An examination of al-Bukhārī's Sahā reveals that he was an independent scholar unconstrained by any particular school.⁷⁷ In contrast to all four Sunni schools of law, he allows those who have had sexual intercourse (junub) during the Ramadān fast to explate their sin by performing charity but does not require them to repeat the day of fasting. In another break with the schools, he allows someone who has had intercourse and not performed ablutions to read the Qur'ān.⁷⁸ He

⁷⁵ Abū ʿĀşim Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-ʿAbbādī, Kitāb Ṭabaqāt al-Fuqahā' aš-Šāfi ʿiyya, ed. Gösta Vitestam (Leiden: Brill, 1964), 53–4; al-Subkī, Ṭabaqāt al-shāfi ʿiyya al-kubrā, 2:214.

⁷⁶ Abū al-Husayn Muhammad Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Tabaqāt al-hanābila, ed. Abū Hāzim Usāma b. Hasan and Abū al-Zahrā' Hāzim 'Alī Bahjat, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1997), 1:254–9; al-Husaynī 'Abd al-Majīd Hāshim, al-Imām al-Bukhārī muhaddith^{em} wa faqīh^{em} (Cairo: Mişr al-'Arabiyya, n.d.), 167.

 $^{^{77}}$ J. Robson agrees in his entry on al-Bukhārī; see J. Robson, "al-Bukhārī, Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl," EI^2 .

⁷⁸ Hāshim, al-Imām al-Bukhārī muḥaddith^{an} wa faqīh^{an}, 190-1.

also permits reading the Qur'ān in the bathroom, declares 'umra to be mandatory just like hajj, and allows women not to veil themselves (ihtijāb) in the company of slaves.⁷⁹

Al-Bukhārī obliquely sets forth his legal methodology in the penultimate chapter of the Sahīh, the Kitāb al-i'tisām bi'l-kitāb wa al-sunna (the Book of Clinging to [God's] Book and the Sunna).⁸⁰ From the author's often detailed subchapter headings and the Prophetic and Companion traditions that he includes, the reader gleans a minimalist approach to law closely tied to the revealed sources. The Prophet was sent with the totality of guidance to mankind, and adhering to his message is the key to salvation. The precedent in the community, from the time of the first caliph Abū Bakr, is not to deviate from the Prophet's sunna. The next subchapter, however, is entitled "Concerning what is hated about asking too many questions," including a hadith in which the Prophet states that the believer's greatest crime is to inquire about something previously unmentioned and thus cause its prohibition for the whole community.⁸¹ Al-Bukhārī's opposition to the use of excessive legal reasoning and speculation manifests itself in his subchapters on "the condemnation of ra'y and excessive $qiv\bar{a}s$ (takalluf al-qivas)" and how the Prophet himself would not answer a question until God had revealed the answer to him.⁸² Al-Bukhārī does, however, allow limited analogical reasoning based on the Prophet's answer to a man who refused to acknowledge a black child to whom his wife had recently given birth. The Prophet enlightens the man by asking him rhetorically if his camels are always the same color as their parents.⁸³

In the conflict between the ahl al-hadīth and the ahl al-ra'y, al-Bukhārī clearly identified himself with the transmission-based jurists. In the $Sah\bar{u}h$, he uses his chapter headings and brief comments to differ on

72

⁷⁹ 'Abd al-Khāliq 'Abd al-Ghanī, al-Imām al-Bukhārī wa Ṣaḥīḥuhu (Jedda: Dār al-Manāra, 1405/1985), 146.

⁸⁰ For an in-depth discussion of this chapter, see Scott C. Lucas, "The Legal Principles of Muhammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī and their Relationship to Classical Salafi Islam," Islamic Law and Society 13, no. 3 (2006): 291 ff.

⁸¹ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 13:328; Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-i'tiṣām bi'l-kitāb wa al-sunna, bāb 3 / #7289.

⁸² Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 13:349–359; Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-i'tişām bi'l-kitāb wa al-sunna, bāb 7–8.

⁸³ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 13:366–7, #7314. This section is entitled bāb man shabbaha $asl^{am} ma {l\bar{u}m}^{am} bi-asl^{im} mubīn wa qad bayyana al-Nabī (s) hukmahumā li-yafhama al-sā'il (He$ who compares a known basis (asl) to another clear basis (asl mubīn), and the Prophet(s) has clarified their ruling so that one can understand).

twenty-seven occasions with "a certain person ($ba \ d \ d - n\bar{as}$)." Fourteen of these instances occur in a chapter devoted solely to rebutting the use of legal devices (hiyal) employed predominantly by Hanafīs to circumvent the literal requirements of their school's law.⁸⁴ Al-Bukhārī condemns hiyal using the famous hadīth that all deeds are judged by their intention.⁸⁵ In this al-Bukhārī was following the precedent of transmission-based jurists such as Ibn Hanbal and Ibn al-Mubārak (d. 181/797), who vehemently rejected the use of hiyal.⁸⁶ Since the positions he rejects are associated with the Hanafī school, it seems almost certain that al-Bukhārī was referring to Abū Hanīfa. Al-Bukhārī, for example, disagrees with the well-known Hanafī laxity on defining intoxicants: he considers tilā' (reduced grape juice) to be a type of wine (nabīdh), while Hanafīs do not.⁸⁷

Outside his $Sah\bar{n}h$, however, al-Bukhārī's disagreement with Abū Hanīfa and the ahl al-ra'y manifests itself in virulent contempt. He introduces his Kitāb raf ' al-yadayn fī al-şalāt as "a rebuttal of he (man) who rejected raising the hands to the head before bowing" in prayer and "misleads the non-Arabs on this issue (abhama 'alā al-'ajam fī dhālika)... turning his back on the sunna of the Prophet and those who have

⁸⁴ 'Abd al-Ghanī al-Ghunaymī al-Maydānī al-Dimashqī (d. 1298/1880–1), Kashf al-iltibās 'ammā awrada al-imām al-Bukhārī 'alā ba'd al-nās, ed. 'Abd al-Fattāh Abū Ghudda (Aleppo: Maktab al-Maţbū'āt al-Islāmiyya, 1414/1993), 19; see Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 12:404–425.

⁸⁵ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 12:405; Ṣaḥīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-hiyal, bāb 1. For a recent discussion of hiyal in the Hanafī school and Islamic legal thought in general, see Satoe Horii, "Reconsideration of Legal Devices (hiyal) in Islamic Jurisprudence: The Hanafīs and their 'Exits' (makhārij)," Journal of Islamic Law and Society, 9, no. 3 (2002): 312–357. The author describes how the Hanafī tradition used hiyal to provide people means by which to escape the more difficult sanctions of law in everyday life. It is also probable, in my opinion, that the emphasis that the early Hanafīs placed on the formal structure of qiyās, where the ruling must inhere whenever its immediate cause (illa) appears, made hiyal attractive. They allowed scholars to preserve the logical continuity of the qiyās system while avoiding some of its admittedly unjust or unfairly difficult results; a scholar could maintain the system of qiyās by acknowledging that the ruling inhered in the case, but then use a hīla to deal more justly with it. The two manners in which hiyal were misunderstood by their opponents, that they were a means to cheat God's law or that they represented inappropriate rational gymnastics, would both have offended al-Bukhārī.

⁸⁶ Al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:404 (biography of Abū Ḥanīfa), where Ibn al-Mubārak is quoted as saying, "Whoever looks into the Book of hiyal of Abū Ḥanīfa has made permissible the impermissible and forbidden what is allowed." See also Christopher Melchert, "The Adversaries of Ahmad ibn Ḥanbal," Arabica 44 (1997): 236.

⁸⁷ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 11:696, #6685; Şahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-aymān wa al-nudhūr, bāb 21.

CHAPTER THREE

followed him...." He did this "out of the constrictive rancor (haraja) of his heart, breaking with the practice (sunan) of the Messenger of God (s), disparaging what he transmitted out of arrogance and enmity for the people of the sunan; for heretical innovation in religion (bid'a) had tarnished his flesh, bones and mind and made him revel in the non-Arabs' deluded celebration of him."88 The object of this derision becomes clear later in the text, when al-Bukhārī includes a report of Ibn al-Mubārak praving with Abū Hanīfa. When Ibn al-Mubārak raises his hands a second time before bowing, Abū Hanīfa asks sarcastically, "Aren't you afraid you'll fly away? (mā khashīta an tatīra?)," to which Ibn al-Mubārak replies, "I didn't fly away the first time so I won't the second."89

c. Al-Bukhārī and the Controversy over the Created Wording of the Qur'ān

In light of al-Bukhārī's strong identification with the ahl al-hadīth, it seems difficult to believe that radical members of that camp ostracized him for his stance on the Qur'an. The issue of the createdness of the Our³ān had begun in the early Abbasid period, when a group of Muslim rationalists referred to by transmission-based scholars and later Sunni orthodoxy as the Jahmiyya began asserting that God did not speak in the anthropomorphic sense of the word, for this would necessitate His having organs of speech. Since this would belittle a power beyond the scope of human comparison, the Jahmiyya said that the Qur'an and other instances of God's speech (such as His speaking to Moses) were sounds that He created in order to convey His will to His domain.90 These rationalists similarly opposed other manifestations of anthropomorphism, such as the notion that God will be seen by the believers on the Day of Judgment or that He sits on a throne or descends to the lowest heavens at night.⁹¹ They also rejected ideas equally incompatible with a rationalist demeanor, like the punishment of the grave ('adhāb al-qabr).⁹² However, Muslims who maintained that the community should rely on the literal revelation received from the Prophet and his interpretation of the Qur'ān as preserved in the sunna of the early Muslim community saw this rationalist movement as an attack on the textual authenticity of Islam. These traditionalists, who believed that one should not discuss these issues speculatively, opposed all instances of what they saw as the rationalist denial of God's attributes (ta'tal). Relying on the text of the Qur'ān, hadīths and the stances of prominent members of the early community, books such as Ahmad b. Hanbal's al-Radd 'alā al-zanādiqa wa al-jahmiyya (Refutation of the Heretics and the Jahmiyya) asserted that God does in fact speak, that the Qur'ān is one of His uncreated attributes, that He does mount His throne and that the believers will receive the beatific vision.

⁸⁸ Al-Bukhārī, Kītāb raf 'al-yadayn fī al-şalāt, 20. This virulence is absent in Bukhārī's chapters on this issue in his Sahih; see Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bari, 2:277-84. Note that the above-mentioned edition of this text contains an error on this page; the editor read as "mustahiqq"" what can only be "mustakhiff"."

 ⁸⁹ Al-Bukhārī, Kītāb raf ^c al-yadayn, 107.
 ⁹⁰ Wilferd Madelung, "The Origins of the Controversy Concerning the Creation of the Koran," Orientalia Hispanica Volumen 1, ed. J.M. Barral (Leiden: Brill, 1974), 506. For interesting discussions of the debate over the nature of the Qur'an and its lafz from within the Muslim tradition, see al-Subkī, Tabaqāt al-shāfi iyya, 2:117-20 (biography of al-Husayn b. 'Alī al-Karābīsī); Ibn al-Qayyim al-Jawziyya, Mukhtaşar al-şawā'iq al-mursala, 2 vols. in 1 (Cairo: Matba'at al-Madanī, [n.d.]), 2:304-17; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:223; Abd al-Khāliq Abd al-Ghanī, Āl-Imām al-Bukhārī wa Ṣaḥīḥuhu, 156-67.

The traditionalists' objections were not simply academic; they equated the assertion that the Qur'ān was created with calling God Himself created. Yaḥyā b. Sa'īd al-Qaṭṭān asked rhetorically of those who said the Qur'ān is created, "How do you create (taṣna ʿun) [the Qur'ānic verse] 'say He is the One God (qul huwa Allāh aḥad; Qur'ān 112:1),' how do you create [the verse] 'indeed I am Allāh, there is no deity besides Me (innanī anā Allāh, lā ilāh illā anā; Qur'ān 14:20).' "⁹³ Moreover, the Qur'ān had become a bulwark of social capital in the emerging civilization of Islam. When a famous Ḥanafī judge, 'Īsā b. Abān (d. 221/836), who upheld the createdness of the Qur'ān, was presiding over a dispute between a Muslim and a Jew, he asked the Muslim to swear "By God besides whom there is no other deity (wa'llāh alladhī lā ilāha illā huwa)." His opponent objected, demanding that the judge make him swear by the real Creator, since these words were in the Qur'ān, which Muslims claimed was created.⁹⁴ The circulation of this story among traditionalists

⁹¹ There is some indication that the third caliph to preside over the milma, al-Wāthiq, added a denial of the beatific vision to the agenda of the inquisition; Abū Zahra, Ibn Hanbal, 143.

⁹² Madelung, "The Origins of the Controversy Concerning the Creation of the Koran," 510. See also Martin Hinds, "Miḥna," *EI*².

⁹³ Al-Bukhārī, Khalq af ʿāl al-ʿibād, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Umayra (Riyadh: Dār al-Maʿārif al-Suʿūdiyya, 1398/1978), 33; cf. Josef van Ess, "Ibn Kullāb et la Miḥna," Arabica 37 (1990): 198.

⁹⁴ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 11:160 (biography of 'Īsā b. Abān). For another reference to the controversy over this type of verse, see al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:195 (biography of al-Nasā'ī).

indicates that they felt that a belief in the createdness of the Qur'ān threatened its paramount role in society.

In the early third/ninth century, however, the Abbasid caliph al-Ma'mūn (d. 218/833) instituted a purge of these traditionalist beliefs from the empire's corps of judges. His Inquisition (mihna) was directed at those people who claimed to be the upholders of the Prophet's sunna and defenders of the community's unified identity, but, he claimed, were in reality demeaning God's greatness by putting the Qur'an on par with His essence. The rationalists behind this movement, including many of the Hanafi judges of Baghdad and Samarra, rejected the idea upheld by the traditionalists that the Qur'ān was co-eternal with God, for that would mean that God is not the only eternal being.⁹⁵ Many of these rationalists were primarily concerned with polemics against Christian scholars who attempted to corner Muslims into accepting the divine nature of Christ by comparing him with the Qur'an. If God states in the Qur'an that Jesus is the Word of God, just like the holy book itself, and that book is uncreated and co-eternal with God, then is Jesus not also co-eternal with God?⁹⁶ Is it so absurd, then, to believe that in the beginning he was the Word, and that the Word was with God? In addition to rejecting the anthropomorphic claim that God spoke in the literal sense, these rationalists thus also insisted that the Qur'ān was created (muhdath) as opposed to being an eternal attribute (qadīm) of God.

The grueling torture, imprisonment or humiliation of prominent and widely respected hadīth scholars such as Ahmad b. Hanbal, Yahyā b. Ma'īn and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī in the Baghdad Miḥna left an enduring and bitter impression on the hadīth scholar community. Although the inquisition conducted by al-Ma'mūn and his two successors did not have as powerful a presence in Khurāsān and Transoxiana, it did increase the enmity between the ahl al-hadīth scholars and the Jahmī/Mu'tazilite/Ḥanafī rationalists who had prosecuted it. During the lifetime of al-Bukhārī and Muslim and in the decades after their deaths, the question of the nature of the Qur'ān in particular remained a touchstone for the resentment between these groups. In Iraq, Ibn Qutayba (d. 276/889) wrote al-Ikhtilāf fi al-lafz wa al-radd 'alā al-Jahmiyya wa al-mushabbiha (Disagreement over the Lafz and the Rebuttal of the Jahmiyya and the Anthropomorphists),⁹⁷ and Ibn Abī Ḥātim also wrote a book refuting the Jahmiyya.⁹⁸ Even as late a scholar as al-Ṭabarānī (d. 360/971) wrote a book condemning those espousing a belief in the created Qur'ān.⁹⁹ In Naysābūr, when someone who upheld the createdness of the Qur'ān arrived in town, the ḥadīth scholar Abū al-'Abbās al-Sarrāj (d. 313/925) ordered the people in the market to curse him, and they complied.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁵ Madelung, "The Origins of the Controversy Concerning the Creation of the Koran," 516; Hinds, "Miḥna"; Melchert, "The Adversaries of Aḥmad Ibn Hanbal," 238–9. For a critique of current scholarship on the miḥna, see Lucas, Constructive Critics, 192–202.

⁹⁶ Abū Zahra, Ibn Ḥanbal, 64; Madelung, "The Origins of the Controversy Concerning the Creation of the Koran," 517. Madelung believes that the Muslim rationalist argument that the traditionalists were unintentionally abetting their Christian adversaries was more of an excuse for their attacks on the ahl al-ḥadīth. Muḥammad Abū Zahra, however, holds that the Muʿtazila and al-Maʾmūn were in fact sincerely concerned with defending Islamic doctrine from Christian and other rationalist opponents. There is also an interesting story about the distinction between muhdath (created) and qadīm (eternal) being integral to an interfaith discussion between Hārūn al-Rāshīd and the sovereign of India; see Ibn Ḥajar, Fatḥ al-bārī, 13:340.

The tremendous tension surrounding this issue led the most conservative section of the traditionalists to declare anathema anyone who asserted that the wording of the Qur'ān (lafz), the physical sound of the book being recited or its written form on a page, was created. This most intolerant end of the traditionalist spectrum, what George Makdisi called "ultra-conservatives,"¹⁰¹ included the standard portrayal of Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal, Abū Ja'far Muḥammad Ibn al-Akhram (d. 301/913–4), Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā al-Dhuhlī of Naysābūr and others. These über-Sunnis repudiated any traditionists who did not declare that the Qur'ān was God's eternal speech and utterly increate. Those who simply proclaimed that the Qur'ān was God's speech and then were silent, even those like 'Alī b. al-Madīnī who collapsed under the weight of the Inquisition, were dubbed "Those who stopped short (wāqifyya)" and often equated with Jahmīs.¹⁰² As Christopher Melchert

⁹⁷ Al-Bukhārī is not mentioned in this book, although Ibn Hanbal is; see Ibn Qutayba, al-Ikhtilāf fi al-lafz wa al-radd 'alā al-jahmiyya wa al-mushabbiha, ed. Muḥammad Zāhid al-Kawtharī (Cairo: Maktabat al-Sa'āda, 1349/[1930]).

⁹⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:34.

⁹⁹ Abū Zakariyyā Yaḥyā İbn Manda, "Manāqib al-Shaykh Abī al-Qāsim al-Tabarānī," MS Esad Efendi 2431, Süleymaniye Library, Istanbul: 14b.

¹⁰⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 2:215.

¹⁰¹ George Makdisi, "Ash'arī and the Ash'arites in Islamic Religious History," Studia Islamica 17 (1962): 39.

¹⁰² Wilferd Madelung, "The Origins of the Controversy Concerning the Creation of the Koran," 521. Although Ibn Hanbal narrates some hadīths from 'Alī b. al-Madīnī in his Musnad, one of his son's students, al-'Uqaylī, said that when he studied Ibn observes, the über-Sunnis saw them as doubly dangerous because they were "self-proclaimed traditionalists" who identified themselves with the ahl al-hadīth/ahl al-sunna camp. The über-Sunnis thus reserved some of their fiercest invective for these folk.¹⁰³ Melchert has astutely identified this group between the über-Sunnis and their rationalist adversaries, dubbing them "the semi-rationalists." He includes a diverse selection of scholarly figures, from al-Shāfiʿī's most famous disciple, al-Muzanī, to the great historian and exegete al-Ṭabarī.¹⁰⁴ The identifying characteristic of what Melchert admits is a loosely-knit group is their belief that the lafz of the Qurʾān is created. He includes al-Bukhārī in this number because he upheld this stance.

Yet it is not very accurate to employ the term "rationalist" in any sense when describing al-Bukhārī, who was a diehard traditionalist. Rather, we should view him as a representative of Ibn Ḥanbal's original traditionalist school who fell victim to its most radical wing. Indeed, al-Bukhārī's Khalq af ʿāl al-ʿibād contains the earliest representation of the position taken by Ibn Ḥanbal, a figure often co-opted by later groups to legitimize their stances.¹⁰⁵ Al-Bukhārī wrote this work within fifteen Hanbal's Kitāb al-'ilal with Ibn Hanbal's son 'Abdallāh he saw that Ibn Hanbal had crossed out 'Alī's name in many isnāds and replaced it with "a man." Nonetheless, al-'Uqaylī affirms that 'Alī's hadīths are reliable; Muhammad b. 'Amr al-'Uqaylī, Kitāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr, ed. 'Abd al-Mu'țī Amīn Qal'ajī, 4 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1404/1984), 3:239.

¹⁰³ Melchert, "The Adversaries of Ahmad Ibn Hanbal," 252.

¹⁰⁴ Melchert's evidence for al-Tabarī's stance on this issue (see Ibn Hajar, Lisān almīzān {Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-'Uthmāniyya, 1330/[1912]}), 3:295 [biography of Ibn Abī Dāwūd al-Sijistānī] is meager (as Melchert admits elsewhere, the charge "looks anachronistic"). In his al-Tabşīr fī maʿālim al-dīn, al-Ṭabarī cleverly avoids discussing the issue of the lafz of the Qur'an. He explicitly states that the Qur'an is neither created nor a creator-the ahl al-hadith position-supporting his stance with a long logical argument. On the issue of the lafz of the Qur'an, however, al-Tabarī refers the reader to his discussion of the acts of humans (afāl al-ibād). In this discussion, he rejects the Qadarī and Jahmī position (the latter that men have no control over their acts) and embraces the third position, that of the jamhūr ahl al-ithbāt (the majority of those who affirm God's power over destiny), namely that God guides those destined for faith to faith and vice versa. He does not clearly state, however, whether or not men's acts are created. His exact position on the lafz issue thus remains unclear. See al-Tabarī, al-Tabsīr fī maʿālim al-dīn, ed. 'Alī b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Shibl (Riyadh: Dār al-Āsima, 1416/1996); 167-76, 200-5; cf. Melchert, "The Adversaries of Ahmad Ibn Hanbal," 245-7; idem, The Formation of the Sunni Schools of Law, 9th and 10th Centuries C.E. (Leiden: Brill, 1997), 195.

¹⁰⁵ Ibn Hanbal's role as a figure on which different schools of thought have projected their particular stances is well known. Ibn Hanbal is most famous for stating that "he who says my wording of the Qur'ān is created is Jahmī, and he who says it is not created is guilty of bid'a." Another, less likely, report through Ibn Hanbal's student years of Ibn Hanbal's death in 241/855, and he incisively identified the polemical circus that had already grown up around Ibn Hanbal's persona:

And as for the two sects [of the rationalists and hadīth scholars] that claim proof for themselves from Ahmad, many of their reports [from him] are not reliable. Perhaps they have not understood the precise subtlety of his stance (diqqat madhhabihi). It is known that Ahmad and all the people of knowledge hold that God's speech is uncreated and that all other speech is created. Indeed they hated discussing and investigating obscure issues, and they avoided the people of dialectical theology (kalām), speculation (al-khawd) and disputation (tanāzu[°]) except on issues in which they had [textual] knowledge.¹⁰⁶

Al-Bukhārī's allegiance to the ahl al-hadīth camp and to Ibn Hanbal himself is thus obvious. Indeed, he quotes Ibn Hanbal as evidence for his position on the lafz.¹⁰⁷

Melchert concedes that the semi-rationalists were a diverse group, but it seems more accurate to group al-Bukhārī with the traditionalist camp of Ibn Ḥanbal than with al-Ṭabarī, whose lengthy explanation of why the Qur'ān is uncreated consists of a formalized logical discussion of accidents and whether or not speech can inhere in the essence (dhāt) of a thing. Also, Melchert's description of the semi-rationalists as "insinuating the tools of the rationalists into traditionalist practice" would hardly place al-Bukhārī in the environs of the rationalist camp. None of al-Bukhārī's extant works employs Islamicate logic or the philosophical jargon found in al-Ṭabarī's discussion.¹⁰⁸

Ibrāhīm al-Ḥarbī tells of someone asking Ibn Ḥanbal about a group of people who say that "our wording of the Qur'ān is created." He replied, "The slave approaches God through the Qur'ān by five means, in which [the Qur'ān] is not created: memorizing in the heart, reading by the tongue, hearing by the ear, seeing with the eye, and writing by the hand. The heart is created and what it memorizes is not; the reading (tllāwa) is created but what is read is not; hearing is created but what is heard is not; sight is created but what is seen is not; and writing is created but what is written is not"; Ibn al-Qayyim, Mukhtaşar al-şawāʿiq al-mursala, 2:313–4. For another example of attributions to Ibn Ḥanbal, see Zayn al-Dīn al-ʿIrāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāḥ li-mā utliqa wa uşuliqa min Muqaddimat Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, ed. Muḥammad ʿAbdallāh Shāhīn (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1420/1999), 205.

¹⁰⁶ Al-Bukhārī, Khalq af 'āl al-'ibād, 62.

¹⁰⁷ Al-Bukhārī, Khalq af al al-ibād, 108.

¹⁰⁸ Al-Bukhārī's Khalq af 'āl al-'ibād is little more than a collection of proof texts from Prophetic hadīths and earlier Muslim authorities, including Ibn Ḥanbal himself. Only at the very end of his book does al-Bukhārī resort to what could be termed dialectics, such as the use of constructions like "if someone says...let it be said to him" or terms like bayān. Often when this work does resort to dialectical arguments, they center on

CHAPTER THREE

It is more accurate to describe al-Bukhārī as a conservative traditionalist trying to navigate the contradictions inherent in the blunt ahl al-sunna creed touted by the über-Sunnis like al-Dhuhlī. Al-Bukhārī knew that the Qur'ān was God's uncreated speech, but he also knew that God creates human actions, as the ahl al-sunna had insisted in their attacks on the free-will position of their Qadarite opponents. What, then, does one say of the Qur'ān when it becomes manifested in a human act such as recitation or writing?

The earliest sources on al-Bukhārī's life suggest that he was very reluctant to discuss this issue at all. He would understandably have viewed it as speculation (khawd) and thus tried to avoid it. Our earliest substantial source on al-Bukhārī, Ibn 'Adī, includes a story he heard from a group of his teachers that tells of al-Bukhārī refusing to answer questions about the nature of the Qur'ān's wording until absolutely pressed, saying, "The Qur'ān is God's speech, uncreated, and the acts of men are created, and inquisition (imtihān) is heresy (bid'a)."¹⁰⁹

Al-Bukhārī's defense against the accusations of the über-Sunnis, his Khalq af 'āl al-'ibād, displays this same caution. The first section of the book is devoted solely to narrations from earlier pious authorities such as Sufyān al-Thawrī that affirm the increate nature of the Qur'ān and condemn anyone who holds the contrary position as a Jahmī or unbeliever. The second section argues that the acts of men are created, relying on Qur'anic verses and reports from such vaunted traditionalists as Yahyā b. Sa'īd al-Qattān. Al-Bukhārī himself rarely comments, but does assert that men's actions, voices and writing are created. He then begins introducing narrations from the Prophet that suggest that it is permissible to sell and buy written copies of the Qur'an.¹¹⁰ Finally, he provides a hadīth of the Prophet enjoining Muslims to "beautify the Qur'an with your voices" and a report from 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib that there will come a time when nothing remains of the Qur'ān except its written form.¹¹¹ These reports insinuate that physical manifestations of the Qur'ān do indeed belong to the material world. The author then combating his opponents' use of hadīths. See al-Bukhārī, Khalq af 'āl al-'ibād, 105-6; al-Subkī, Țabaqāt al-shāfi iyya, 2:229.

¹⁰⁹ Ibn 'Adī, Asāmī, 64–5. This story also appeared in al-Hākim's Tārīkh Naysābūr, narrated from Ibn 'Adī. See al-Dhahabī Tārīkh al-islām, 19:266.

¹¹⁰ Al-Bukhārī, Khalq af 'āl al-'ibād, 59-60.

¹¹¹ "Ya'tī 'alā al-nās zanān lā yabqā min al-islām illā ismuhu wa lā min al-qur'ān illā rasmuhu"; al-Bukhārī, Khalq af 'āl al-'ibād, 66–7.

returns to refuting the rationalists, emphasizing that the belief that human acts are created is not heresy (bid'a).¹¹² Only at this point does al-Bukhārī begin actively arguing that the sound of the Qur'ān being recited is created.

Reality: Muslim, the Junior Partner

Abū al-Husayn Muslim b. al-Hajjāj al-Qushayrī was born in 206/821 in Naysābūr. He first learned hadīth from Ishāq b. Rāhawayh and Yahyā b. Yahyā al-Tamīmī (d. 224-6/839-41) in his hometown before leaving for a pilgrimage to Mecca in 220/835. In the Hijāz he heard from 'Abdallāh b. Maslama al-Qa'nabī (d. 220-1/835-6), a favorite transmitter of Malik's Muwatta', and others. He later visited Baghdad to hear from Ibn Hanbal and also went to Basra. He went to greater Syria, Egypt and Rayy, where he met several times with Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī (d. 264/878) and Abū Hātim al-Rāzī (d. 277/890). A few years before his death he settled in Naysābūr, where he became one of the senior hadīth scholars in the city and a central figure for study.¹¹³ It was in Naysābūr that he studied and became acquainted with al-Bukhārī. Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, whose father met Muslim, recalls that Muslim's "place of business (matjar) was Khān Mahmash," where his father saw him narrating hadīths. Muslim's livelihood also came from his properties at Ustū which came from "the progeny $(a'q\bar{a}b)$ of the females of his family."¹¹⁴ He died in 261/875 at the age of fifty-five.

Muslim left many more works than his elder contemporary. His most famous, of course, was his Sahīh, originally titled al-Musnad al-ṣahīh.¹¹⁵ Muslim also produced two larger collections, a muṣannaf and a musnad, representing the sum total of the hadīth corpus from which he selected his Sahīh. Ibn al-Jawzī does not believe that anyone ever transmitted ¹¹² Al-Bukhārī, Khalq af 'āl al-'ibād, 102-4.

¹¹³ In his biography of Abū 'Alī al-Ḥusayn al-Qabbānī (d. 289/901–2), al-Dhahabī notes Abū 'Abdallāh b. al-Akhram (d. 344/955) saying, "The people of hadīth used to gather around him (indahu) after Muslim"; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 2:183.

¹¹⁴ Cited in al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:187.

¹¹⁵ This is somewhat misleading, since Muslim's work is topically organized, not a musnad. Ibn Khayr al-Ishbīlī recorded the full title as al-Musnad al-saḥīḥ al-mukhtaṣar min al-sunan bi-naql al-'adl 'an al-'adl 'an rasūl Allāh ş; Abū Ghudda, Taḥqīq ismay al-Ṣaḥīḥayn, 33–4.

CHAPTER THREE

this large musnad from Muslim.¹¹⁶ He also produced several biographical dictionaries. The largest one, his Tabaqāt, simply provides the names of the hadīth transmitters in the generations after the Prophet. Other smaller works, such as the Munfaridāt, the Wihdān and the Dhikr man laysa lahu illā rāwⁱⁿ wāhid min ruwāt al-hadīth, detail people who lack more than one transmitter from them.¹¹⁷ Like al-Bukhārī and many other hadīth masters of his age, Muslim produced a book of criticized narrations (Kītāb al-ʿilal) and a work of the same ilk but designed for a more general audience, the Kītāb al-tamyīz. This latter work has survived in part, and along with Muslim's involved introduction to his Ṣahīh, provides invaluable information about its author and his leanings.

a. Muslim's Methodology in his Ṣaḥīḥ

One of the most prominent statements Muslim makes about his methodology is his comparatively lax requirement for ascertaining whether a link in an isnād marked by "from/on the authority of ('an)" actually represents personal contact. When "'an" is used, Muslim does not require affirmative proof that the two transmitters actually met. Instead he requires only that they were contemporaries with no "clear indication (dalāla bayyina)" that they did not meet. Here Muslim invokes the example of Mālik, Shu'ba, Yaḥyā b. Sa'īd al-Qaṭṭān and 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Mahdī, who "only felt compelled to find a guarantee of direct transmission (samā') if the narrator was known to conceal his immediate source (mudallis)."¹¹⁸ In this, Muslim openly breaks with the position attributed by scholars to al-Bukhārī and his teacher 'Alī b. al-Madīnī. Muslim acknowledges that there are those who uphold that position, but he angrily asserts that they lack precedent from earlier ḥadīth masters.¹¹⁹ The notion that affirming one meeting between two ¹¹⁶ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 12:171.

¹¹⁷ One such work has been published under the title al-Munfaridāt wa al-wahdān, ed. 'Abd al-Ghaffār Sulaymān al-Bandārī (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1408/1988).

¹¹⁸ Muslim, Sahīh, 1:26.

¹¹⁹ Muslim, Şaḥīḥ, 1:23, 28. The majority of later commentators assumed that Muslim meant al-Bukhārī, but Ibn Kathīr believes he intended 'Alī b. al-Madīnī. Several modern Muslim scholars have also dealt with this question. In his comprehensive treatment of this question in the third appendix to his edition of al-Dhahabī's al-Mūqiza, 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda states that the person in question cannot be al-Bukhārī. Assuming Muslim wrote his introduction before he completed the book, he would not even have met al-Bukhārī at the time; he only met his teacher in 250–1 AH when al-Bukhārī came to Naysābūr; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bāʿith al-hathīth, 45; al-Dhahabī, al-Mūqiza fī

transmitters somehow assures direct transmission for all their hadīths, he states, is absurd. He provides examples of isnāds in which two narrators who had met nonetheless occasionally transmitted via an intermediary concealed by a "an" link in the isnād.¹²⁰ Moreover, the adherents of this position unnecessarily dismiss many authentic hadīths. "If we were to count the authentic reports (al-akhbār al-sihāh)...," he says, "that would be maligned by the claim of this claimant, the number would be inestimable."¹²¹

In his introduction, Muslim divides hadīths and their concomitant transmitters into three groups, stating that he will rely on two of them in his Sahīh. The first consists of the well-established hadīths whose transmitters do not lapse into the "excessive confusion" (takhlīt fāḥish) into which many muḥaddiths stumble. Having exhausted this group, he will proceed to the reports of transmitters who are not as masterful as the first group but nonetheless "are characterized by pious behavior (satr), honesty and the pursuit of knowledge." He will not take reports from the third group, which consists of those who either forge ḥadīths or whose material differs beyond reconciliation with that of superior scholars.¹²²

Muslim's Saḥāh contains far fewer chapters (only 54) than al-Bukhārī's and lacks al-Bukhārī's legal commentary. It has many more narrations, numbering about 12,000, with 4,000 repetitions. According to Muslim's companion Aḥmad b. Salama al-Bazzār (d. 286/899), who was with Muslim for fifteen years while he wrote the Sahāh, this number is based on Muslim's very isnād-based definition of a ḥadīth. If he heard the same tradition from two shaykhs, he considered it to be two ḥadīths.¹²³ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ (d. 643/1245) places the number of Prophetic traditions in the Ṣaḥāh at around 4,000.¹²⁴ Unlike al-Bukhārī, Muslim keeps all the narrations of a certain ḥadīth in the same section. Muslim also diverges significantly from al-Bukhārī in his exclusion of Companion ḥadīths and narrations without full isnāds (ta līqāt) as commentary.¹²⁵

^{&#}x27;ulūm mustalah al-hadīth, ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda (Aleppo: Maktab al-Maṭbū'āt al-Islāmiyya, 1405/1084), 122–140.

¹²⁰ Muslim, Sahīh, 1:24–5.

¹²¹ Muslim, *Ṣaḥī*ḥ, 1:26.

¹²² Muslim, Sahīh, 1:4–5.

¹²³ Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:186; Abd al-Rauf, "Hadīth Literature," 275.

¹²⁴ Ibn al-Şalāh, Şiyānat Şahīh Muslim, 101–2.

¹²⁵ Scholars have generally counted only 12–14 instances of incomplete isnāds (ta ($\bar{t}a$) used for commentary in Muslim's book; cf. Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥāḥ Muslim, 77.

CHAPTER THREE

There is considerable overlap between Muslim's Sahīh and that of his teacher al-Bukhārī; according to Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. 'Abdallāh al-Jawzaqī (d. 388/998), whose book al-Muttafaq combined the two books, there are 2,326 common traditions.¹²⁶ The two scholars drew on essentially the same pool of transmitters, sharing approximately 2,400 narrators.¹²⁷ Al-Bukhārī narrated from only about 430 that Muslim did not, while Muslim used about 620 transmitters al-Bukhārī excluded.¹²⁸

Scholars have generally devoted much less attention to Muslim's legal positions, perhaps because his Ṣaḥīḥ is more simply a ḥadīth book than al-Bukhārī's legally charged work. Not only does Muslim's book cover many fewer legal topics than his teacher's, his chapters often provide support for both sides of a particular issue. Indeed, he seems to have left his subchapters without titles, and he never raged as angrily as al-Bukhārī in any of his extant works.¹²⁹ Muslim thus does not appear in al-ʿAbbādī's or al-Subkī's roster of the Shāfiʿī school. Ibn Abī Yaʿlā, on the other hand, does include him in the Tabaqāt al-ḥanābila, emphasizing his narrations from Ibn Ḥanbal and his discussing ḥadīth narrators with him.¹³⁰

These sources leave little doubt concerning Muslim's identification with the transmission-based school. Like most of the ahl al-hadīth, Muslim reportedly criticized Abū Hanīfa and the ahl al-ra'y, but his comments certainly lack al-Bukhārī's ferocity. Al-Jawzaqī quotes him as saying that Abū Hanīfa was "a practitioner of independent legal reasoning whose hadīths are problematic (sāhib ra'y, mudṭarib al-hadīth)."¹³¹ In the introduction to his Ṣahīh, Muslim also gives a report condemning answering questions for which one has no textual recourse (ʿilm) or nar-

¹²⁶ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, ed. Mas'ūd 'Abd al-Ḥamīd al-Sa'dafī (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1414/1994), 69–70. Ibn Ḥajar states that al-Jawzaqī considers the same tradition from two different Companions to be one hadīth. This would mean that his account of the number of hadīths common to both the Ṣaḥīḥs is probably much lower than other Muslim scholars might consider.

¹²⁷ This number was arrived at by Abū al-Faḍl Muĥammad b. Ṭāhir al-Maqdisī b. al-Qaysarānī (d. 507/1113); Mullā Khāṭir, Makānat al-Ṣaḥīḥayn, 182.

¹²⁸ This number was arrived at by al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī and quoted by Ibn al-Şalāh; Ibn al-Şalāh, Siyānat Ṣahīḥ Muslim, 84.

¹²⁹ Al-Nawawī, Sharh Ṣahīḥ Muslim, 15 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Qalam, 1407/1987), 1:129.

¹³⁰ Ibn Abī Yaʿlā, Tabaqāt al-ḥanābila, 1:311-2.

¹³¹ Ibn al-Najjār, Kītāb al-radd 'alā Abī Bakr al-Khaţīb al-Baghdādī, ed. Muṣṭafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1417/1997), 101.

rating from untrustworthy people.¹³² Like al-Bukhārī, Ibn Ḥanbal and other ahl al-hadīth, this position represents the rejection of speculation (khawd) on issues of dogma.

Unlike al-Bukhārī, Muslim managed to avoid the controversy that plagued the latter part of his senior's career. Although later sources report that Muslim explicitly shared al-Bukhārī's stance on the created lafz of the Qur'ān, there is no early evidence for this. Ibn Abī Hātim al-Rāzī, who notes al-Bukhārī's lafz scandal, mentions nothing of the sort in his entry on Muslim. When al-Hassān b. Muḥammad al-Qazwīnī (d. 344/955) of Naysābūr asked his father whose book he should imitate, al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's, his father directed him towards Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ because he was not tainted by the lafz issue.¹³³

Nonetheless, Muslim also fell out with al-Dhuhlī, who seems to have been unable to bear serious competition in Naysābūr. As in al-Bukhārī's case, al-Dhuhlī's animosity towards Muslim was not sudden. Al-Hākim reports from Tāhir b. Ahmad, who heard Muslim's student Makkī b. 'Abdān say that when Dāwūd b. 'Alī al-Zāhirī (d. 270/884) came to Naysābūr to study with Ishāq b. Rāhawayh they held a discussion (al-nazar) session for him. Al-Dhuhlī's son Haykān (d. 267/881) and Muslim, at that time no older than thirty-two, attended. Haykan gave his opinion on an issue, and Dāwūd scolded him (zabarahu), saying, "Be silent, youth!" Muslim did not rally to his side. Havkan then went back to his father and complained about Dāwūd. Al-Dhuhlī asked who was with him in the debate, and Haykān replied, "Muslim, and he did not support me." Al-Dhuhlī bellowed, "I take back all that I transmitted to him (raja'tu 'an kull mā haddathtuhu bihi)." When Muslim heard this he "collected all that he had written from him in a basket and sent it to him, saying, 'I will never narrate from you,'" then left to study with 'Abd b. Humayd (d. 249/863).¹³⁴ According to al-Hākim, the last part of this story is inaccurate. He states that Muslim continued to associate and study with al-Dhuhlī until al-Bukhārī's lafz scandal some twenty years later. When al-Dhuhlī prohibited his students from attending al-Bukhārī's lessons, Muslim stood up and left al-Dhuhlī's circle, sending ¹³³ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:75; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:417-8.

¹³² Muslim, Sahīh, 1:13.

¹³⁴ Cited from al-Hākim's Tārīkh Naysābūr, al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:187; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:93.

CHAPTER THREE

a porter to him with all the material he had received from him.¹³⁵ That the tension between Muslim and al-Dhuhlī was longstanding dovetails with an otherwise bizarre quote from Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī, who criticized Muslim as unreasonable, saying, "If he had tended properly to $(d\bar{a}r\bar{a})$ Muḥammad b. Yaḥya [al-Dhuhlī] he would have become a man!"¹³⁶

Perception: al-Bukhārī, Muslim and the Greatest Generation

To the ahl al-hadīth, in the decades after their deaths al-Bukhārī and Muslim were simply two accomplished scholars among many. They studied at the feet of titans and were survived by cohorts who often outshone them in the eyes of fourth/tenth-century hadīth authorities. To best understand their place in this context, we shall compare perceptions of al-Bukhārī and Muslim with those of their teachers, such as 'Alī b. al-Madīnī, Ishāq b. Rāhawayh and Ibn Ḥanbal; and of their peers, like al-Dhuhlī, Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī and his colleague Abū Ḥātim al-Rāzī.

Our earliest sources leave no doubt that al-Bukhārī and Muslim were certainly respected authorities whose talents were widely recognized. Al-Hākim narrates from Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Mudhakkir that Ibn Khuzayma (d. 311/923) said, "I have not seen beneath the heavens one more knowledgeable in ḥadīth than Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī."¹³⁷ Ibn 'Adī heard al-Bukhārī's student Muḥammad b. Yūsuf al-Firabrī (d. 320/932) say that al-Najm b. al-Faḍl had seen the Prophet in a dream, with al-Bukhārī walking behind him exactly in his footsteps.¹³⁸ Oddly, there is little explicit praise for Muslim in the early sources. In a rare Persian-language quote, al-Hākim cites Isḥāq b. Rāhawayh saying, "What a man [Muslim] is!"¹³⁹

Later sources, of course, overflow with reports about both men's abilities, phrased in the hyperbolic style so common to Muslim scholarly expression. Al-Khatīb quotes Ibn Hanbal's saying that the mastery of hadīth (hif_z) ends with four people from Khurāsān: Abū Zur'a, al-

¹³⁵ Al-Hākim as quoted in al-Dhahabī, Tarīkh al-islām, 20:188, cf. al-Khatīb, Tarīkh Baghdād, 13:103 for the same narration with the same isnād through al-Hākim.

¹³⁶ Cf. al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 12:187; 19:341.

¹³⁷ Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, ed. Mu'azzam Husayn (Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-'Uthmāniyya, 1385/1966), 93.

¹³⁸ Ibn 'Adī, al-Kāmil fī du'afā' al-rijāl, 1:140.

^{139 &}quot;mardī keh īn būd"; al-Hākim, Ma rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 98.

Bukhārī, 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Dārimī (d. 255/869) and al-Hasan b. Shujā' al-Balkhī (d. 266/880).¹⁴⁰ In the Tārīkh Baghdād we also find a quote from al-Bukhārī's Basran teacher Muḥammad b. Bashshār Bundār (d. 252/866) saying that "the ḥadīth masters (ḥuffāz) of the world are four...:" Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī in Rayy, Muslim in Naysābūr, al-Dārimī in Samarqand and al-Bukhārī in Bukhara.¹⁴¹

Yet in our earliest sources, instances of such hyperbolic praise often ignore al-Bukhārī and Muslim. Even Muslim's colleague Ahmad b. Salama (d. 286/899) is reported to have said, "I have not seen after Ishāq [b. Rāhawayh] and Muhammad b. Yahyā [al-Dhuhlī] someone with a greater command of hadīth (ahfaz li'l-hadīth), nor more knowledgeable as to their meanings, than Abū Hātim Muhammad b. Idrīs [al-Rāzī]."142 In his book on al-Bukhārī's teachers, Ibn 'Adī records a statement from another of their contemporaries, 'Uthmān b. 'Abdallāh b. Khurrzādh (d. 281-4/894-8). He says that "the most prodigious in memory (ahfaz) I have seen are four: Muhammad b. Minhāl al-Darīr, Ibrāhīm b. Muhammad. b. 'Ar'ara, Abū Zur'a and Abū Hātim [al-Rāzī]."143 Even reports found only in later sources often neglect the two scholars. In al-Dhahabī's Tadhkirat al-huffāz, Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm Ibn Ūrama of Isfahan (d. 266/880) is quoted as saying during al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's lifetimes that "now there remain only three in the world: al-Dhuhlī in Khurāsān, Ibn al-Furāt in Isfahan, and [al-Hasan b. Alī] al-Hulwānī (d. 243/857-8) in Mecca."144

But how did hadīth scholars in the century after al-Bukhārī and Muslim view these two in holistic surveys of the hadīth tradition? The earliest impression we have comes from Abū Hātim's son, Ibn Abī Hātim (d. 327/938), who wrote a monumental treatise on the discipline of hadīth criticism, al-Jarḥ wa al-ta'dīl (Criticism and Approval). At the beginning of the work, the author provides lengthy and laudatory chapters devoted to pillars of the hadīth tradition such as Sufyān al-Thawrī and Wakī^c b. al-Jarrāḥ. This section ends with the great scholars Ibn Ḥanbal, Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, and ʿAlī b. al-Madīnī, but also

¹⁴⁰ Al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:21, 10:326 (biography of Abū Zurʿa al-Rāzī); Yāqūt b. ʿAbdallāh al-Hamawī (d. 626/1229), Muʿjam al-buldān, 6 vols. (Tehran: Maktabat al-Asadī, 1965), 1:714.

¹⁴¹ Al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:16; Ibn Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:89.

¹⁴² Al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 95-96; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:73.

¹⁴³ Ibn Adī, Asāmī, 138; idem, al-Kāmil, 1:143.

¹⁴⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:80.

includes Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī and the author's father. Although al-Bukhārī and Muslim both died before the two Rāzīs, Ibn Abī Hātim devotes only short and unremarkable entries to them in the main biographical body of his dictionary. For al-Bukhārī he states that his father and Abū Zur'a rejected his hadīths after al-Dhuhlī wrote informing them of his view on the Qur'ān.¹⁴⁵ Muslim too receives a perfunctory entry with the compliment "trustworthy, one of the hadīth masters (huffāz) with knowledge of hadīth."¹⁴⁶ Neither al-Bukhārī nor Muslim merited a place in the last great generation of their teachers.

Of course, Ibn Abī Hātim's view is very biased—his inclusion of his father and his close associate Abū Zur'a in the pantheon of great hadīth scholars was no doubt an act of discretion. In examining the initial reception of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works, however, it is precisely such biased perception that interests us. For Ibn Abī Hātim, one of the most influential figures in the development of hadīth criticism, Muslim is negligible and al-Bukhārī anathema. As we shall see, the cadre of Rāzī hadīth scholars based in Rayy provided the earliest and most vocal reaction to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's careers.

In his Kitāb al-majrūļān (Book of Criticized Narrators), Ibn Hibbān al-Bustī (d. 354/965) includes a review of the various generations of hadīth scholars who had toiled to preserve the legacy of the Prophet. The generation that inherited this trade and learned from masters like Mālik b. Anas and Shu'ba b. al-Hajjāj consists of Ibn Hanbal, Yahyā b. Ma'īn, 'Alī b. al-Madīnī (the three biggest), Ishāq b. Rāhawayh, 'Ubaydallāh al-Qawārīrī (d. 235/850) and Abū Khaythama Zuhayr b. Harb (d. 234/848). The next generation, which "took from them this path of criticism," he lists as al-Dhuhlī, al-Dārimī, Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī, al-Bukhārī, Muslim and Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī.¹⁴⁷ Here we clearly see a division between al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's generation and that of the teachers from whom they derived their skills. The two scholars, however, receive no special attention.

In his early work on the discipline of hadīth transmission, al-Muḥaddith al-fāḍil (The Virtuous Ḥadīth Scholar), al-Ḥasan b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Rāmahurmuzī (d. 360/970–1) lists five generations of great ḥadīth ¹⁴⁵ Ibn Abī Hātim, al-Jarh wa al-ta dīl, 2:3:191.

¹⁴⁶ Ibn Abī Hātim, al-Jarh wa al-ta dīl, 4:1:182-3.

¹⁴⁷ Abū Hātim Muḥammad Ibn Hibbān al-Bustī, Kitāb al-majrūhīn min al-muḥaddithīn al-du afā' wa al-matrūkīn, ed. Maḥmūd Ibrāhīm Zāyid (Aleppo: Dār al-Wa'y, 1396/1976), 1:54-7.

collectors who brought together the transmitted materials of various regions. His third generation includes men like Ibn Hanbal and Ishāq b. Rāhawayh, his fourth the likes of al-Dhuhlī, Abū Zurʿa and Abū Hātim al-Rāzī, and Abū Dāwūd. The fifth and final generation includes Ibn Abī Hātim, al-Nasā'ī, al-Ṭabarī and others.¹⁴⁸ Al-Bukhārī and Muslim appear nowhere.

In his al-Kāmil fī du'afā' al-rijāl (The Complete Book on Weak Transmitters), Ibn 'Adī (d. 365/975–6) places al-Bukhārī at the beginning of the final generation (tabaqa) of ḥadīth scholars. Although this generation includes Abū Ḥātim and Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī as well as al-Nasā'ī, Muslim never appears. These scholars follow the era of men like Ibn Ḥanbal, Isḥāq b. Rāhawayh and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī. Ibn 'Adī quotes the litterateur cum ḥadīth scholar Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim b. Sallām (d. 224/839) of Naysābūr on the definitive place of this greatest generation: "[Mastery of] ḥadīth stopped at four people: Abū Bakr b. Abī Shayba (d. 235/849), Aḥmad b. Ḥanbal, Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn, and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī."¹⁴⁹ Muslim scholars outside the Sunni traditionalist fold also grasped the prominence of the greatest generation of Ibn Hanbal and his contemporaries. The Mu'tazilite Abū Qāsim al-Balkhī (known as al-Ka'bī, d. 319/931) wrote his Qubūl al-akhbār (The Acceptance of Reports) as a weapon against the ahl al-hadīth. In it he gathered damning judgments on respected Sunni hadīth transmitters from prominent members of the ahl al-hadīth themselves. Yet al-Balkhī never refers to Muslim and does not mention al-Bukhārī in the chapter citing evaluations of Sunni transmitters.¹⁵⁰ Instead, he relies principally on Ibn Hanbal, 'Alī b. al-Madīnī, Abū Khaythama, al-Shāfi'ī, Mālik, and Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn.

In his Fihrist, written in 377/987–8, Ibn al-Nadīm (d. after 385– 8/995–8) lists al-Bukhārī and Muslim as two of sixty-three transmissionbased jurists in Islamic history. Along with others like Sufyān al-Thawrī, 'Alī b. al-Madīnī and al-Tirmidhī, he describes them simply as experts and trustworthy narrators (thiqa).¹⁵¹ Neither of their biographies, ¹⁴⁸ Al-Hasan b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Rāmahurmuzī, al-Muḥaddith al-fāḍil bayn al-rāwī wa'l-wā'y, ed. Muḥammad 'Ajjāj al-Khaṭīb ([Beirut]: Dār al-Fikr, 1391/1971), 229–31.

¹⁴⁹ Ibn 'Adī, al-Kāmil, 1:129.

¹⁵⁰ Abū al-Qāsim 'Abdallāh al-Kaʿbī al-Balkhī, Qubūl al-akhbār wa maʿrifat al-rijāl, ed. Abū 'Amr al-Husaynī b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1421/2000), 2:149.

¹⁵¹ Abū al-Faraj Muhammad b. Ishāq Ibn al-Nadīm, The Fihrist, ed. and trans. Bayard

CHAPTER THREE

however, matches that of the later Kufan chief judge and hadīth scholar Abū 'Abdallāh al-Ḥusayn b. Ismā'īl al-Mahāmilī (d. 330/942); Ibn al-Nadīm states that no one was more knowledgeable than him in hadīth.¹⁵²

Reception: the Immediate Response to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's Works

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim functioned as magnets for hadīth transmission during their lives, selecting choice narrations for the Sahihs that formed their lasting legacy. But strikingly enough, they themselves proved insignificant in the continuing transmission of hadith through living isnāds. In his annals listing the significant hadīth scholars who died in the second half of the third/ninth century and the first few decades of the fourth/tenth, Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200) lists seventeen who studied with Ishāq b. Rāhawayh, twenty-two with 'Alī b. al-Madīnī, but only one with al-Bukhārī or Muslim. Indeed, other contemporaries of al-Bukhārī and Muslim completely obviated their role in the transmission of hadīths. Abū al-Qāsim 'Abdallāh b. Muhammad al-Baghawī of Baghdad heard from what al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī terms "uncountable masses" of hadīth transmitters, including Ibn Hanbal, 'Alī b. al-Madīnī and Yahyā b. Ma'īn. He died at the age of 104 or 110 in 317/929-30 and was thus much sought after for his elevated isnād to that greatest generation. The major scholars who heard from al-Baghawi directly, such as al-Dāraqutnī (d. 385/995), or through his isnād, like al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, had no need to refer to transmitters like al-Bukhārī or Muslim for living transmission.¹⁵³ Even in the case of hadīths that appeared in Muslim's Sahīh, for example, later hadīth scholars like al-Dhahabī preferred to narrate them through al-Baghawī in their own hadīth collections.154

90

Dodge (New York: Columbia University Press, 1970; Chicago: Kazi Publications, 1998), 555–6. Citations are to the Kazi edition.

¹⁵² Ibn al-Nadīm, The Fihrist, 560; cf. al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 193; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 8:19–22.

¹⁵³ Al-Baghawī is often referred to as Ibn Manī' or even Ibn Bint al-Manī'. Some were skeptical of al-Baghawī's narration from Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn. Al-Khalīlī says that he could narrate from one hundred shaykhs that no one else in his time had met; al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 192. The last of al-Baghawī's students, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. ʿAlī al-Baghdādī, died in 399/1008–9.

¹⁵⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 4:159.

This focus on the living isnād and the veneration paid to previous generations of hadīth scholars also dominates the immediate reception of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works in the hadīth community. The hadīth scholars' conception of their own tradition, as shown in the early and mid-fourth/tenth-century works of Ibn Abī Hātim al-Rāzī, Ibn Hibbān and Ibn 'Adī, distinguishes between the colossal generation of Ibn Hanbal and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī and that of their students al-Bukhārī and Muslim. Many in the hadīth community, such as the influential bloc of Rāzī scholars in Rayy, immediately balked at what they perceived as the elitism and finality of the two works, accusing al-Bukhārī and Muslim of insolence.

The reaction of the Rayy scholars to Muslim's Sahih during his own lifetime portrays his work as an act of egoism that could undermine the legal methodology of the transmission-based scholars. The chief critics of Muslim's Sahīh were Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī and his colleague Muhammad b. Muslim Ibn Wāra al-Rāzī (d. 270/884). Along with Abū Hātim, Abū Zur'a was an institution of hadīth study in Rayy. Even at middle age he had earned the respect of prominent scholars such as Ishāq b. Rāhawayh, who said that "any hadīth that Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī does not know has no basis."155 Muslim met several times with the two Rāzīs and their colleague Ibn Wāra in Rayy. Their reaction to his Sahih clearly communicates the initial shock that the notion of a book of purely authentic hadīths had on some scholars in the hadīth community. It has been preserved in Abū Zur'a's Kitāb al-du'afā' wa ajwibatuhu 'alā as'ilat al-Bardha'ī, a compilation of both Abū Zur'a's and Abū Hātim's opinions on transmitters as transcribed by their student Abū 'Uthmān Sa'īd b. 'Amr al-Bardha'ī (d. 292/905), who also studied with Muslim:

I saw Abū Zur'a mention the Ṣahīh book written by Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj, then [that of] al-Fadl al-Ṣā'igh¹⁵⁶ based upon it ('alā mithālihi). Abū Zur'a said to me, "These are people who wanted prominence (taqaddum) before their time, so they did something for which they show off (yatashawwafīm bihi); they wrote books the likes of which none had written before to gain for themselves precedence (riyāsa) before their time." One day, when I was present, a man came to [Abū Zur'a] with the Ṣaḥīḥ transmitted from ¹⁵⁵ Ibn 'Adī, al-Kāmil, 1:141.

¹⁵⁶ This is Abū Bakr al-Fadl b. al-'Abbās al-Ṣā'igh al-Rāzī (d. 270/883). I have found no other mention of this book. See al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 12:363; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ļuļfāz, 2:132–3; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:149–50.

CHAPTER THREE

Muslim, and Abū Zur'a started to look through it. When he came across hadīths from Asbāt b. Naşr he said to me, "How far this is from sahīh! He includes Asbāt b. Naşr in his book!" Then he saw in the book Qatan b. Nusayr, so he said to me, "This is even more overwhelming than the first one! Qatan b. Nusayr [incorrectly] attributed hadīths from Thābit [al-Bunānī] to Anas [b. Mālik]." Then he looked and said, "[Muslim] narrates from Ahmad b. 'Īsā al-Miṣrī in his Şahīh book: did you not see the people of Egypt complaining that Ahmad b. 'Īsā," and he pointed to his tongue as if to say, 'lies,' then said to me, "[Muslim] narrates from the likes of them and leaves out [hadīths] from Muhammad b. 'Ajlān and those like him. He is making a path for the people of heresy (bida') against us, for they see that they can respond to a hadīth that we use as proof against them by saying 'That is not in the Şahīh!"

I saw him denigrating the book and censuring it, so when I returned to Naysābūr on the second occasion I mentioned to Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj Abū Zurʿaʾs rejection of his narrations in the book from Asbāt b. Naṣr, Qaṭan b. Nusayr and Aḥmad b. ʿĪsā. Muslim said to me, "Indeed I did deem [the book] 'Saḥāḥ,' and what ḥadīths I included from Asbāt, Qaṭan and Aḥmad have been narrated by [other] trustworthy narrators (thiqāt) from their [Asbāt, Qaṭan and Aḥmad's] shaykhs, except that these [that I included] came from [Asbāt and them] through shorter isnāds (bi'l-irtifā'). But I also have these [ḥadīths] from those who are more reliable than them [Asbāt et al.] via longer isnāds (bi-nuzīl)...and the core report of the ḥadīth is well known through the transmission of trustworthy transmitters."

Muslim came to Rayy and it reached me that he went out to Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. Muslim b. Wāra, and he received him coldly (fa-jafāhu) and chastised him for the book, saying essentially what Abū Zur'a said: this opens us up to the people of bida'. So Muslim apologized to him and said, "Indeed I produced this book and declared it authentic (sihāh), but I did not say that that hadīths I did not include in this book are weak. Rather, I produced this from sahāh hadīths to be a collection for me and those who transmit from me without its authenticity being doubted. I did not say that everything else is weak..." and Ibn Wāra accepted Muslim's apology and transmitted [the book].¹⁵⁷

¹⁵⁷ This quote is found in its entirety in Abū Zur'a 'Ubaydallāh b. 'Abd al-Karīm al-Rāzī, Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī wa juhūduhu fi al-sunna al-nabawiyya ma'a tahqīq kitābihi al-Du'afā' wa ajuvibatihi 'alā as'ilat al-Bardha'ī, ed. Sa'dī al-Hāshimī, 3 vols. (Medina, Cairo: Dār al-Wafā' and Maktabat Ibn al-Qayyim, 1409/1989), 2:674–6; al-Khaţīb al-Baghdādī, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:28–30 (biography of Aḥmad b. 'Īsā al-Tustarī al-Miştī); al-Maqdisī and al-Hāzimī, Shurūţ al-a'imma al-sitta wa shurūţ al-a'imma al-khamsa, 60–3; al-Nawawī, Sharh Şahūh Muslim, 1:135–6; cf. for partial quotes, Ibn al-Şalāh Ṣiyānat Ṣahāh Muslim, 99–100; cf. Abū Muḥammad Muḥyī al-Dīn 'Abd al-Qādir Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya fi tabaqāt al-ḥanafīyya, ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Muḥammad al-Ḥalw, 5 vols. (Gīza: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1398–1408/1978–1988), 4:569.

So charged is al-Bardha'T's report that it seems miraculous that we have received it from a provenciated source.¹⁵⁸ Indeed, Abū Zur'a's and Ibn Wāra's reaction to the Sahāh as well as Muslim's concessions highlight issues that would later prove some of the most hotly debated questions in the hadīth tradition. The Rayy scholars raise three objections to Muslim's Sahāh. First, they decry it as impertinent glory-seeking. Second, they disagree with Muslim's judgment concerning the reliability of some transmitters, arguing that his criteria are flawed and subjective.¹⁵⁹ Finally, they worry that producing a sahāh compilation could hinder the use of other hadīths that would be considered lackluster in comparison. Absolute authenticity had never been the determining factor in the use of hadīths in either elaborating law or polemics with the ahl al-hadīth's rationalist foes. We thus detect the immediate and palpable fear that a definitive sahāh book would be used to exclude all other materials.

The concerns of the Rāzīs seem to have been pervasive, with al-Bukhārī also attracting criticism from younger experts like al-Nasā'ī for the seemingly arbitrary omission of hadīths from respected transmitters like Suhayl b. Abī Ṣālih.¹⁶⁰ Both al-Bukhārī and Muslim were thus forced on more than one occasion to deny that their works encompassed all authentic hadīths. Muslim did so in the body of his Ṣahīh in a rare response to a question, saying that his book only contains those authentic hadīths that "were agreed upon ($ajma'\bar{u} \ 'alayh\bar{a}$)" and excludes other nonetheless worthy ones.¹⁶¹ Ibn 'Adī provides an early ¹⁵⁸ Sa'dī al-Hāshimī's edition of al-Bardha'ī's text is based on a manuscript from the Köprülü Library in Istanbul (#3/40 in a 2 juz' notebook). This report appears in the above sources but it is always narrated through the same initial isnād from al-Bardha'ī. Al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī and al-Hāzimī have *isnād*s to Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. Muḥammad al-Barqānī ← Abū al-Ḥusayn Ya'qūb b. Mūsā al-Ardabīlī ← Aḥmad b. Ṭāhir b. al-Najm al-Mayyānijī ← Sa'īd b. 'Amr al-Bardha'ī. Al-Khalīlī (d. 446/1054), who does not mention this story, tells us that al-Bardha'ī studied with Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī. The isnād of Abū Zur'a → al-Bardha'ī → Aḥmad b. Ṭāhir b. al-Najm al-Mayyānijī is also established elsewhere separately by al-Khalīlī; cf. al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād;109, 129, 286.

¹⁵⁹ Interestingly, Muslim is quoted by his student Makkī b. 'Abdān as supposedly saying, "I showed my book to Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī and everything that he indicated as having a flaw (illa) I left out. And what he said, 'This is saḥīḥ with no illa,' I included." The earliest appearance of this quote I have found is in the work of Abū 'Alī al-Ghassānī al-Jayyānī of Andalusia (d. 498/1105); al-Tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fī Ṣaḥīḥ al-imām Muslim, ed. Muḥammad Abū al-Fadl (Rabat: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa al-Shu'ūn al-Islāmiyya, 1421/2000), 39; al-Qādī 'Iyād, Ikmāl al-mu'lim bi-fawā'id Muslim, 1:82; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 68; al-Nawawī, Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 1:121.

¹⁶⁰ Muhammad b. al-Husayn al-Sulamī, "Su'ālāt Abī 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Sulamī li'l-Dāraqutnī," MS Ahmet III 624, Topkapı Sarayı, Istanbul: 162a.

¹⁶¹ Sahīh Muslim: kitāb al-salāt, bāb al-tashahhud. Later analysts believed that the group quote from al-Bukhārī that he had left many sahīh reports out of his collection, which he entitled an "abridged (mukhtaṣar)" compilation, in order to keep its size manageable.¹⁶² We shall see in Chapter Five how prescient the Rāzīs' concerns were.

Muslim's response to Ibn Wāra provides a fascinating glimpse into the pre-canonical life of his Ṣaḥīḥ. If a canon is a text endowed with authority and made binding on a community, its converse is a powerless text that reaches no farther than its author. Yet this is precisely how Muslim is forced to describe his Ṣaḥīḥ in order to placate Ibn Wāra. He is forced to reduce his book to a private "collection for me and those who transmit from me." In the face of resistance, we thus see that Muslim was obliged to deny his work the features that would one day accord it canonical status.¹⁶³

One of the earliest recorded reactions to al-Bukhārī's Saḥāh seconds the accusation of impudence leveled at Muslim by Abū Zur'a. Maslama b. Qāsim al-Qurtubī (d. 353/964)¹⁶⁴ recorded a story about al-Bukhārī

¹⁶⁴ In his Tahdhīb al-tahdhīb, the only place I have found this story, Ibn Hajar cites the source only as "Maslama." We know that this is Maslama b. Qāsim, however, because in his al-Mu'lim bi-shuyūkh al-Bukhārī wa Muslim, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Ismāʻīl Ibn Khalfūn (d. 636/1238–9) duplicates the first line of the story (allafa 'Alī b. al-Madīnī Kītāb al-'ilal wa kāna danīn^{am} bihi...) exactly in a quote from Maslama b. Qāsim. Ibn Hajār's version then continues with the insulting story above, while in Ibn Khalfūn's version Maslama goes on to tell how 'Alī did not lend his book to anyone or narrate it because of its valuable content, then states "and he [Maslama] mentioned the story (wa dhakara al-qiṣṣa)." See Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Ismāʻīl Ibn Khalfūn, al-Mu'lim bi-shuyūkh al-Bukhārī wa Muslim, ed. Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Ādil b. Saʻd (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1421/2000), 464. For an article discussing Maslama b. Qāsim's that Muslim was referring to as "having agreed upon" these hadīths consisted of Ibn Hanbal, Yaḥyā b. Maʿīn, 'Uthmān b. Abī Shayba and Saʿīd b. Manṣūr al-Khurāsānī; Abū Ḥafş 'Umar b. Raslān al-Bulqīnī (d. 805/1402–3), Maḥāsin al-iṣṭilāḥ, in Muqaddimat Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ wa Maḥāsin al-iṣṭilāḥ, 162.

¹⁶² Ibn 'Adī, Asāmī, 68.

¹⁶³ Al-Bukhārī is also reported to have shown his Şaḥīḥ to senior scholars such as 'Alī b. al-Madīnī and Ibn Ḥanbal. This report only appears in a very late source, however: Ibn Ḥajar's (d. 852/1449) Hady al-sārī. He quotes Abū Ja'far Muḥammad b. 'Amr al-'Uqaylī's (d. 323/934) statement that these scholars acknowledged the authenticity of the Ṣaḥīḥ with the exception of four hadīths. This information does not appear in the one work that has survived from al-'Uqaylī, his Kitāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr. Ibn Ḥajar had access to at least one other work by al-'Uqaylī, his Kitāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr. Ibn Ḥajar had access to at least one other work by al-'Uqaylī, his Kitāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr, and he had source for this quote. Al-'Uqaylī was very familiar with al-Bukhārī's al-Tārīkh al-kabīr (one of his principal sources in his Kitāb al-du'afā') and his Ṣaḥīḥ, and he had studied with Ibn Ḥanbal's son 'Abdallāh. It is thus not improbable that he could have transmitted this information about the evaluation of the Ṣaḥīḥ. But since 'Alī b. al-Madīnī died in 234/849, whatever al-Bukhārī might have showed him was probably only a very early draft of the work. See Ibn Ḥajar, Hady al-sārī; 7, 676; al-'Uqaylī, Kītāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr, 1:48–9 (editor's introduction).

that paints him as a plagiarist whose brilliant Saḥīḥ was truly the work of his famous teacher 'Alī b. al-Madīnī. Maslama reports that 'Alī had a book detailing the flaws in various ḥadīth narrations (Kitāb al-'ilal)¹⁶⁵ that represented his mastery of ḥadīth criticism. One day when 'Alī had gone to view some of his properties, al-Bukhārī came to one of his sons and bribed him to lend him the book, which al-Bukhārī promptly had duplicated by a copyist. When 'Alī returned and held a session for ḥadīth study, al-Bukhārī's knowledge rivaled his teacher's. 'Alī grasped what had occurred from his student's exact imitation of his own work and was so saddened that he eventually died of grief. Having no further need of his teacher, al-Bukhārī returned to Khurāsān and compiled his Ṣaḥīḥ, gaining fame and followers.¹⁶⁶

Maslama b. Qāsim was from Cordova, but sometime before 320/932 he traveled east to Egypt, greater Syria, Mecca, Wāsit, Basra, Baghdad and Yemen before returning to Spain after losing his vision.¹⁶⁷ He certainly had a copy of al-Bukhārī's al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, since Ibn Ḥajar states that Maslama compiled a one-volume book on ḥadīth transmitters (tārīkh fī al-rijāl) intended to cover those not mentioned in al-Bukhārī's dictionary (including some of Maslama's own contemporaries).¹⁶⁸ Maslama heresiographical contributions, see Maribel Fierro, "Bātinism in al-Andalus. Maslama b. Qāsim al-Qurtubī (d. 353/964), author of the Rutbat al-Hakīm and the Ghāyat al-Hakīm," Studia Islamica 84,2 (1996): 87–112.

¹⁶⁸ Ibn Hajar, Lisān, 6:35. Here Ibn Hajar quotes Abū Ja'far al-Māliqī's Tārīkh. We know that Maslama's Tārīkh included such contemporaries as Abū Ja'far al-'Uqaylī

¹⁶⁵ This book could not possibly be 'Alī's Kūtāb al-ʿilal that has come down to us today. While the book Maslama describes contains what seems to be the sum total of 'Alī's corpus of hadīth criticism, his extant work is very small and only deals with several dozen narrations. It is possible that the book mentioned here is a work of 'Alī's that Ibn al-Nadīm describes as a musnad accompanied by ʿilal commentary; see Ibn al-Nadīm, The Fihrist, 556.

¹⁶⁶ Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb al-tahdhīb, ed. Muştafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Atā (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1415/1994), 9:44; Najmī, Sayrī dar Ṣahīḥayn, 72.

¹⁶⁷ Maslama was criticized as a weak transmitter, but was defended by others who said that he simply was not very intelligent (da j̃f al-'aql). He was also accused of anthropomorphism, but, in light of the controversial material he recorded about al-Bukhārī, these are probably reactionary ad hominem attacks by later commentators; see Muhammad b. al-Futūḥ al-Ḥumaydī, Jadhwat al-muqtabis fî dhikr wulāt al-Andalus wa asmā' ruwāt al-hadīth wa ahl al-fiqh wa al-adab, ed. Muḥammad b. Tāwīt al-Tanjī (Cairo: Maktabat al-Nashr al-Thaqāfī al-Islāmī, 1371/[1952]), 324; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:98; idem, Siyar a'lām al-nubalā', 16:110; idem, Mīzān al-itidāl fī naqd al-rijāl, 4:112; cf. Ibn Ḥajar, Lisān, 6:35–6; cf. Ṭāhir al-Jazā'irī al-Dimashqī (d. 1338/1919–20), Tavjīh al-nazār ilā usāl al-athar, ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū al-Ghudda, 2 vols. (Aleppo: Maktab al-Matbū'āt al-Islāmiyya, 1416/1995), 1:302. Although he visited Baghdad, al-Khatīb does not mention him in his history.

probably heard the story about al-Bukhārī stealing his teacher's work after his arrival in the Islamic heartlands (i.e. after 320/932) but before his death in 353/964. We can thus assume that it was in circulation by the early 300s/900s, if not before.

The story of 'Alī b. al-Madīnī and the Ṣaḥīḥ is almost certainly untrue, since refusing to transmit one's work to students would be extremely unusual among scholars of hadīth. Maslama's own preoccupation with al-Bukhārī's Tarīkh and the fact that the story recognizes that the Ṣaḥīḥ was a major accomplishment points to a more subtle motivation. Regardless of the high quality of his Ṣaḥīḥ, al-Bukhārī's work clashed with the atavistic traditionalism endemic among the ahl al-hadīth. For them the community was always in decline as it grew more distant from the Prophet, and students could do no more than try to preserve their masters' knowledge. The creator of Maslama's story could only interpret al-Bukhārī's unprecedented contribution as an act of insubordination.

Maslama's Tārīkh, however, illustrates another important aspect of the community's reception of al-Bukhārī's works: for decades after his death, al-Bukhārī was much better known for his Tārīkh than for his Sahīh. In his Muntazam, Ibn al-Jawzī mentions someone narrating al-Bukhārī's Tārīkh fully a century before the first person is mentioned as narrating his Sahīh.¹⁶⁹ Also, almost seventy years before the first scholar compiled a hadīth collection using the Sahīh as a template, al-Husayn b. Idrīs al-Anṣārī (d. 301/913-4) used the Tārīkh as a format for his own biographical dictionary.¹⁷⁰ When al-Bukhārī's student and a compiler of a famous hadīth collection himself, Abū 'Īsā al-Tirmidhī, said that he had never seen anyone with al-Bukhārī's command of the narrations of hadith and the lives of their transmitters, he was referring explicitly to the scholar's Tarīkh al-kabīr.171 Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Daghūlī (d. 325/936-7) of Sarakhs, who had studied hadīth with al-Bukhārī's rival al-Dhuhlī, nonetheless said that al-Bukhārī's Tārīkh was one of the four books with which he never parted.¹⁷² Abū Ja'far

⁽d. 323/934), since this is one of the sources al-Dhahabī relies on for his biography of al-Uqaylī in Tadhkirat al-ļuffāz.

¹⁶⁹ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 13:362 and 15:270.

¹⁷⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:192.

¹⁷¹ Ibn Rajab, Sharh 'Ilal al-Tirmidhī, 1:32. Al-Tirmidhī's hadīth collection also includes, however, the earliest actual mention of al-Bukhārī's 'Jāmi'' (i.e., his Ṣaḥīħ); Jāmi' al-Tirmidhī: kitāb al-ṭahāra, bāb mā jā'a fī al-istinjā' bi'l-ḥajarayn.

¹⁷² The others were al-Muzanī's Mukhtaşar, Khalīl b. Ahmad's dictionary Kitāb al-al-'Uqaylī's (d. 323/934) Kītāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr (Great Book of Weak Transmitters) relies on al-Bukhārī as the single largest source of evaluations for transmitters. Al-'Uqaylī frequently refers to al-Bukhārī's $al-Tarīkh \ al-kabīr$, which he calls the scholar's "great book (al-kitāb al-kabīr)," but never mentions the Ṣahīh.¹⁷³ The only occasion on which al-Rāmahurmuzī mentions al-Bukhārī in his al-Muḥaddith al-fādil is in relation to his Tarīkh.¹⁷⁴

While it was Muslim's Sahīh that attracted the critical ire of the hadīth scholars in Ravy, al-Bukhārī's Tārīkh became the locus of drama and debate for the Rāzīs. In the first written response to any aspect of al-Bukhārī's oeuvre, Ibn Abī Hātim penned a short book correcting errors he detected in the Tārīkh al-kabīr. The involvement of Ibn Abī Hātim, his father and Abū Zur'a with the Tārīkh became even more problematic when a prominent muhaddith of Naysābūr, Abū Ahmad Muhammad b. Muhammad al-Hākim (d. 378/988), accused them of plagiarizing al-Bukhārī's work. Al-Hākim al-Navsābūrī, Abū Ahmad's friend and student, reports from him that when he was in Rayy once he saw Ibn Abī Hātim reading his al-farh wa al-ta'dīl to students. He recognized its contents as that of al-Bukhārī's Tārīkh and inquired as to why Ibn Abī Hātim had attributed this work to his father and Abū Zur'a. A student replied that al-Bukhārī's Tārīkh had so impressed Abū Hātim and Abū Zur'a that they had taken it as the basis of their work, sitting with Ibn Abī Hātim so that he could record some modifications to the work and then ascribe it to them.¹⁷⁵ ayn, and the cultured political treatise Kalīla wa dimna; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:30.

¹⁷³ Al-'Uqaylī, Kitāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr; 1:285, 3:345, 4:292.

¹⁷⁴ Al-Rāmahurmuzī, al-Muhaddith al-fādil, 310.

¹⁷⁵ Al-Khaţīb, Mūdih awhām al-jam wa al-tafrīq, 2 vols (Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-Uthmāniyya, 1378/1959), 1:8–9; Yāqūt al-Hamawī, Mu'jam al-buldān, 2:799; cf. al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:124. Yāqūt and al-Dhahabī's reports are taken from al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, but al-Dhahabī's lacks the last concluding statement that Ibn Abī Hātim attributed the book to his father and Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī. Abū Ahmad al-Hākim also voices his accusations in his own Kītāb al-kunā, which al-Dhahabī quotes in his biography of al-Bukhārī and which is also partially and lazily quoted in al-Khalīlī's al-Irshād, see al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 380; cf. al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:259; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 11–12.

CHAPTER THREE

Conclusion

As the next chapter will demonstrate, the Sahīhayn, and Muslim's Sahīh in particular, quickly became objects of study and imitation in Khurāsān, Eastern Iran and, eventually, Baghdad. We have seen, however, that during their lives and in the immediate wake of their deaths al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's Sahīhs met with rejection and scorn among important elements of the hadīth scholar community. The tradition of hadith collection and study rested on a veneration for the past as the repository of the Prophet's sunna and the only authentic source for interpreting Islam. Although they had developed a methodology for distinguishing between authentic and forged hadiths, for transmission-based scholars the Prophet's charismatic authority rendered even weaker hadīths legitimate tools for understanding the faith. For scholars like Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī, a collection limited to purely authentic hadīths unnecessarily delimited the potential application of the Prophet's sunna in Muslim life and debate. Furthermore, hadīth scholars cultivated a worldview in which later generations could at best struggle to preserve their predecessors' transmission of the normative past. During al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's lives and the century after their deaths, hadīth scholars' native perception of their tradition viewed them as merely two experts among many, placing them in positions junior to their teachers. Al-Bukhārī in particular was also tainted with scandal and accusations of heresy. For Abū Zur'a, for his colleagues in Ravy and for whomever first circulated accusations of al-Bukhārī's plagiarism, the Sahīhayn were acts of insubordination by students seeking to supplant their teachers and defy tradition. For common Muslims and scholars alike the collection and transmission of hadiths through living isnāds back to the Prophet remained a dominant pious and legally significant activity for centuries after the sahih movement. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim would prove insignificant in the continued transmission of hadīths, but their Sahihs became institutions that soon rivaled it.

A 'PERIOD OF INTENSE CANONICAL PROCESS': IMAGINATION AND THE STUDY OF THE SAHĪHAYN IN THE LONG FOURTH/TENTH CENTURY

Introduction

With the exception of Deuteronomy's revelation to the court of King Josiah in II Kings, canonical texts do not fall intact from the heavens. Whether scriptural or literary, they pass through phases of use and study within a community before their canonization. Scripture must earn the devotion of a congregation before priests can declare it authoritative, and a body of critics must first study and explore literary works before dubbing them classics. Books are thus not written as canons. This status is bestowed upon them by a community engaged in a process of self-identification or authorizing institutions. The books of the New Testament were not all written as scripture, a role already played in early Christian communities by the Greek edition of the Hebrew Bible. What became the canonized New Testament was a diverse selection of writings used in services that eventually became widely recognized guides to Christian devotion. The usage of the word canon as 'list' in the first centuries CE originated in this roster of familiar books.¹ The books of the New Testament canon had therefore already proven effective at conveying a particular understanding of Christ's mission to a certain audience.

This process of use and familiarization was not limited to passive reception. Paul's canonical epistle to the Corinthian congregation (2 Corinthians) probably originally consisted of at least two separate letters written at different times and later pasted together for circulation amongst Paul's churches.² Such editorial activity highlights the role of clerics or scholars in molding proto-canonical texts after they have left the hands of their authors. In the words of James Sanders, this "period of intense canonical process" between the crafting of a text and the stabilization of a discrete canon represents a crucial interaction between text and audience. It is in these periods that audiences "shaped what they received in ways that rendered [the texts] most meaningful and valuable for them."³

¹ Gamble, The New Testament Canon, 17-18.

² Ehrman, The New Testament, 299.

Periods of intense canonical process are thus periods of intensive study. Before the emergence of a canon, texts must receive critical attention from scholars who catalog their contents, detail their merits and build around them that edifice of oral or written scholarship that distinguishes the familiar and valuated from the banal or unknown. Beyond the valorization that a scholarly class bestows on written works, in pre-modern times intense study was required merely to produce a coherent text. The folkloric tradition of the Trojan War thrilled multitudes of small Greek audiences for most of the first millennium BCE. Yet as a scattered and diverse body of oral epic the Iliad and Odyssey could never have become classics of Hellenistic literature or cornerstones of the Western literary canon. The first 'edition' of the Homeric epics was produced by Antimachus of Colophon (fl. 410 BCE) after centuries of fermenting as an oral-formulaic tradition. In the great Hellenistic Library of Alexandria, scholars like Zenodotus of Ephesus (fl. 270 BCE) initiated the first studies of the Homeric epics, editing and collecting manuscripts, creating lexicons and producing a standardized vulgate tradition. Alexandrian scholarship on Homeric works continued unabated in the following decades, with great writers and critics such as Apollonius of Rhodes and Rhianus of Crete debating and producing critical editions.⁴ It was these relatively standardized texts that Hellenistic scholars declared the 'canons' of Greek language worthy of imitation.

Certain Muslim scholars recognized that an intensive familiarization with a text was a prerequisite for its canonization. Shāh Walī Allāh of Delhi (d. 1762) felt that the treatment a book received after its composition was a crucial characteristic of a mainstay authentic hadīth collection. In addition to its author purposing a work of authentic hadīths and succeeding in that task, such a book must be studied, its rare or difficult (gharīb) words explained and its legal implications derived. It must be edited and refined (tahdhīb), and historians must identify all its transmitters as well as their death dates.⁵ Thus in the century after al-Bukhārī's death, scholars strove painstakingly to understand his methodology, identify his obscure transmitters (sometimes only referred to by their first names) and locate all the narrations of one Prophetic tradition scattered throughout his work.

³ Sanders, 30.

⁴ Rudolph Pfeiffer, History of Classical Scholarship: From the Beginnings to the End of the Hellenistic Age (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1968), 148-9.

Yet periods of intense canonical process do not only involve this requisite study and familiarization with a text. Separately, they involve the community developing the conceptual ability to endow texts with some binding authority. For a canon to form, a community must imagine texts that have transcended the normal status of books as objects of study or usage and are able play some loftier role. Periods of intense canonical process are times in which communities' conception of the authority a text can acquire leaps forward due to real and pressing needs.⁶

Although the Sahāhayn met with resistance during the lives of their authors and in the wake of their deaths, these two works quickly emerged as formative texts in certain areas of the Nile-Oxus region. Beginning in Muslim's home city of Naysābūr and later in Jurjān and Baghdad, scholars began viewing the Sahīhs not as threats to the living transmission of the Prophet's sunna but rather as vehicles for expressing their personal link to his authority and interpreting his teachings according to their own local agendas. Hadith scholars began using the Sahīhayn and the methods of their authors as templates for their own hadīth collections. These mustakhraj books, however, required a detailed mastery of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters, the permutations of the hadīths they included as well as their requirements for authenticity. The mustakhraj cults that formed in Naysābūr around Muslim's Sahīh, in Jurjān around al-Bukhārī's, and finally in Baghdad around the conjoined Sahīhayn thus sparked a flurry of studies on the two books and their constitutive elements. Scholars not only detailed al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works, they also interacted with their methodologies. Just as Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī had questioned Muslim's right to delimit authentic traditions, so did later scholars apply their own requirements for authenticity to the Sahīhayn, identifying what they considered errors and questioning why other hadīths had not merited a place in the collections.

⁵ Shāh Walī Allāh, Ḥujjat Allāh al-bāligha, 1:133.

⁶ Sanders, 32–33.

As we shall see, the network of scholars who devoted themselves to employing and studying al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's *Ṣaḥīḥ*s between the last quarter of the third/ninth century and the first half of the fifth/eleventh was distributed with remarkable geographic and chronological consistency. Equally important, however, was their ideological makeup. The study of the Ṣaḥīḥayn fell to neither the über-Sunnis who had ostracized al-Bukhārī nor the historically ḥadīth-wary Ḥanafīs. It was a more moderate group of transmission-based scholars belonging to the nascent Shāfi'ī school that forged the proto-canon.

In this chapter we will examine this network of scholars and their accomplishments during what one might term the long fourth century, that period between the deaths of the Shaykhayn and the widespread acknowledgment of the canon in the mid-fifth/eleventh century. This periodization is not merely heuristic. As we shall see, it reflects the uniqueness of a time characterized by fleeting genres and an often frustrating liminality in Islamic intellectual culture.

The long fourth century also proved a period in which important elements of the broader Muslim community began articulating the notion of a hadīth collection acting as a locus of communal consensus. Whether as common ground between different schools of thought or simply common references in an increasingly diverse hadīth tradition, this period of intense canonical process left the Muslim community with the imaginative capability of endowing hadīth works with a new epistemological status.

 Sahāhayn Network Chart:

 Study and Usage in the Long Fourth Century

 Key:

 • : Personal study relationship/teacher-student relationship

 • : Transmission of a scholar's books to another scholar

 • : Transmission or transmitter of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥāḥ

 • : Transmission or transmitter of Muslim's Ṣaḥāḥ

The following chart describes the location, dates, written works and scholarly relationships of the network of scholars who studied and employed the Ṣaḥūḥayn between 270 and 450AH. When required, some later figures are included with their death dates noted. For references, see Appendix I.

Transoxiana		A VLKalibidh: Binen A VLKhapthi: CB, Muz Brithyyawayti: MB®			Sahihayn luzani's Mukhtaşar 1s of the Şa hi hayn
Naysābūr & environs Umaral-Laytif (d. 466-8) : BMmus	⁴ Bin Manjawaya, MBM, IK, AD, T. Al-Armawit MBM Minem Minem	Al-Javezaq: MM, B+M Ad-Staurnublic: RMA Ad-Staurnublic: RMA Ad-Staurnublic: RMA Ad-Staurnublic: RMA Ad-Staurnublic: RMA Ad-Stauric: RMM Ad-Stauric: RMA Ad-Stauric: RMA Ad-Sta	And 'ATI al: Augo stilent, A Mark Mark Mark Mark Mark Mark Mark Mark	a": MM Al-Bazzār: MM Al-Fadial-Sā'izbi: MM	ZMB: ižzāmār of the Şahāhaym Muz: a book on al-Muzanī's Mukhtaşar ISBM: book on isnāds of the Şahāhaym
	 Bra Manjawayi: MBM, 1 Minsen 	And	Aut Autor Annual Annual Annual Autor Annual	●lbn Rajä': MM AuFradi	ABM: atrāf of the Şahihayn B+M: combination of the Şahihayn CB: commentary on al-Bukharī BMmus: musnad of the Şahihayn
Isfahan →/=/Al-Milanhī (d. 486): MBM	BN. Nur ann an Anna Anna Anna Anna Anna Anna A	Pen Mundi: Breen 4	Attime		bīr
Jurjān		A channe Mie A channe Mie A channe Mie BoxAll Bane, Mie Ath Annue a chiliter			d Ibnen: work on al-Bukhär's transmitters IM: ïdal of the Satihtayn IBM: ïdal of the Satihtayn TB: transmitted al-Bukhär's Tärikh al-kabř
Baghdad Al-Khafib al-Baghdädf (d. 463)	Al-Khalilii: MBM Al-Khalilii: MBM Al-Buqian: MBM, BMmas Al-LaladaT BMmen Al-Uahada: MBM •	P. Al-Diaquini &			IK: mustakhraj of Şahiħ Ibn Khuzayna AD: mustakhraj of Suma of Abū Dāwūd T: mustakhraj of al-Jāmi 'of al-Timidhī Mmen: work on Muslim's transmitters
Egypt - Hijāz	And Dimer of Harmer MRM	An Million	Al-Uqayii TB ←	Al-Muzati (d. 264) 6 Rabi' (d. 256)	irī hīhaym
Date 450	400	350	300	270	MM: mustakhraj of Muslim MB: mustakhraj of al-Bukhā MBM: mustakhraj of the Şa

Chart 1.1 Sahihayn Network Chart

The Mustakhraj Genre

The phenomenon of the mustakhraj forms a bizarrely short and circumscribed chapter in the history of Islamic religious thought. These works were produced from about 270/880 to 480/1085 in the Nile-Oxus region and then exited the stage of cultural expression.⁷ They mark a transitional period between the time when one could realistically cultivate one's own isnāds to the Prophet and the time when books of hadīth replaced this direct connection. A scholar produced a mustakhraj by compiling a book of hadīths based on an existing collection that he used as a template. For each of the hadīths in the template book the author would use his own narration of the hadīth, with the isnād extending from him back to the Prophet. The very term mustakhraj connotes 'seeking to include' certain narrations from the Prophet. Isnāds in these mustakhrajs would generally join with the isnāds of the template collection at the teacher of the original collector, following the same isnād from that point to the Prophet.⁸

*Mustakhraj*s could vary in the degree to which they adhered to the format and contents of the template collection. Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī's (d. 430/1038) mustakhraj of Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ is remarkably faithful to the contents of the original, generally replicating them down to the details of each narration. Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ismā'īlī's (d. 371/981–2) mustakhraj of Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, now lost, appears to have been so faithful that if he could find no other transmission of a ḥadīth he would narrate it through al-Bukhārī and his student al-Firabrī, the transmitter from whom al-Ismā'īlī received the Ṣaḥīḥ.⁹ Abū Ja'far Aḥmad b. Ḥamdān al-Ḥīrī of Naysābūr (d. 311/923–4) spent years working on a mustakhraj meeting Muslim's requirements for authenticity to the extent that he voyaged to Iraq and the Hijāz for a few hadīths needed to complete it.¹⁰ Other mustakhrajs were far more lenient. Ya'qūb b. Ishāq Abū 'Awāna al-Isfarāyīnī's (d. 312/924–5) work departs from Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ on many occasions in both content and structure.¹¹ Although the great Moroccan hadīth scholar of the early twentieth century, Muḥammad b. Ja'far al-Kattānī (d. 1927), asserts that Ibn al-Jārūd al-Naysābūrī's (d. 307/919–20) al-Muntaqā is a mustakhraj of Ibn Khuzayma's Ṣaḥīḥ, it is less than a fifth of the Ṣaḥīḥ's size and bears only the most superficial structural similarities.¹² Joint *mustakhraj*s of the Ṣaḥīḥayn were also more lax in following the format of the template collections, generally just listing hadīths found in the works and noting how al-Bukhārī or Muslim included them.

⁷ There may be one exception to this. Al-Dhahabī says that 'Abd al-Ghanī b. 'Abd al-Wāḥid al-Maqdisī (d. 600/1203) wrote a 48 juz' book entitled al-Misbāḥ fī 'uyūn aḥādīth al-ṣiḥāḥ in which he reproduced the ḥadīths of the Ṣaḥīḥaŋn with his own isnāds. This is the only mention of this book, however; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 21:446–7. Al-Rāfiʿī also notes that in the sixth/twelfth century one Abū al-Manṣūr Naṣr b. 'Abd al-Jabbār made a mustakhraj of al-Khalīlī's Faḍā ʿil Qazwīn from his own ḥadīths; al-Rāfiʿī, al-Tadwīn, 3:449.

⁸ For useful discussion of the mustakhraj genre and related topics, see Mullā Khāțir, Makānat al-Şahīhayn, 167; Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīh al-anzār fī ma'rifat 'ulūm al-āthār, 40-2; Muḥammad b. 'Alī Ibn Daqīq al-'Īd, al-Iqtirāh fī bayān al-iştilāh, ed. Qaḥṭān 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Dūrī ([Baghdad]: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa al-Shu'ūn al-Dīniyya, 1982), 317; Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 86-7; al-Sakhāwī, Fath al-mughīth, 1:57.

⁹ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 13:319.

A genre of hadīth literature similar to the mustakhraj is that of atrāf, or an index of hadīths by the key components of their matns. A book of the atrāf of the Ṣahīhayn would list all their hadīths by the beginning of the matn or its key component, and then provide all the transmissions of that tradition found in the two works.¹³ Unlike mustakhrajs, which are organized along the chapter structure of the template book, atrāf books usually present the hadīths according to the Companion at the beginning of the isnād.

From a modern standpoint it seems difficult to discern the purpose or utility of producing a mustakhraj. Why reproduce a copy of an existing hadīth collection? Why not boast one's own corpus of hadīths or express one's own legal or doctrinal vision? Mustakhrajs certainly did not replace original hadīth collections. Many hadīth scholars from the long fourth century, such al-Māsarjisī, produced gargantuan personal musnads alongside mustakhrajs of the Şahīḥayn.

¹⁰ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 4:337–8; cf. al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 23:402–3.

¹¹ It is interesting to note that the great Muslim analyst of the hadīth tradition, Ibn Hajar al-'Asqalānī (d. 852/1449) notes that although Abū 'Awāna's book has been dubbed a mustakhraj of Ṣahīḥ Muslim, it deviates from it a great deal, and that even the author notes that on some occasions; Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 67.

¹² Al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustaṭrafa, 20. Ibn al-Jārūd's text contains no introduction explaining the nature of his work. See Abū Muḥammad 'Abdallāh b. 'Alī Ibn al-Jārūd al-Naysābūrī, Kītāb al-muntaqā min al-sunan al-musnada 'an Rasūl Allah (s), ed. 'Abdallāh Hāshim al-Yamānī al-Madanī (Cairo: Maṭba'at al-Fajjāla al-Jadīda, 1382/1963).

¹³ Al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustaţrafa, 125; Abū Mas[°]ūd Ibrāhīm al-Dimashqī, "Aţrāf al-Bukhārī wa Muslim," MS 1164, Maktabat al-Asad, Damascus; Khalaf b. Muḥammad al-Wāsiţī, "Aţrāf Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī wa Muslim," MS 1162, Maktabat al-Asad, Damascus.

The motivation for producing a mustakhraj lies on two levels. First, we must remember that for transmission-based scholars a hadīth collection could not simply be opened up and cited; one needed to have heard it from an authorized chain of transmitters who in turn had heard it from its author. Abū Muhammad Qāsim b. Aşbagh al-Mālikī of Cordova (d. 340/951) traveled east in 274/887-8 to study in Iraq and access the wealth of transmitted material in the heartlands of Islam. When he discovered that he had "missed" his chance to hear the Sunan of Abū Dāwūd from its author, he produced a mustakhraj of the work.¹⁴ Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī states that he composed his mustakhraj of Muslim for the benefit of those who had "missed" hearing that book.¹⁵ When Qāsim b. Asbagh realized he had missed his opportunity to be incorporated into the chain of transmitters of Abū Dāwūd's book, he reconstructed his own version of his Sunan. Abū Nu'aym, who died about 170 years after Muslim, similarly offered his own version of Sahih Muslim to his contemporaries with his own intact link to the Prophet. Yet how could a scholar "miss" his chance to hear a book when all he had to do was find an authorized transmitter of the work?¹⁶ As we shall see, this would entail relying on an unappealingly long chain of transmission back to the Prophet, an act that a hadīth scholar was loathe to do.

Mustakhraj: The Ṣaḥīḥayn as Formative Texts

The second level on which the mustakhraj attracted hadīth scholars of the long fourth century was the manner in which the template collec-

106

¹⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:49; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:192–3. He also produced a short collection called al-Muntaqā, which al-Dhahabī says is the equal of Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ in authenticity and is based on the chapter structure of Ibn al-Jārūd's al-Muntaqā. See al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustațrafa, 20.

¹⁵ Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī, al-Musnad al-mustakhraj 'alā Ṣaḥīḥ al-imām Muslim, ed. Muḥammad Hasan Ismā'īl al-Shāfi'ī, 4 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1417/ 1996), 1:89–90.

¹⁶ We must certainly acknowledge the possibility that a scholar in the fourth/tenth or fifth/eleventh century may not have been able to find an authorized transmitter for a work, especially a more obscure hadīth collection. While in Baghdad in 478/1085, for example, Abū Bakr Muhammad b. al-Walīd al-Țurțūshī (d. 520/1126) could not find a transmitter from whom to hear al-Khațtabī's commentary on the Sunan of Abū Dāwūd, Maʿālim al-sunan. In the case of Qāsim b. Aşbagh, who associated with Abū Dāwūd's students, and works as widely studied as the Ṣahūḥayn at the time of Abū Nuʿaym, this seems unlikely. See al-Silafī, "Muqaddimat al-ḥāfiz al-kabīr Abī Ṭāhir al-Silafī," in Ḥamd b. Muhammad al-Khaṭṭābī, Maʿālim al-sunan, 4:358–9.

tion served as a formative text through which scholars could engage the Prophet's authoritative legacy. Formative texts are those works that serve as textual fora for members of a community to express their own relationship with the source of authority in their tradition. In Judaic law, the elaboration of ritual law or its adaptation to new challenges takes place through the rabbi's interpretive interaction with the Torah, Mishna and Talmud. They provide the formative texts through which he establishes a relationship between the Lawmaker and the needs of his community. Formative texts not only embody the authority of the Lawmaker, but also serve as a vehicle for the believer to extend that authority into his own context.

The potential for a hadīth collection to function as a formative text stems from the essential magnetism that the hadīth medium exerted on Muslims. A direct transmission from Muhammad, the living isnād to his legacy, tied Muslims to the Prophetic charisma. The isnād incorporated the transmitter into the hermeneutic chain of interpreters. The transmitter could then draw on the Prophet's normative precedent and manifest it in daily life, where his exemplum dominated the arenas of law and social mores. The Prophet's message had moved out from Islam's epicenter in space and time through generations of interpreters who had inherited and transformed his teachings, and the isnād was the tie that bound the scholar to that one true source of authority. In essence, the mustakhraj was a collection of these transmissions, a vehicle for expressing and establishing one's relationship to the source of hermeneutic authority.

Scholars of the Islamic tradition thus placed great value on proximity to the Prophetic legacy. In the face of Abū Zur'a's barbed critiques, Muslim defended his use of flawed narrations in his Sahāh by asserting that their short isnāds made them attractive options (in addition, he argued, he had more reliable versions of the same Prophetic traditions with longer isnāds). Muslim's aspiration for elevated isnāds echoed his senior contemporary Abū Bakr b. Abī Shayba's (d. 235/849) exhortation that "seeking elevated isnāds is part of religion (talab al-isnād al-ʿālī min al-dīn)."¹⁷ Mustakhrajs represented a forum in which hadīth scholars could display the elevation or quality of their personal narrations from the Prophet. Abū Nuʿaym ʿAbdallāh al-Ḥaddād (d. 517/1123) of Isfahan once faced criticism from an opponent who faulted him for not having an elevated isnād to Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ. Al-Ḥaddād replied that while he did not have an elevated isnād for the book itself, he had heard Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī's Mustakhraj of the Ṣaḥīḥ from his father. He boasted:

¹⁷ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 6.

If you heard [the Mustakhraj] from my father it would be as if you had heard [Muslim's hadīths] from 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī (a famous transmitter of Muslim's Şahīh); and if I wanted I would say: as if you had heard them from al-Julūdī (an earlier transmitter of Muslim's Şahīh); and if I wanted to say: it would be as if you had heard them from Ibn Sufyān (who transmitted the Şahīḥ from Muslim)—I would not be lying. And if I wanted I would say: it was as if you had heard them from Muslim himself. [The Mustakhraj] has some even more elevated hadīths, so that if you heard them from my father it would be as if you, al-Bukhārī and Muslim had all heard them from the same teacher.¹⁸

Here al-Haddād used Abū Nuʿaym al-Isbahānī's Mustakhraj of Muslim's collection to assert his own proximity to the Prophet. This conversation occurred in the sixth/twelfth century, long after the canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, and al-Haddād uses the two icons as benchmarks for rating his own link to the Prophet. Abū Nuʿaym's Mustakhraj features such elevated isnāds, al-Haddād implies, that by reading it even in his own time one could become al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's equal. When Qāsim b. Asbagh "missed" his opportunity to hear Abū Dāwūd's Sunan from its author, what he had missed was the chance to transmit the work with a respectably short isnād to the Prophet. When faced with hearing the work from one of Abū Dāwūd's students, and thus adding another transmitter between himself and the Prophet, he felt it was more appealing to reconstitute the work with his own, shorter isnāds.

In addition to affording the opportunity to prove the elevation of isnāds, mustakhrajs also provided a stage for demonstrating their authenticity. For twelve out of the thirty-six known mustakhrajs of the Ṣaḥīḥayn we have explicit evidence that the authors attempted to meet certain requirements for authenticity (siḥḥa), often imitating those of al-Bukhārī or Muslim. This sometimes became a cause of much concern and tension for scholars. Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. Muḥammad al-Barqānī (d. 425/ 1033–4), a premier student of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, admitted with regret to having used one person in his mustakhraj who was not up to the standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim.¹⁹ Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Isḥāq al-Sarrāj (d. 313/925) generally tried to stand by Muslim's standards but relaxed them order to get more hadīths from 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib.²⁰

¹⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 4:43.

¹⁹ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:333.

Yet the mustakhraj was not simply a vehicle for demonstrating the quality of one's link to the Prophet. It served as a stage for interpretation according to the specific needs and leanings of the scholar who produced it. The narrations that scholars chose as counterparts to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's ḥadīths often differed in significant ways from those of the Şahīḥayn, expressing the authors' own stances on the topic. The compilers of these *mustakhraj*s could also alter the organization or chapter titles of their works in addition to adding their own commentary. The following examples demonstrate how the Şahīḥayn served as formative texts that enabled later scholars to interpret and apply the Prophetic legacy according to their own specific needs.

a. Al-Ismā īlī: Rationalist Muhaddith

Abū Bakr al-Ismāʿīlī (d. 371/981-2) built up his corpus of hadīths in Baghdad, Rayy and Khurāsān before returning to his native Jurjān, where he became a local institution of hadīth study.²¹ Along with a vast musnad, he displayed his legal acumen by composing the Tahdhīb al-nazar, a work on Shāfi'ī legal theory (usūl), and writing a rebuttal of the Hanafī legal theorist al-Jassās (d. 370/982). Al-Ismā'īlī seems to have shared a great deal in common with what would emerge as Ash'arī doctrine in the decades after his death. The Mu'tazilite Buyid vizier al-Ṣāḥib b. 'Abbād (d. 385/995) sent him a very complimentary letter, an honor usually reserved for those scholars the vizier considered acceptably rationalist.²² It is thus not surprising that al-Ismāʿīlī, like Abū al-Hasan al-Ash'arī himself and later Ash'arites, found it necessary to publicly affirm his identification with the ahl al-sunna. Al-Dhahabī provides a transmission in which al-Ismā'īlī upholds what he calls the ahl al-hadith creed, including the duty "to accept without deviation what God spoke in His book and what has been transmitted authentically (sahhat bihi al-riwāya) from His Messenger (s)." In line with the standard ²⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 2:215.

²¹ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 291. Al-Khalīlī says al-Ismāʿīlī wrote books on al-Bukhārī and Muslim.

²² Ibn al-Şalāh, Tabaqāt al-fuqahā' al-shāfi 'iyya, ed. Yahyā al-Zayn 'Alī Najīb, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1413/1992), 1:417–418. For more about al-Ismā'īlī and his family, see Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge, 107 ff.

Sunni creed, he also describes God "by those attributes by which He has described Himself and His Prophet described Him... with no question as to how $(bi-l\bar{a} kayfa)$."²³

Al-Ismā'īlī's insistence on such matters belies an aversion to anthropomorphism consistent with the more rationalist traces we have of his personal leanings. His mustakhraj of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ reveals how he used the work as a forum to argue his own stances on ḥadīths dealing with subjects traditionally problematic for Muslim rationalists. In a ḥadīth describing the Day of Judgment, al-Bukhārī narrates from Abū Sa'īd al-Khudrī:

I heard the Prophet say: Our Lord [will] reveal His shin (an sāqihi) and every believing man and woman will prostrate to Him. But he who prostrated in the worldly life for the sake of reputation, he will go to prostrate, but his back will merely straighten again.²⁴

Al-Ismā'īlī notes that in the Qur'ānic verse to which this hadīth alludes, "[God] will reveal a shin, and they will be called to prostrate but will not be able to (Qur'ān 68:42)," features the indefinite, "a shin ('an sāq)" rather than the narration's definite "His shin ('an sāqihi)." Al-Ismā'īlī then provides another narration with the original Qur'ānic wording "yukshafu 'an sāq," which he favors because of "its agreement with the wording of the Qur'ān in that sentence." Ibn Ḥajar, one of our best sources for al-Ismā'īlī's work, explains the scholar's stance, "He does not think that God is possessed of members and limbs due to what that entails of resemblance to created beings (mushābahat al-makhlūqīn)." Al-Ismā'īlī was not the only scholar of his time to feel discomfort with al-Bukhārī's narration. In his commentary on al-Bukhārī's work, Abū Sulaymān Ḥamd al-Khāṭṭābī (d. 388/998) wrote that this ḥadīth refers metaphorically to God revealing His power (qudra).²⁵

Al-Ismā'īlī's rationalist streak reveals itself elsewhere in his Mus-takhraj to the extent that he even questions the authenticity of one of al-Bukhārī's hadīths. Describing how Abraham will meet his polytheist father on the Day of Judgment, the Prophet says, "Abraham [will] meet his father and say, 'O Lord, indeed you promised not to humiliate me (tukhzini) on the day they are all resurrected.' God [will] reply, 'Indeed

110

²³ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:106-7.

²⁴ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, #4919; Şahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-tafsīr, sūra 68, bāb 2.

²⁵ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 8:857-8; cf. al-Qanūbī, al-Sayf al-hādd, 146.

I have prohibited Heaven to the disbelievers $(al-k\bar{a}fir\bar{n})$."²⁶ Ibn Hajar notes that al-Ismāʿīlī found the very basis of this hadīth problematic (istashkala...hādhā al-hadīth min aslihi) and criticized its authenticity (sihha) after he included it in his Mustakhraj. Al-Ismāʿīlī notes:

This hadīth contradicts the evident meaning $(z\bar{a}hir)$ of God's words that "Abraham's praying for his father's forgiveness was but the fulfillment of a promise [Abraham] had made to him, and when it became clear to him that [his father] was an enemy of God he disassociated himself from him...(Qur'ān 9:114)."²⁷

Al-Ismāʿīlī thus concludes:

There is some question as to the authenticity of this report from the standpoint that Abraham knew that God does not renege on His promises ($l\bar{a}$ yukhlifu al-mī'ād), so how could he consider what happened to his father humiliation when he knew that [God would punish him on the Day of Judgment for his disbelief]?²⁸

b. Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī and Shiite-Sunni Polemic

Muslim's Sahīh includes a subchapter that has generally been titled "Proof that loving the Anṣār and 'Alī (r) is a part and indication of faith and that hating them is a sign of hypocrisy (al-dalīl 'alā anna hubb al-anṣār wa 'Alī (r) min al-īmān wa 'alāmātihi wa bughdahum min 'alāmāt alnifāq)." This title reflects the subchapter's contents: five narrations about the importance of loving the Anṣār (the Muslims native to Medina as opposed to those who immigrated from Mecca), four of them using the love \rightarrow believer vs. hatred \rightarrow hypocrite distinction. The subchapter ends with one narration in which the Prophet uses exactly the same construction to assert the importance of loving an early Muslim who was not one of the Anṣār, his cousin 'Alī b. Abī Ṭālib. In his Mustakhraj, Abū Nu'aym al-Iṣbahānī (d. 430/1038) provides ḥadīths that perfectly mirror the layout and content of Muslim's chapter, with five for the Anṣar and one for 'Alī. The significant difference appears in the subchapter ²⁶ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, #4768–9; Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-tafsīr; sūra 26, bāb 2. This hadīth is a narration of another hadīth found in Fath #3350; Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb ahādīth al-anbiyā', bāb 8, which discusses the story in more detail. See also Qur'ān, 26:87.

²⁷ "Wa mā kāna istighţār Ibrāhīm li-abīhi illā 'an maw ʿida wa ʿadahā iyyāhu fa-lammā tabayyana lahu annahu 'aduww^{un} li-Allāh tabarra 'a minhu..."

²⁸ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 8:641-2; see also al-Jazā'irī, Tawjīh al-nazar ilā uşūl al-athar, 1:332.

title: "On Love for the Anṣār as a Sign of Faith ($\bar{a}yat \ al-\bar{i}m\bar{a}n$)." There is no mention of 'Alī.²⁹

This small difference might seem unimportant until one views it in the context of Abū Nu'aym's other writings. Most importantly, he cultivated an ongoing interest in debating the Imāmī Shiites using hadīths. Abū Nu'aym's Kitāb al-imāma wa al-radd 'alā al-rāfida (Book of the Imamate and a Rebuttal of those who Reject the Caliphates of Abū Bakr and 'Umar) provides a manual for debating the Shiite claim that 'Alī should have been the first caliph. The book is organized along dialectic lines. with the structure "if your opponent says...then you say." Many of the debates in the work revolve around the tensions between the different hadīths used as proof texts by Shiites and Sunnis. Abū Nu'aym tells his opponent that "if you use reports (akhbār) as proof then it follows that you must accept them from your opponents...; reports (akhbār) are thus for you and against you."30 One of the main proof texts employed by Shiites was Muslim's above-mentioned hadīth about the believers' duty to love 'Alī and the hypocrites' disregard for him.³¹ Abū Nu'aym rebuts this proof text by alerting his opponent to the other reports in which the Prophet says the same thing about the Ansār.³² The pro-'Alī hadīth thus has no probative force in issues of succession, for "if [the opponent] says, 'That has been narrated from so-and-so and so-and-so,' let it be said to him, '[Material] opposing that has [also] been related. So if you use reports $(akhb\bar{a}r)$ as proof, since [all] the reports contest one another, [the reports] fail (saqatat).""³³ The subtle polemic embodied in Abū Nu'aym's subchapter title in his Mustakhraj now becomes evident, since it buries the pro-'Alī hadīth in the folds of a chapter he defines as strictly addressing love of the Anşār. For Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī, minimizing the importance and visibility of this hadīth and highlighting the similar compliments paid the Ansār is a critical part of his anti-Shiite polemic.

²⁹ Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī, al-Musnad al-mustakhraj, 1:156-157.

³⁰ Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī, Kitāb al-imāma wa al-radd 'alā al-rāfida, ed. 'Alī b. Muḥammad al-Faqīhī (Medina: Maktabat al-'Ulūm wa al-Ḥikam, 1415/1994), 217.

³¹ For a modern example of the polemical use of this hadīth, see Mohammad Ṣādeq Najmī, Sayrī dar Ṣaḥīḥayn, 77.

³² Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī, Kitāb al-imāma, 244.

³³ Abū Nu'aym, Kītāb al-imāma, 230.

c. Abū 'Awāna and an Independent Legal Path

Abū 'Awāna Ya'qūb b. Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 312/924-5) studied the legal scholarship of al-Shāfi'ī at the hands of the latter's two most renowned Egyptian students, Rabī b. Sulaymān al-Murādī (d. 270/883) and Abū Ibrāhīm Ismā'īl al-Muzanī (d. 264/878). Al-Dhahabī describes Abū 'Awāna as the first to introduce that school to the famous Khurāsānī city of Isfarāyīn, later home to generations of great Shāfi'ī scholars.³⁴ Abū 'Awāna's al-Ṣahīh al-musnad al-mukharraj 'alā Ṣahīh Muslim (The Authentic Musnad Collection Based on Sahāh Muslim), however, reveals an independent legal mind unconstrained by rigid loyalty to Muslim's book or al-Shāfi'ī's opinions. On the famous issue of what invalidates prayer if it passes in front of one, al-Shāfi'ī had rejected a Prophetic hadīth stating that a black dog, a woman or a donkey invalidates prayer. We know from a source that predates Abū 'Awāna, Muhammad b. Nasr al-Marwazī's (d. 294/906) Ikhtilāf al-fuqahā' (The Differing Opinions of Jurists), that al-Shāfi'ī based his opinion on a report from 'Ā'isha in which she objects to this notion, angrily telling the Companion who narrated the hadith that "you've compared us to dogs!"35 Although three narrations of 'Ā'isha's objection appear in Muslim's Sahīh,³⁶ he also includes a lengthy section of hadīths that support the idea that these three things do indeed invalidate prayer. In Muslim's work these conflicting reports are buried among a range of other topics, such as hadīths enjoining physically obstructing people who refuse to stop passing in front of someone engaged in prayer. Other hadīths in this subchapter state that one can protect oneself by constructing a small mound or placing something the size of the back of a saddle in front of oneself while praying.³⁷ The material that Muslim puts forth thus offers the reader no concrete conclusion, while al-Shāfi'ī acts definitively on 'Ā'isha's report.

In Abū 'Awāna's Mustakhraj, this issue is greatly simplified. The author, who disagrees with al-Shāfi'ī, includes a chapter called "The Size of the Barrier [by which] Nothing that Passes in Front of Someone Praying Can Harm Him (miqdār al-sutra allatī lā yuḍirru al-muṣallī man ³⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:3.

³⁵ Muhammad b. Naşr al-Marwazī, Ikhtilāf al-fuqahā', ed. Muhammad Ṭāhir Ḥakīm (Riyadh: Adwā' al-Salaf, 1420/2000), 161; cf. Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-ṣalāt, bāb man gāla lā yaqta'u al-ṣalāt shay'.

³⁶ Ṣahīh Muslim: kitāb al-şalāt, al-i tirād bayn yaday al-muşallī.

³⁷ Şahīh Muslim: kitāb al-şalāt, qadr mā yustaru al-musallī.

yamurru bayn yadayhi)." He states immediately after the chapter heading that if one does not have this barrier, then a black dog, a woman or a donkey does indeed violate prayers if it passes in front of one, and that a line drawn in the dirt is not sufficient protection (as Ahmad b. Hanbal claimed).³⁸ He then provides seven narrations backing up his point, most of which also appear in Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ. They instruct the reader to build these saddle-back-sized barriers in front of himself to prevent his prayer from being invalidated.³⁹

Here we see that Abū 'Awāna has taken a large, assorted and ultimately legally inconclusive chapter of Muslim's Sahīh and compressed it into a treatment of one problem: women, black dogs and donkeys invalidate prayer. To this he supplies an immediate solution: placing something in front of you while you pray. As we have mentioned earlier, it was the often inconclusive character of Muslim's Sahīh that diverted legal attention from the work. Abū 'Awāna's mustakhraj not only greatly simplifies this topic, but also transforms it into a legal text expressing the author's independent thought. Despite his ties to al-Shāfi'ī, Abū 'Awāna breaks with him on other salient issues as well, such as al-Shāfi'ī's insistence on saving "In the name of God, the most Merciful, the most Compassionate (bismillāh al-Rahmān al-Rahīm)" aloud in certain prayers.⁴⁰ As Wael Hallaq has demonstrated, in this period madhhabs were not yet rigid sets of legal stances. They were common hermeneutic traditions still in the process of being elaborated by the scholars who followed them. Al-Shāfi'ī himself was thus only primus inter pares among the jurists who followed his tradition.41 Abū 'Awāna's work demonstrates how a mustakhraj could function as an independent hermeneutic expression of the Prophet's legal authority within the nascent Shāfi'ī school.

³⁸ Abū 'Awāna Ya'qūb b. Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī, Musnad Abī 'Awāna Ya'qūb b. Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī, 4 vols. [vol. 3 missing] (Hyderabad: Maţba'at Jam'iyyat Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-ʿUthmāniyya, 1362–85/1942–63), 2:49. The missing sections of the Musnad have now been published as al-Qism al-mafqūd min Musnad Abī 'Awāna, ed. Ayman 'Ārif al-Dimashqī (Cairo: Maktabat al-Sunna, 1995); cf. Manşūr b. Yūnus al-Buhūtī, al-Rawd al-murbi', ed. Bashīr Muḥammad 'Awn (Damascus: Maktabat Dār al-Bayān, 1420/1999), 79.

³⁹ Abū 'Awāna, Musnad, 2:30–1.

⁴⁰ Abū 'Awāna, Musnad, 2:133-5.

⁴¹ Wael Hallaq, "From Geographical to Personal Schools?: A Reevaluation," Islamic Law and Society 8, no. 1 (2001): 24–5.

Ilal and Ilzāmāt: Interaction with the Standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim

When Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī read through Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ, he criticized the lines its author had drawn in compiling his collection. He found flaws in some of the narrations Muslim had declared authentic and criticized his failure to include other worthy material. Abū Zur'a's reaction to the Ṣaḥīḥ foreshadowed the emergence of two closely related genres of hadīth literature addressing the Ṣaḥīḥayn during the long fourth century: books of `ilal (flaws) and ilzāmāt (recommended additions).

Books detailing ilal, or the obscure flaws of transmission, represented the third tier of hadīth criticism discussed in the previous chapter. Such books existed since at least the early third/ninth century. The long fourth century, however, saw the appearance of ilal works devoted specifically to weeding out such flaws from the Sahīhayn. These works illustrate the multiplicity of approaches existing in the hadīth-critic community; a scholar critiquing the Sahīhayn was effectively juxtaposing his methods and standards of hadīth criticism with those used by al-Bukhārī and Muslim, critically applying his definition of 'authentic' to their works. We have two surviving criticisms of the Ṣahīhayn from this period. The earliest is Muhammad b. Ahmad Ibn 'Ammār al-Shahīd's (d. 317/929–30) ilal of Muslim's Ṣahīh. The most famous and comprehensive work, however, is the Kītāb al-tatabbu^c of the dominant Baghdad hadīth scholar 'Alī b. 'Umar al-Dāraquṭnī (d. 385/995).

As the third tier of hadīth criticism, the study of `ilal had always targeted two categories of flaws: independent and comparative. Critics first focused on flaws that independently undermined the strength of an isnād. A şahīh hadīth should possess an uninterrupted chain of trustworthy and competent transmitters that reached back to the Prophet.⁴² Hadīth critics thus searched for weak or error-prone transmitters as well as breaks between links in the isnād (inqitā^c). Broken transmissions included reports that someone who had never met the Prophet attributed directly to him (termed mursal) or that were actually the statements of the Prophet's Companions (termed mawqūf).⁴³ This stage of criticism was subjective, as different critics applied different standards to their material. Muslim's decision to accept the narration of two transmitters joined by the vague phrase "from/on the authority of ('an)," provided they were contemporaries, proved controversial for later scholars who upheld more rigid standards for transmission. Al-Bukhārī's inclusion of a ḥadīth narrated by the extremist Khārijite 'Imrān b. Ḥiṭṭān, who praised the caliph 'Alī's murderer in poetry, would prove similarly problematic for critics less forgiving of such 'heresies.'

⁴² For appropriate expressions of this definition, see Muslim, Ṣaḥīḥ, 1:23; Ibn Khuzayma, Ṣaḥīḥ Ibn Khuzayma, 1:3; Muḥammad Ibn Hibbān al-Bustī, Ṣaḥīḥ Ibn Hibbān, ed. Aḥmad Muḥammad Shākir (Cairo: Dār al-Maʿārif, [1952]), 1:112.

⁴³ For examples of these flaws in our earliest extant ilal work, see 'Alī b. al-Madīnī, al-Ilal, ed. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā A'ẓamī ([n.p.]: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1392/1972); 81, 104, 110.

The second breed of flaws on which 'ilal criticism focused was comparative. Scholars acknowledged two comparative signs of unreliable narrations: disagreement (khilāf) and a lack of corroboration (tafarrud). These two concepts existed in relative space, for both rested on the critic gathering all the available narrations of a hadīth and examining which were the most well-established. If a specific narration differed with the bulk of other transmissions or with that of a master hadīth scholar, it was generally deemed weak. If one student transmitted a narration of a hadīth without the corroboration of his colleagues, it too was declared unreliable.

A central theme in this comparison of isnāds was the layered notion of 'Addition' (ziyāda), a concept that Muslim scholars of this period commonly considered unified but which actually subsumed three very different phenomena. The first can be termed Isnād Addition, which occurred when one narration of a hadīth added a transmitter not found in the other isnāds. The second, termed Literal Matn Addition, involved one narration of a hadīth adding material to the text of the report. Finally, Normative Matn Addition occurred when one narration of a report that was generally considered to be the statement of a Companion (mawqūf) was elevated and attributed to the Prophet.⁴⁴

This comparison of narrations was also a subjective process. If, out of a selection of ten narrations of a tradition from reliable transmitters, only one was attributed to the Prophet while the others were the words of a Companion, most hadīth critics would consider the exception defective. This tradition would thus not be $sah\bar{i}h$, since it had been established as not extending back to the Prophet. Another critic, however, might trust the lone transmitter and choose his as the correct narration of the hadīth, declaring it an authentic Prophetic statement. Muslim often seems to have been more lax on such matters than his fourth/tenth-century critics. In the introduction to his Sahīh he states that he accepts a transmitter's uncorroborated material provided he not deviate blatantly from his cohorts.⁴⁵ As the works of Ibn 'Ammār and al-Dāraquṭnī demonstrate, on a number of occasions Muslim's desire to locate a reliable, uninterrupted narration of a hadīth from the Prophet led him to ignore the best established versions of the report, which often showed that the hadīth was actually of limited reliability.

⁴⁴ For a detailed discussion of the phenomenon of Addition (ziyāda), see Jonathan A.C. Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon: al-Dāraqutnī's Adjustment of the Ṣaḥāḥayn," Journal of Islamic Studies 15, no. 1 (2004): 8–11.

Many of the flaws that Ibn 'Ammār identifies in Muslim's Sahāh thus revolve around demonstrating how the best established version of one of Muslim's hadīths is actually a broken or weak transmission. Out of a total of thirty-six criticized narrations from the Sahāh, Ibn 'Ammar locates thirteen instances of inappropriate Addition (4 Isnād Addition, 4 Literal Matn Addition, 5 Normative Matn Addition), and nine instances of a break in the isnād (inqitā'). Ibn 'Ammār differs with Muslim's methodology in other areas as well. He finds fault with one narration because an earlier hadīth scholar could find no trace of it in the transmitter's personal notebooks.⁴⁶ For another narration Ibn 'Ammār explains that an error occurred because the transmitter had buried his books and begun narrating from memory. Here we see that Ibn 'Ammār adhered more to al-Bukhārī's school of thought, which appreciated written sources as an invaluable bulwark against error despite the emphasis of the hadīth-scholar community on oral transmission.⁴⁷

While Ibn 'Ammār's relatively early 'ilal work tackled only Muslim's Ṣaḥāḥ, fifty years later al-Dāraquṭnī critiqued both the Ṣaḥāḥayn. His Kitāb al-tatabbu' criticizes two hundred and seventeen narrations, one hundred from Muslim's Ṣaḥāḥ, seventy-eight from al-Bukhārī's and thirty-two shared by both collections.⁴⁸ Like Ibn 'Ammār, al-Dāraquṭnī's comments frequently involve instances of inappropriate Addition, especially in Muslim's work. Unlike Muslim, he only accepted Addition, either Isnād or Matn, when it enjoyed the support of a preponderance of

⁴⁵ Muslim, Sahīh, 1:6.

⁴⁶ Ibn 'Ammār Abū al-Fadl al-Shahīd, 'Ilal al-aḥādīth fī kitāb al-ṣaḥīh li-Muslim b. al-Hajjāj, ed. 'Alī b. Hasan al-Halabī (Riyadh: Dār al-Hijra, 1412/1991), 109.

⁴⁷ Al-Bukhārī states that "books are more accurate (ahfaz) for the people of knowledge (ahl al-ʿilm), since a person could transmit something and then return to a book and [it turns out] that it is as in the book"; see his Kitāb raf ʿ al-yadayn fi al-ṣalāt, 82.

⁴⁸ For a more exact breakdown of these narrations, see Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon," 11.

experts.⁴⁹ Al-Dāraquṭnī also reveals a stringency absent in al-Bukhārī's method. The Baghdad scholar chastises al-Bukhārī for narrating a hadīth from the arch-Khārijite Imrān b. Ḥiṭṭān, citing his deviant beliefs $(s\bar{u}' i'tiq\bar{a}dihi)$.⁵⁰

Unlike Hamd al-Khaṭṭābī and later hadīth critics such as Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyya (d. 751/1350) and Mullā 'Alī Qārī (d. 1014/1606), neither Ibn 'Ammār nor al-Dāraquṭnī criticized any hadīth found in the Ṣaḥāḥayn for ideological or polemical reasons.⁵¹ In only one instance does either scholar even directly address the legal implications of any hadīth. Ibn 'Ammār rejects a narration from Muslim's Ṣaḥāḥ stating that the Prophet did not perform 'umra after the battle of Hunayn because it contradicted another authentic ḥadīth asserting that he did.⁵² In fact, al-Dāraquṭnī demonstrates astonishing objectivity in his critique: although he had compiled an entire book of ḥadīths devoted to affirming that God would grant the believers a vision of Himself on the Day of Judgment, al-Dāraquṭnī explicitly rejects a unique narration in Ṣaḥāḥ Muslim supporting exactly that belief.⁵³

The second genre of hadīth literature closely related to 'ilal was that of ilzāmāt. These works listed hadīths that the authors believed al-Bukhārī and Muslim should have included in their two collections. Only four ilzāmāt works, also known as *mustadrak*s, were produced, all of them based on both al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's *Sahīh*s in tandem. The remarkable Mustadrak of al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī will receive sufficient attention in the next chapter. 'Abdallāh b. Ahmad Abū Dharr al-Harawī's (d. 430/1038) one-volume mustadrak of the Sahīhayn appears not to have survived.⁵⁴ Ahmad b. 'Alī al-'Awālī of Naysābūr (fl. 420/1030?)

⁴⁹ For more on al-Dāraqutnī's stance on Addition/ziyāda, see Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon," 31–4.

⁵⁰ 'Alī b. 'Umar al-Dāraqutnī, Kitāb al-ilzāmāt wa al-tatabbu', ed. Muqbil b. Hādī b. Muqbil (Medina: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, [1978]), 333.

⁵¹ See, for examples, Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 13:591; Shams al-Dīn Muhammad Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyya, al-Manār al-munīf fi al-şahāh wa al-daʿīf, ed. ʿAbd al-Fattāh Abū Ghudda (Aleppo: Maktab al-Matbūʿāt al-Islāmiyya, 1970), 78; Nūr al-Dīn Mullā ʿAlī b. Sultān Qārī, al-Asrār al-marfūʿa fi al-akhbār al-mawdūʿa, ed. Abū Hājir Muhammad al-Saʿīd Zaghlūl (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1405/1985), 319.

⁵² Ibn 'Ammār, 93.

⁵³ See Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon," 21.

⁵⁴ Al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 607. Here the author states that Abū Dharr produced a mustakhraj of both Ṣaḥīḥs. Al-Harawī's mustakhraj of Muslim was criticized for narrating from transmitters unworthy of Muslim's standards; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz; 3:201–3, 244. The large ḥadīth collection, amounting to thirteen printed volumes, of the later scholar Diyā' al-Dīn al-Maqdisī (d. 643/1245) also con-made a şaḥīḥ selection of ḥadīths from his teacher Abū Muḥammad 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad al-Bālawī (d. 410/1019) that met the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim ('alā sharṭ al-shaykhayn).⁵⁵ The only other extant work from this genre comes from al-Harawī's teacher, al-Dāraquṭnī. Scholars have closely identified his Kītāb al-ilzāmāt with his above-mentioned Kītāb al-tatabbu', and they have often been transmitted as one unit.

Ilzāmāt works applied al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's own standards to hadīths left out of their works. Unlike 'ilal works, this entailed a further application of the Shaykhayn's methods and not a juxtaposition with the methods of later critics. As with his critique of the Sahīhayn, al-Dāraqutnī did not use his ilzāmāt as a means for advancing his own legal or doctrinal positions. There is an almost total separation between the hadīths that al-Dāraqutnī addended to the Sahīhayn and those that he selected for his own legal reference, his Sunan. At no point, for example, does he claim that one of the narrations included in his Sunan should have been featured in the Sahīħ.⁵⁶

What remains unclear is how these scholars understood and articulated al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's requirements for authenticity. Al-Dāraquṭnī's Kitāb al-ilzāmāt implies he considered himself well acquainted with the two scholars' methodologies, and his student Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī (d. 401/1010–11) confidently refers to Muslim's "usual methods (rasm)."⁵⁷ The only explicit studies devoted to this subject, however, seem to be al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī's separate monographs on al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's requirements.⁵⁸ Neither work, however, is extant.

Both ilzāmāt and 'ilal activities seem to have been fairly informal among scholars of the long fourth century. Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī's teacher Hibatallāh b. al-Ḥasan al-Lālakā'ī (d. 418/1027–8), for example, noted incidentally in his Sharḥ uṣūl i'tiqād ahl al-sunna wa'l-jamā'a (Exposition of the Principles of the Ahl al-Sunna wa al-Jamā'a Creed) that a certain ḥadīth met Muslim's requirements and should have been included sisted of reports the author states "are not found in the Ṣaḥīḥayn," but the author makes no claim that they meet al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards of authenticity; Diyā' al-Dīn Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Wāḥid al-Maqdisī, al-Aḥādīth al-mukhtāra, ed. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abdallāh Duhaysh, 13 vols. (Beirut: Dār Khidr, 1421/2001), 1:69–70.

⁵⁵ 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 472.

⁵⁶ Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon," 20-21.

 $^{^{57}}$ Abū Masʿūd al-Dimashqī,
 Kitāb al-ajwiba, ed. Ibrāhīm b. ʿAlī Kulayb (Riyadh: Dār al-Warrāq, 1419/1998), 298.

⁵⁸ Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat kitāb al-Iklīl, 72.

in his Ṣaḥīḥ (yalzamuhu ikhrājuhu).⁵⁹ In addition to his Kītāb al-tatabbu^c, al-Dāraquṭnī criticized at least thirteen other narrations from Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ. These were not set down in any extant books, but have survived in a rebuttal by al-Dāraquṭnī's student Abū Masʿūd al-Dimashqī.⁶⁰

Required Study: Clarifying an Unclear Subject

As templates for mustakhrajs, al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections served as formative texts for scholars to interpret and implement the Prophet's normative legacy in new times. Through 'ilal and ilzāmāt works, hadīth scholars of the long fourth century critically engaged the standards of authenticity established by the Shaykhayn. Both the mustakhraj and the 'ilal/ ilzāmāt genres required an exhaustive knowledge of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections. Scholars seeking to partially reproduce their isnāds or understand their requirements for authenticity needed to identify all of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's chains of transmission. These genres of scholarly activity thus spurred a myriad of subsidiary studies on the *Sahīhayn. Mustakhraj*s themselves often included elucidations of obscure transmitters. Al-Ismā'īlī's work, for example, identifies a narrator in one isnād whom al-Bukhārī refers to simply as 'al-Maqburī' as the famous Successor Sa'īd al-Maqburī.⁶¹

Those who transmitted al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's Sahāhs also contributed to clarifying some of the collections' indistinct features and deciphering textual vagaries. Ibn al-Sakan (d. 353/964) of Baghdad settled in Egypt after years of travel and became an important transmitter of al-Bukhārī's Sahāh.⁶² He received his text of the Sahāh directly from al-Bukhārī's student al-Firabrī (d. 320/932) and attempted to clarify, through his own research, as many of the ambiguous transmitters as possible. As a result, his recension of the Sahāh became one of

120

⁵⁹ Abū al-Qāsim Hibatallāh b. al-Hasan al-Lālakā'ī, Sharh uşūl i'tiqād ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a, ed. Ahmad b. Sa'd b. Hamdān al-Ghāmidī, 4 vols. (Riyadh: Dār Țayba, 1415/1994), 4:878.

 $^{^{60}}$ See Abū Masʿūd al-Dimashqī, Kītāb al-ajwiba; 187, 195, 198, and 203, for examples.

⁶¹ İbn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 13:371.

⁶² Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ļuffāz, 3:100; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:88–9. He transmitted Şahīḥ al-Bukhārī to Ibn Asad al-Juhanī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. Yaḥyā b. Mufarraḥ and Abū Jaʿfar b. ʿAwn.

the most definitive studies of al-Bukhārī's transmitters.⁶³ Abū Dharr al-Harawī was a Mālikī who settled among the Bedouin near Mecca and visited the city every year for pilgrimage as well as to narrate hadīths. He brought together the three disparate transmissions of al-Bukhārī's Ṣahīh from Abū Ishāq al-Mustamlī of Balkh, al-Kushmīhanī of Merv and Abū Muḥammad al-Ḥamawayh of Sarakhs. These were the three most prominent students of al-Firabrī, the primary transmitter of the Ṣahīh from its author.⁶⁴ More importantly, al-Harawī noted the variations among the three transmissions and attempted to accurately reconstitute the original text.⁶⁵

Differences between various narrations of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ occasionally proved noticeable. Besides the transmission of al-Firabrī, those of Ibrāhīm b. Ma'qil al-Nasafī (d. 295/907–8) and Ḥammād b. Shākir (d. 290/902–3) also survived for several centuries. Ḥammād b. Shākir's recension, however, contained two hundred fewer narrations than that of al-Firabrī, while Ibrāhīm's was three hundred fewer.⁶⁶

Transmitters could also play more substantial editorial roles. Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī reports that when Abū Ishāq al-Mustamlī examined al-Firabrī's copy of the Ṣahīḥ he noticed that some sections were still in draft form, with a number of chapter headings lacking hadīths, or hadīths with no chapter headings. Al-Mustamlī states that he and his fellow students attempted to arrange unsorted material in its proper place (fa-adafnā baʿd dhālik ilā baʿd).⁶⁷

Most importantly, the long fourth century saw the emergence of studies specifically devoted to identifying and describing al-Bukhārī's

⁶³ Later scholars testify to the importance of Ibn al-Sakan's work; see Abū 'Alī al-Husayn al-Jayyānī al-Ghassānī, al-Ta'rīf bi-shuyūkh haddatha 'anhum Muhammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī fi kitābihi wa ahmala ansābahu wa dhikr mā yu'rafūn bihi min qabā'ilihim wa buldānihim, ed. Muḥammad al-Sa'īd Zaghlūl (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1418/1998), 11.

⁶⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:201; cf. Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:287.

⁶⁵ Ibn Daqīq al-Īd, al-Iqtirāh fī bayān al-istilāh, 299.

⁶⁶ Al-'Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāḥ, 26–7. Ibn Ḥajar explains that Ibrāhīm and Hammād heard incomplete versions of the Ṣaḥīḥ from al-Bukhārī and that al-Firabrī's recension represents the final product (aşl al-taşnīf); Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 69. For more information on the details of the transmission of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's *Ṣahīḥ*s, see Chapter 7 n. 100. For a discussion of the attribution and textual authenticity of the two works, see Appendix II.

⁶⁷ Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Bājī, Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Bājī wa kitābuhu al-Ta'dīl wa al-tajrīh li-man kharraja lahu al-Bukhārī fi al-Jāmi' al-şahīh, ed. Abū Lubāba Husayn, 3 vols. (Riyadh: Dār al-Liwā', 1406/1986), 1:310–1; Muḥammad b. Yūsuf al-Kirmānī (d. 786/1384), al-Kawākib al-darārī fi sharh Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī, 25 vols. (Cairo: al-Maţba'a al-Bahiyya al-Mişriyya, 1358/1939), 1:5.

and Muslim's transmitters. The earliest examples of this genre are limited to identifying al-Bukhārī's immediate sources. Ibn 'Adī's Asāmī man rawā 'anhum Muḥammad b. Ismā il al-Bukhārī and Muḥammad b. Isḥāq Ibn Manda (d. 395/1004–5) of Isfahan's Asāmī mashāyikh al-imām al-Bukhārī represent the first two generations of these transmitter studies. Abū Naṣr Aḥmad al-Kalābādhī (d. 398/1008) of Bukhara produced the most comprehensive listing of all al-Bukhārī's transmitters.⁶⁸ Yet it was not until the early fifth/eleventh century that a work was compiled on the transmitters used in Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ: this was the book of Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. 'Alī Ibn Manjawayh of Naysābūr (d. 428/1036–7). Al-Dāraquṭnī was the first to write a biographical dictionary covering both the Ṣaḥīḥayn. His student al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī and the Baghdad scholar al-Lālakā'ī each repeated this task several years later.⁶⁹

Al-Dāraquṭnī's oeuvre constituted the first and most impressive holistic study of the Saḥīḥayn as two complementary texts. He authored no less than eleven books detailing various aspects of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's work. In addition to his biographical dictionary of their transmitters, he compiled separate lists of the transmitters after the generation of the Companions who comprised al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's *isnāds.*⁷⁰

⁷⁰ These two works, Dhikr asmā' al-tābi'in wa man ba'dahum mimman şahhat riwāyatuhu min al-thiqāt ind Muhammad b. Ismā'il al-Bukhārī and Dhikr asmā' al-tābi'in wa man ba'dahum mimman şahhat riwāyātuhu 'ind Muslim, have been published together as Dhikr asmā' al-

⁶⁸ Although originally titled al-Hidāya wa al-irshād fi ma'rifat ahl al-thiqa wa al-sadād alladhīna akhraja lahum al-Bukhārī fi Şahīhihi, this work is often referred to as Rijāl Ṣahīḥ al-Bukhārī.

⁶⁹ Al-Hākim's small work is entitled Tasmiyat man akhrajahum al-Bukhārī wa Muslim wa mā infarada bihi kull minhumā, ed. Kamāl Yūsuf al-Hūt (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Kutub al-Thaqāfiyya and Dār al-Jinān, 1407/1987). This genre continued beyond the scope of our long fourth century. Abū 'Alī al-Jayyānī al-Ghassānī (d. 498/1105) made efforts to complete the task of identifying al-Bukhārī's obscure transmitters (see above note 63). The Mālikī jurist Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Bājī wrote a book collecting critical opinions on al-Bukhārī's men entitled Kitāb al-ta dīl wa al-tajrīķ li-man rawā 'anhu al-Bukhārī fī al-Ṣaḥīh (see al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustatrafa, 154; n. 67 above). Abū al-Fadl Muhammad b. Ţāhir al-Maqdisī (d. 507/1113) combined Ibn Manjawayh and al-Kalābādhī's two works in Kitāb al-jam' bayn kitābay Abī Nasr al-Kalābādhī wa Abī Bakr al-Işbahānī, 2 vols. (Hyderabad: Matba'at Majlis Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-Nizāmiyya, 1323/[1905]). 'Abdallāh b. Ahmad al-Shantarīnī of Cordova (d. 522/1128) wrote a book correcting some of al-Kalābādhī's oversights called Kitāb bayān 'ammā fī kitāb Abī Naşr al-Kalābādhī min al-nuqsān as well as a work on Muslim's men entitled Kītāb al-minhāj. Ahmad b. Ahmad al-Hakkārī (d. 763/1362) also wrote a book on the men of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. Finally, one of the most useful studies on this topic is Abū Bakr Muhammad b. Ismā'īl Ibn Khalfūn's (d. 636/1238-9) work on al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's teachers, al-Mu'lim bi-shuyūkh al-Bukhārī wa Muslim, ed. Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Ādil b. Sa'd (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1421/2000); al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat alhuffaz, 4:47; Sezgin, Geschichte des arabischen Schrifttums, 1:131.

He emphasized the complementary relationship of the two works in his listing of the Companions featured in both Sahāhs as well as those that each book used exclusively. He also made a study of the different transmissions of the Sahāhayn after their authors' deaths.⁷¹ The functional nature of these studies reveals itself in the book that al-Dāraqutnī tailored to his interest in expanding the number of verified authentic hadīths through ilzāmāt work. He composed a book solely on the Companions through whom reliable hadīths were transmitted but who were not included in the Sahāhayn (Dhikr al-ṣahāba alladhīna ṣahhat al-riwāya 'anhum wa laysū fī al-Ṣahāḥayn).⁷²

An examination of the studies devoted to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters reveals a gradually increasing mastery of the two Ṣaḥīḥs as the long fourth century progressed. Moreover, we are alerted to another central feature of the network of Ṣaḥīḥayn scholars in this period: the serious regional boundaries that still constricted the movement of texts and information. In Jurjān, Ibn 'Adī was unable to identify one of al-Bukhārī's teachers mentioned in the Ṣaḥīḥ, Sa'īd b. Marwān, listing him as unknown (lā yu'raf).⁷³ Even Ibn Manda, who died some thirty years after Ibn 'Adī, fails to mention this Sa'īd b. Marwān in his book on al-Bukhārī's sources. It is not until Abū Naṣr al-Kalābādhī, who died a mere three years after Ibn Manda but lived mainly in Bukhara, that we find a listing for Sa'īd b. Marwān b. 'Alī Abū 'Uthmān al-Baghdādī (d. 252/866), who lived and died in Naysābūr.⁷⁴

Why was neither Ibn 'Adī nor Ibn Manda able to identify this transmitter? Sa'īd b. Marwān had narrated ḥadīths to two major scholars in his adopted home city of Naysābūr, Ibn Khuzayma and his disciple Ibn al-Jārūd. Ibn 'Adī, however, never traveled to the Khurāsān region, and neither he nor his close friend al-Ismā'īlī had any contact with Ibn Khuzayma or his student. It is therefore not surprising that tābi'īn, ed. Burhān al-Danawī and Kamāl Yūsuf al-Ḥūt, 2 vols. (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Kutub al-Thaqāfiyya, 1985).

⁷¹ For the unpublished works, Asmā' al-şahāba allatī ittafaqa fīhā al-Bukhārī wa Muslim wa mā infarada bihi kull minhumā, Kītāb fī dhikr riwāyāt al-Ṣahīḥayn and al-Dāraquṭnī's dictionary of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters, see Fuat Sezgin, Geschichte des arabischen Schrifttums, 1:207–9.

⁷² This work remains unpublished, al-Dāraqutnī, "Dhikr asmā' al-şahāba alladhīna şahhat al-riwāya 'anhum wa laysū fi al-Ṣahīḥayn," MS 7159, Maktabat al-Asad, Damascus: fols. 197b–198a.

⁷³ Ibn 'Adī, Asāmī, 110.

⁷⁴ Al-Kalābādhī, Rijāl Ṣaḥāţ al-Bukhārī, 2:872. Al-Hākim benefited from al-Kalābādhī; see his Tasmiyat man akhrajahum al-Bukhārī wa Muslim, 123.

Ibn 'Adī ignores Ibn Khuzayma completely in the list of great hadīth scholars in his *al-Kāmil.*⁷⁵ Conversely, Ibn Manda visited both Bukhara and Naysābūr. But we know from al-Hākim, however, that he had completed his book on al-Bukhārī's teachers before staying in Naysābūr and possibly before arriving in Bukhara.⁷⁶ It seems that, like Ibn 'Adī, Ibn Manda never had access to information about Sa'īd b. Marwān of Naysābūr.

Regional and Temporal Distribution of the Sahihayn Network

Ibn 'Adī's and Ibn Manda's failure to identify Sa'īd b. Marwān illustrates one of the salient characteristics of the study of the Şaḥīḥayn in the long fourth century. Although ḥadīth scholars traversed the Islamic world from Andalusia to Central Asia, resilient regional cults still developed according to material constraints like the availability of certain texts as well as the functionalist and ideological preferences of local scholarly communities. The Ṣaḥīḥayn Network of the long fourth century revolved around three of these regional schools: Naysābūr, Jurjān and Baghdad.

a. Naysābūr and the Hometown Cult of Muslim

Naysābūr was the birthplace of the mustakhraj phenomenon, and it was in this city and its environs that the genre flourished most intensively. From the time of Muslim's death until the close of the long fourth century, scholars devoted mustakhrajs to the Sahīh of the city's native son. In addition, Naysābūr scholars crafted mustakhrajs of Abū Dāwūd's Sunan, al-Tirmidhī's Jāmi' and Ibn Khuzayma's Sahīh. It was only in the mid 300s/900s, however, that the city's scholars developed an interest in al-Bukhārī's collection.

124

⁷⁵ For a biography of Saʿīd b. Marwān al-Baghdādī, see Ibn Khalfūn, al-Muʿlim bi-shuyūkh al-Bukhārī wa Muslim, 514–5. Ibn Khalfūn lists another Saʿīd b. Marwān as well, namely Saʿīd b. Marwān b. Saʿīd Abū 'Uthmān al-Azdī from the Jazīra. Ibn Wāra and Abū Ḥātim al-Rāzī narrated from him, and al-Bukhārī notes him in his Tārīkh al-kabīr. It is very unlikely that this was the Saʿīd b. Marwān to which Ibn 'Adī was referring, since he was very familiar with Ibn Wāra and Abū Ḥātim, both of whom appear in his al-Kāmil.

⁶ Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:320–4.

Naysābūr was the linchpin of the eastern Islamic lands during the classical period. Astride the road that ran from Baghdad to Central Asia and beyond, it was an inevitable commercial way station and a bustling center of scholarly activity. The city's intellectual landscape was sharply divided between the Hanafi school, with its strong ties to Mu'tazilite doctrine, and the transmission-based ahl al-sunna, who generally identified with the teachings of al-Shāfi'ī.77 In the decades after the city laid Muslim to rest at the head of one of its major squares, Naysābūr's transmission-based legal culture was dominated by Muhammad b. Ishāq Ibn Khuzayma. Declared "imām of the imāms," Ibn Khuzayma was described by al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī as "the foremost [scholar] by agreement of all of his age," an authority on the teachings of al-Shāfi'ī and a source of religious rulings (fatwās).78 He studied with al-Shāfi'ī's most illustrious students, al-Rabī^ć and al-Muzanī, and was relied upon greatly by Ibn Surayi (d. 305/917-18), the Baghdad scholar around whom the Shāfi'ī legal school coalesced.⁷⁹ Ibn Khuzayma rigidly upheld the über-Sunni stance on the nature of the Qur'an, stating that anyone who believed it to be created was an unbeliever or heretic.⁸⁰ A poem by Muhammad b. Ibrāhīm b. Yahyā of Naysābūr testifies to the high positions of Muslim and Ibn Khuzayma in the city's pantheon of scholars:

So set aside all thought of Jūrjān, for indeed our scholars In the land of Naysābūr are more illustrious by far; so why the sadness? No one can be compared to Yaḥyā b. Yaḥyā.⁸¹ If tested his glory would suffice you. And his student Isḥāq [b. Rāhawayh], how great he is (li-llāh darruhu)! Indeed, along with al-Ribāṭī, their virtue is not hidden. Abū al-Aẓhar al-Mifdāl, then Ibn Hāshim, And Muslim, they are the lords of ḥadīth so do not deny it. And who is their equal in prodigious memory and station? ... And from us, too, Ibn Isḥāq the Khuzaymī, our shaykh, Our source of pride, shaykh of all *shaykh*s in his time.

⁷⁷ See Richard Bulliet, The Patricians of Nishapur (Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1972), 36–40.

⁷⁸ Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, Tārīkh Nīshābūr, 120; Bulliet, Patricians, 62.

⁷⁹ Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 104; al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 312–3; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 12:233–6.

⁸⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:211 ff.

⁸¹ Abū Zakariyyā Yaḥyā b. Yaḥyā al-Tamīmī al-Naysābūrī (d. ca. 220/835); see Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb al-tahdhīb, 11:259.

Indeed he was for Islam a pillar and pivot. May God water well a grave with such a shaykh buried within.⁸²

One of Ibn Khuzayma's colleagues also exercised a tremendous amount of influence in Naysābūr. Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Isḥāq b. Ibrāhīm al-Sarrāj (d. 313/925) was one of the city's leading scholars. A student of Isḥāq b. Rāhawayh and a teacher of Ibn Khuzayma, both al-Bukhārī and Muslim studied ḥadīth with al-Sarrāj. He was an inveterate critic of the Ḥanafī school and active prosecutor of those who upheld the created wording of the Qur'ān.⁸³ Al-Sarrāj also produced one of the earliest *mustakhraj*s of Muslim's Sahīh.

Scholars in Naysābūr began using Muslim's collection as a template for *mustakhraj*s almost immediately after his death. Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī mentioned that Abū Bakr al-Fadl b. al-'Abbās al-Sā'igh of Rayy (d. 270/ 883) had done so during Muslim's lifetime.⁸⁴ Abū Bakr Muhammad Ibn Rajā' (d. 286/899) studied with many of the same teachers as Muslim did. He nonetheless used his coevals's remarkable collection as the basis for a mustakhraj called al-Sahīh al-mukharraj 'alā kitāb Muslim.⁸⁵ Abū al-Fadl Ahmad b. Salama al-Bazzār (d. 286/899), Muslim's companion to whom the Sahīh is dedicated, also wrote a mustakhraj.⁸⁶ As the Sahīhayn Network Chart demonstrates, scholars studying or living in Naysābūr and its immediate environs continued to produce waves of *mustakhraj*s on Muslim's collection. No less than ten had been compiled before Abū 'Abdallāh Muhammad b. Ya'qūb Ibn al-Akhram (d. 344/955) finally produced one of the Sahīhayn together.87 Almost two decades later al-Māsarjisī (d. 365/976) devoted another mustakhraj to the Sahīhayn.⁸⁸ Yet in the century after Ibn al-Akhram's death, Naysābūr produced eight more mustakhrajs of Muslim and four of the combined Sahihayn, but only one devoted solely to al-Bukhārī's Sahīh.

⁸² Al-Hakim al-Naysābūrī, Tārīkh Nīshābūr, 177-8.

⁸³ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 310–11; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 1:264–7; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:215; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 23:462–4.

⁸⁴ Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī, Kītāb al-du'afā' wa ajwibatuhu 'alā as'ilat al-Bardha'ī, 2:674.

⁸⁵ Ibn al-Şalāh, Şiyānat Şahīh Muslim, 89; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:186; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 21:288.

⁸⁶ Al-Dhahabī states that people like Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī also called the work Şahīh Ahmad b. Salama; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 4:408; cf. al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 21:59–60; idem, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:156.

⁸⁷ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:55; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:312–3; cf. al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 315.

⁸⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:110-11; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:337-8.

Although al-Bukhārī was not a native of Naysābūr like Muslim, he resided in the city for approximately five years, during which time he narrated his Sahīh to circles of hadīth students.⁸⁹ Why then did scholarly activity in the city seem so oblivious of al-Bukhārī's work until Ibn al-Akhram's and al-Māsarjisī's writings? The answer lies in the qualitative preference Muslim enjoyed in his hometown as well in the accusations of heresy that had tainted al-Bukhārī's name. When Abū al-'Abbās b. Sa'īd Ibn 'Uqda (d. 332/944), who taught many Naysābūrīs, was asked who was more knowledgeable, al-Bukhārī or Muslim, he eventually replied that al-Bukhārī occasionally made mistakes with reports transmitted from Syrians because he had only received these in written form. He thus sometimes thought that a person mentioned once by his name and once by his patronymic was two people. Conversely, Ibn 'Uqda notes, Muslim rarely made errors concerning transmission (ilal) because he avoided al-Bukhārī's practice of including additional hadīths with incomplete isnāds.90 Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī (d. 349/960), who had traveled widely in Egypt, Jurjān and Merv, concluded that "there is not beneath the heavens (taht adīm al-samā") [a book] more authentic than the book of Muslim."91 Ibrāhīm b. Muhammad Abū Ishāq al-Muzakkī (d. 362/973), a student of Ibn Khuzayma and Ibn Abī Hātim al-Rāzī, proved to be a major link between Naysābūr and scholarly circles in Baghdad and Isfahan. He instructed al-Dāraqutnī, al-Barqānī, al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī as well as Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī. Although al-Muzakkī transmitted a number of Muslim's works (presumably his Sahih was among them) on his many visits to Baghdad, of al-Bukhārī's works he transmitted only the Tārīkh al-kabīr.92

This delayed attention to al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ also stemmed from the scandal of the lafz of the Qur'ān. Two of the most influential transmission-based scholars in the city, Ibn Khuzayma and al-Sarrāj, both ⁸⁹ We know from al-Kalābādhī that al-Bukhārī had been narrating his work to students since at least 248 AH. He arrived in Naysābūr in about 250 AH; al-Kalābādhī, Rijāl Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, 1:24.

⁹⁰ Al-Hākim Naysābūrī, Tārīkh Nīshābūr, 101; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:90.

⁹¹ Ibn Manda heard this directly from Abū 'Alī; see Ibn Manda, Shurūt, 71; al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 8:70–2; cf. al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:80.

⁹² Al-Muzakkī must have visited Baghdad more than once, since at the time of his recorded visit in 316/928–9 both al-Dāraquţnī and al-Barqānī would have been too young to have heard from him; al-Dāraquţnī never voyaged east from Iraq. See al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 6:165–7; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:289–90.

aggressively attacked anyone who upheld a belief in the created wording of the holy book. Even Ibn al-Akhram, who composed the first joint al-Bukhārī/Muslim mustakhraj, did so only after responding to al-Sarrāj's request to complete one based solely on Muslim's Sahīh.93 Abū al-Walīd Hassān b. Muhammad al-Umawī (d. 344/955) expressed a desire to craft a mustakhraj of al-Bukhārī's work, but his father instructed him to follow Muslim due to al-Bukhārī's lafz scandal.⁹⁴ It is thus no surprise that, with the exception of Ibn al-Akhram and al-Māsarjisī, all the conjoined Sahīhayn mustakhrajs in Naysābūr and the only one devoted solely to al-Bukhārī appeared only after the generation of scholars who had studied with Ibn Khuzayma and al-Sarrāj had died (see Sahīhayn Network Chart). Only at that point could scholars like Abū Ahmad al-Hākim (d. 378/988), a judge who worked in Naysābūr's environs and whom al-Hakim al-Naysaburī calls one of most knowledgeable concerning the requirements of authenticity (shurūt al-sahīh), state, "May God bless imām Muhammad b. Ismā'īl [al-Bukhārī], for it was he who set forth the foundations $(al-us\bar{u}l)$ [of hadīth] and elucidated them to the people. All those who have come after him, like Muslim b. al-Hajjāj, have taken from his book (the Sahīh)."95

b. Jurjān: A Cult of al-Bukhārī Among Friends

On a map, the small province of Jurjān on the southeast coast of the Caspian Sea does not seem far from Naysābūr and its satellite cities of Tūs, Juvayn and Isfarāyīn. The intimidating Elborz Mountains, however, separate Jurjān's littoral marshes and thickly forested mountainsides from these Khurāsānī centers as well as from the great city of Rayy. Yet during the mid-fourth/tenth century, Jurjān constituted an important center of hadīth study in its own right. More specifically, it was home to three friends who formed a bastion of scholarly interest in al-Bukhārī's Ṣahīħ. The region produced no *mustakhraj*s of any other hadīth work. Two of these scholars emerged as extremely influential figures in the historical development of hadīth literature. We have already relied on 'Abdallāh Abū Aḥmad Ibn 'Adī (d. 365/975–6) as the earliest significant source on al-Bukhārī's life and work. He gained renown, however, for his voluminous dictionary of problematic hadīth transmitters, al-Kāmil fī du'afā' al-rijāl, that became the foundation for many later works in that genre. The Kāmil enjoyed immediate popularity and quickly spread among scholarly circles in major cities like Baghdad. Ibn 'Adī's younger contemporary in Baghdad, al-Dāraquṭnī, said that the work sufficed for all needs in that genre.⁹⁶ Ibn 'Adī traveled widely in Iraq, Syria, the Hijāz and Egypt and was deeply versed in the school of al-Shāfi'ī. He wrote a juridical manual called al-Intişār based on the chapter structure of al-Muzanī's Mukhtaşar, the most famous abridgment of the Shāfi'ī tradition's formative text, al-Shāfi'ī's Umm (The Motherbook).⁹⁷ Ibn 'Adī not only served as an important transmitter of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥāḥ from al-Firabrī in Jurjān,⁹⁸ he also wrote the aforementioned first work on al-Bukhārī's sources.

⁹³ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:55; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:312-3.

⁹⁴ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 90; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:75; idem Tārīkh al-islām, 25:417-8.

⁹⁵ Al-Hākimal-Naysābūrī, Tārīkh Nishābūr, 187; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:123–4. For Abū Ahmad's quote see al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 380.

When Ibn 'Adī died, his close friend and colleague al-Ismā'īlī (d. 371/ 981–2) led his funeral prayer.⁹⁹ As we have noted in the preceding discussion of al-Ismā'īlī's Mustakhraj, this scholar adhered to al-Shāfi'ī's transmission-based legal tradition and also exhibited marked rationalist tendencies. Al-Ismā'īlī was so well-respected that several hadīth scholars, including al-Dāraquṭnī, felt that he should have compiled his own şahīh instead of following in al-Bukhārī's footsteps. It was reported that when news of his death reached Baghdad, over three hundred hadīth scholars, merchants and jurists from both the Shāfi'ī and Ḥanbalī schools gathered in the main mosque to mourn him for several days.¹⁰⁰ Although al-Ismā'īlī produced no independent study of al-Bukhārī's work, his Mustakhraj remained an indispensable reference for students and scholars of the Ṣaḥīḥ, even late ones such as Ibn Ḥajar.

Abū Ahmad Muhammad b. Ahmad al-Ghiṭrīfī (d. 377/987–8) was the least accomplished of the Jurjān scholars. He was a very close ⁹⁶ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:245.

⁹⁷ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 291–2; cf. al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:102–3. The various recensions of the Umm are most likely collections of all the works narrated by Rabī^c b. Sulaymān from al-Shāfi^cī; Abū Zahra, al-Shāfi^cī (Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-ʿArabī, 1416/1996), 148–50.

⁹⁸ Ibn ʿAdī transmitted Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī to people like ʿAmr b. Ahmad b. Muhammad. al-Astarābādhī; Abū al-Qāsim Hamza b. Yūsuf al-Sahmī (d. 427/1035–6), Tārīkh Jurjān, ed. Muhammad ʿAbd al-Muʿīd Khān et al. (Hyderabad: Dāʾirat al-Maʿārif al-ʿUthmāniyya, 1387/1967), 106.

⁹⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:241.

¹⁰⁰ Al-Sahmī, Tārīkh Jurjān, 87; cf. al-Subkī, Tabaqāt al-shāfi iyya, 3:8; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:281–2.

associate of al-Ismā'īlī as well as his son's tutor.¹⁰¹ Like his friend, al-Ghiṭrīfī composed a mustakhraj of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ. Although his father was from Naysābūr, he lived almost his entire life in Jurjān. He visited Rayy and Baghdad, and was the only Jurjān scholar to have heard from Ibn Khuzayma in Naysābūr.¹⁰²

Why did this cluster of Jurjān scholars prove such redoubt partisans of al-Bukhārī's *Sahī*h to the exclusion of Muslim's and the other major fruits of the sahih movement? This phenomenon may have resulted in part from a limited exposure to Muslim's work. As the Sahīhavn Network Chart demonstrates, there were almost no personal links between Jurjān and Navsābūr, where the cult of Muslim's Sahīh matured. Ibn 'Adī thus excludes both Muslim and Ibn Khuzayma from his list of noteworthy hadīth scholars and does not seem to have had access to valuable information about al-Bukhārī's Naysābūr sources. As with Muslim's collection in Naysābūr, however, the Jurjān scholars also considered Sahīh al-Bukhārī to be a more accurate representation of the Prophet's legacy. Al-Ismāʿīlī argues in the introduction to his Mustakhraj (his Madkhal) that al-Bukhārī's book is superior to Muslim's because the latter "set out to do what [al-Bukhārī] sought to do, and took from him or from his books, except that he did not restrict himself [in what he included] as much Abū 'Abdallāh [al-Bukhārī] did, and he narrated from a large number from whom Abū 'Abdallāh would not deign to narrate (lam yata'arrad... li'l-riwāya 'anhum)." He adds that al-Bukhārī's Sahīh also bested Abū Dāwūd's Sunan because the former had higher standards for selecting hadīths as well as better explanations of their legal implications.¹⁰³ Abū al-Qāsim Hamza b. Yūsuf al-Sahmī (d. 427/1035-6), author of the local history of Jurjān (Tārīkh Jurjān), relies on al-Bukhārī ten times in his history for information about hadīth transmitters.¹⁰⁴ Although al-Sahmī interacted with several scholars who cultivated equal interests in al-Bukhārī and Muslim, including al-Dāraqutnī, Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī and al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, he never mentions Muslim in his work. He does, however, note two people as hearing Sahīh al-Bukhārī.

¹⁰¹ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:120.

¹⁰² Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:614–5.

¹⁰³ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 11; al-Jazā'irī, Tawjīh al-nazar ilā uşūl al-athar, 1:305. For a short summary of this, see Muhyī al-Dīn al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā' wa al-lughāt, 3 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, [1977]), 1:74.

¹⁰⁴ Al-Sahmī, Tārīkh Jurjān, 488. Al-Sahmī is connected to al-Bukhārī by the isnād of Abū Bakr Ahmad b. Abdān \leftarrow Muḥammad b. Sahl \leftarrow al-Bukhārī.

c. Baghdad: Inheriting the Study of the Ṣaḥīḥayn Among the Baghdad Knot

Baghdad inherited the study of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections from both Jurjān and Naysābūr. From the mid-fourth/tenth century to the mid-fifth/eleventh, the capital of the Abbasid caliphate hosted a knot of scholars who pioneered the study of the two works as complementary units. The genesis of this close association of experts lay in the seminal work of 'Alī b. 'Umar al-Dāraqutnī, whose eleven treatises on the Sahīhayn have proven some of the most influential books on the subject. In particular, his joint critical study, Kitāb al-ilzāmāt wa al-tatabbu', has attracted scholarly attention up to the present day. Al-Dāraqutnī brought these two previous centers of study together through his personal scholarly relationships with Abū Sa'īd al-Hīrī, Ibrāhīm al-Muzakkī, al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī and Ibn Dhuhl of Naysābūr, and Ibn 'Adī of Jurjān. He also interacted with scholars from farther afield in Central Asia, such as al-Kalābādhī. He received at least two transmissions of Muslim's Sahīh, one from Ibn Māhān in Egypt and one from Ibrāhīm al-Muzakkī. He heard Sahīh al-Bukhārī from Abū Saʿīd Ahmad Ibn Rumayh (d. 357/967-8) and most probably from others as well.¹⁰⁵

Al-Dāraquṭnī mentored another of the most influential scholars on the Sahāhayn in the long fourth century. Originally from Khwarazm in Transoxiana, Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. Muḥammad al-Barqānī, (d. 425/ 1033–4) traveled extensively throughout Khurāsān before settling in Baghdad, accompanied by a massive personal library. It was al-Barqānī who set down and assembled one of al-Dāraquṭnī's most famous and voluminous works, his prodigious *Kitāb al-ʿilal.*¹⁰⁶ Unlike his teacher, however, al-Barqānī managed to study extensively with al-Ismāʿīlī and became the most important transmitter of his *Mustakhraj.*¹⁰⁷ Al-Barqānī's interest in the Sahāḥayn led him to compile a musnad version of the two works as well as a joint *mustakhraj.*¹⁰⁸ Al-Barqānī fell into the gray area of the transmission-based tradition that was gradually separating into

¹⁰⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:96; cf. al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:210-1.

¹⁰⁶ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:379.

¹⁰⁷ For al-Barqānī's transmission of the Mustakhraj, see Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:281–2; for al-Barqānī's role in transmitting al-Ismā'īlī's teachings, see al-'Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 187.

¹⁰⁸ The first part of this mustakhraj has been published as al-Juz' al-awwal min al-takhrāj li-sahīh al-hadīth 'an al-shuyūkh al-thiqāt 'alā shart kitāb Muhammad b. Ismā il al-Bukhārī wa kitāb Muslim b. al-Hajjāj al-Qushayrī aw ahadihimā, ed. Abū 'Abd al-Bārī Ridā Būshshāma al-Jazā'irī (Riyadh: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999).

the über-Sunni Hanbalī school and the more moderate Shāfi'ī strain. He was later identified as a Shāfi'ī, no doubt due to his apprenticeship with al-Dāraquṭnī but more probably because of his role as a teacher to three of the most prominent Shāfi'ī scholars of the fifth/eleventh century: Abū Isḥāq al-Shīrāzī (d. 476/1083), Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī and al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī (who relies heavily upon him as a source for his history of Baghdad). Yet al-Barqānī also had strong ties to the tradition evolving around Ibn Hanbal: he studied with Abū Bakr b. Mālik al-Qaṭī'ī (d. 368/978–9), the main transmitter of Ibn Hanbal's Musnad from his son 'Abdallāh.¹⁰⁹

Another important member of the knot of Baghdad hadīth scholars studying the two Sahihs was al-Dāraqutni's student Abū Mas'ūd Ibrāhīm al-Dimashqī (d. 401/1010-11). Al-Khatīb describes him as having a "strong interest in the Sahāhayn," which he expressed in his famous Atrāf of the two works.¹¹⁰ Although this book exists today in only partial and unpublished form, hadīth scholars as far-flung as Abū 'Alī al-Jayyānī al-Ghassānī (d. 498/1105), who never left Andalusia, and the ninth/fifteenth century Cairene Ibn Hajar regularly drew on it.¹¹¹ In addition to the Atrāf, the only book of Abū Mas'ūd to have reached us alludes to an interesting tension between the author and his teacher, al-Dāraqutnī. Abū Mas'ūd's Kitāb al-ajwiba 'ammā ashkala al-shaykh al-Dāragutnī 'alā Sahīh Muslim b. al-Hajjāj (Book of Responses to what al-Dāraqutnī Criticized from the Sahīh of Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj) contains rebuttals to twenty-five narrations that al-Dāraqutnī points out as problematic as well as to several $ilz\bar{a}m\bar{a}t$ the latter suggested.¹¹² In addition, Abū Masʿūd rejects al-Dāragutnī's referral to Abū Zurʿa's criticism of four of Muslim's narrators.¹¹³ Although we know little about his legal stances, Abū Masʿūd clearly cultivated a close personal

¹⁰⁹ Al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:137–40; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:333; Ibn al-Şalāh, Tabaqāt al-fuqahā' al-shāfi iyya, 1:363–5; 15:242; cf. al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:464–8; idem, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:183.

¹¹⁰ Al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 6:170–1.

¹¹¹ Jamāl al-Dīn al-Mizzī (d. 742/1341) states that he relied on al-Dimashqī's and al-Wāsitī's Atrāf of the Ṣahīḥayn in his index of the Six Books; al-Mizzī, Tuhfat al-ashrāf fī ma'rifat al-aṭrāf, ed. Bashshār 'Awwād Ma'rūf (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1999), 1:102.

¹¹² These ilzāmāt do not appear in al-Dāraqutnī's Kītāb al-ilzāmāt wa al-tatabbu'; see Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī, Kītāb al-ajwiba, 287–303.

¹¹³ See Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī, Kitāb al-ajwiba, 331. These criticized narrators are Asbāţ b. Naşr, Qatan, Ahmad b. 'Isā al-Miṣrī, and Ja'far b. Sulaymān, three of whom Abū Zur'a mentioned in his criticism of Muslim's Sahīh.

relationship with the scholar later considered the third reviver of the Shāfi'ī school, Abū Hāmid al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 406/1016).¹¹⁴ When Abū Mas'ūd died, Abū Hāmid led his funeral prayer and was the executor of his will (as his wasiy).¹¹⁵

One of Abū Mas'ūd's colleagues, Khalaf b. Muḥammad al-Wāsiţī (d. ca. 400/1010) also produced a three- or four-volume aţrāf of the Ṣaḥīḥayn (one volume, seven juz's, of which has survived in manuscript form).¹¹⁶ He studied with al-Ismā'īlī as well as many scholars in Baghdad but eventually abandoned scholarship and devoted himself to business. Nonetheless, prominent experts such as al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī and Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī studied at Khalaf's hands.¹¹⁷

The last noteworthy scholar of the Baghdad knot was Hibatallāh b. al-Ḥasan al-Lālakā'ī (d. 418/1027–8). Born in Rayy, he studied ḥadīth there before moving to Baghdad, where he studied with the city's pillar of the Shāfi'ī tradition, Abū Ḥāmid al-Isfarāyīnī. Al-Lālakā'ī compiled a biographical dictionary of the Ṣahīḥayn, which has since been lost, but his most famous work was his Kītāb al-sunna.¹¹⁸

Along with Abū Muhammad al-Hasan b. Muhammad al-Khallāl, (d. 439/1047), who wrote a mustakhraj of the Ṣaḥāḥayn,¹¹⁹ these scholars constituted a relatively close-knit society characterized by an adherence to the Shāfi'ī tradition and a shared interest in al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works. Three of the five studied directly with al-Dāraqutnī, the progenitor of an approach to the Ṣaḥīḥayn as complementary texts. Al-Barqānī describes the close scholarly association among this cluster as follows: One day al-Lālakā'ī approached him because he had heard Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī mention that Muslim had included a certain

¹¹⁴ Mahdī Salmāsī, "Abū Hāmid al-Isfarāyīnī," Dā'erat al-ma'āref-e bozorg-e eslāmī, ed. Kāzem Bojnūrdī (Tehran: Merkez-e Dā'erat al-Ma'āref-e Bozorg-e Eslāmī, 1368/ [1989]), 5:318; al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:132-4.

¹¹⁵ Ål-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 6:170–1; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:180. Reports that Abū Masʿūd studied with Ibn Khuzayma seem difficult to believe, since the latter died in 311/923.

¹¹⁶ Al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustaţrafa, 125.

¹¹⁷ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 8:329–30; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:179–80.

¹¹⁸ This has been published as Sharh uşūl i 'tiqād ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a, ed. Ahmad b. Sa'd b. Hamdān al-Ghāmidī, 5 vols. (Riyadh: Dār Tayba, 1415/1994); al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 28:456–7; idem, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:189. Al-Lālakā'ī's book on the men of the Şahīḥayn is referred to as a book of Muslim's transmitters by Ibn Abī al-Wafā' (d. 775/1374); Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Ḥāwī fī bayān āthār al-Ṭaḥāwī, ed. Yūsuf Ahmad, 3 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1419/1999), 1:60.

¹¹⁹ Al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 7:437–8; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:205; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 29:471–2.

narration of the hadīth "the signs of a hypocrite are three...," and he wanted al-Barqānī to find it for him in the Ṣaḥīḥ. Al-Barqānī looked through his combined musnad of the Ṣaḥīḥayn and discovered that the narration did not exist. This vindicated al-Lālakā'ī suspicion that Abū Mas'ūd had mixed up one of the names in the isnād. Al-Barqānī recalls how Khalaf al-Wāsitī was also mistaken about this narration.¹²⁰

d. Other: Isfahan and Central Asia

Not all studies of the Sahīhayn during the long fourth century emerged from Naysābūr, Jurjān or Baghdad. Several important scholars worked independently of these regional camps. Al-Kalābādhī (d. 398/1008) traveled to Khurāsān and Iraq, but he spent most of his life in Transoxiana.¹²¹ The first scholar to produce a commentary on one of the Sahīhayn, that of al-Bukhārī, was Abū Sulaymān Hamd b. Muhammad al-Khāttābī of Bust (d. 388/998). Although he studied in Baghdad and narrated hadīths to Abū Hāmid al-Isfarāyīnī, Abū Dharr al-Harawī and al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, he remained a relative outsider in the main regional centers of study. He spent most of his time in Bust, in the far east of Khurāsān. Even there his pietistic inclinations kept him far from public life. In one poem he wrote, "Indeed I am a stranger among Bust and her people...though my family and kin are there."¹²² Al-Khattābī's primary hadīth interest lay in the Sunan of Abū Dāwūd, on which he wrote a famous commentary. It was only after some of his students in Balkh pressured him to write a commentary on al-Bukhārī's work that he composed his A'lām al-hadīth fī sharh Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī. Al-Khattābī also wrote a work on the vocabulary of al-Muzani's Mukhtasar, and his opinions on legal theory became a source for later Shāfi'ī scholars.¹²³

Several important scholars from the Ṣaḥīḥayn Network also hailed from Isfahan. In addition to his being one of the most influential ḥadīth scholars of his time, we have already noted Ibn Manda's contribution to the study of al-Bukhārī's sources. Before him Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. 'Abdān al-Shīrāzī (d. 388/998) moved between Khurāsān and the ¹²⁰ Al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 14:71-2.

134

¹²¹ Al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:201; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:154–5; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:355.

¹²² Al-Subkī, Tabaqāt al-shāfi iyya, 3:284; cf. al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:166–7; idem, Tadhkirat al-ļudfāz, 3:149–150; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:129. Ibn al-Jawzī errs in al-Khattābī's death date; he includes him among those who died in 349 AH.

¹²³ Al-Subkī, Tabagāt, 3:289–90.

western Iranian cities of Ahwāz and Isfahan. He produced a joint mustakhraj and also narrated al-Bukhārī's al-Tārīkh al-kabīr.¹²⁴ Abū Bakr Ahmad b. Mūsā Ibn Mardawayh (d. 416/1025–6) wrote a mustakhraj of al-Bukhārī,¹²⁵ and Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī's separate mustakhrajs of al-Bukhārī and Muslim have already been discussed. As the Şahīhayn Network Chart demonstrates, however, Isfahan never became a united camp or developed a local tradition of studying al-Bukhārī or Muslim. Its scholars lived at different times and were more connected with the centers of Naysābūr and Baghdad than with each other.

e. An End to Regional Cults After 370 AH

The study of the Sahīhayn in the long fourth century thus breaks down along clear chronological and geographical lines. The initial popularity that Muslim's work enjoyed as a template for mustakhrajs in his home city of Naysābūr later developed into a more diverse interest that subsumed al-Bukhārī's collection as well as other products of the sahīh movement. The cluster of colleagues in Jurjān remained relatively isolated from Khurāsān and thus cultivated an exclusive interest in al-Bukhārī. Beginning with al-Dāraqutnī, the network of Baghdad scholars inherited the legacies of both regions and pioneered the study of the two works as a pair.

By the 370s/980s, however, the regional cults of al-Bukhārī and Muslim had disappeared. After the death of al-Ghiṭrīfī, Jurjān faded into geographical and historical obscurity. The Baghdad knot was built on the study of the two works together, and even in Muslim's native Naysābūr by 370 AH a study of the conjoined Ṣaḥīḥayn as well as other major products of the ṣaḥīḥ movement eclipsed the strict focus on his Ṣaḥīḥ.

The Ṣaḥīḥayn Network: A Shāfi'ī Enterprise

The Sahāhayn Network of the long fourth century exhibits another striking characteristic: study of the two works seems to have been an exclusively Shāfi'ī endeavor. Although the profound work of George ¹²⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:161; cf. al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 335.

¹²⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:169.

Makdisi, Wael Hallaq, Nurit Tsafrir and Christopher Melchert has shed light on the formation of the Sunni madhhabs, discussing trends in legal and ritual identification still proves very difficult in the third/ ninth and fourth/tenth centuries. The inchoate intellectual landscape of this period resists attempts to apply the construct of the clearly defined Sunni madhhabs, in part because it preceded institutions like the madrasa that would later play important roles in their expression. Hallaq therefore describes this period as one of "indistinguishable plurality."¹²⁶ This period retains the startling diversity of early Islam, as schools of law usually dismissed as phenomena of the second and third centuries survived. It was only in 347/958–9, for example, that the last muftī of the Awzāʿī school died in Damascus.¹²⁷ One of the most important transmitters of Muslim's Saḥīḥ, al-Julūdī (d. 368/979), followed the moribund madhhab of Sufyān al-Thawrī.¹²⁸

Indeed, the undeniable presence of the regularized four Sunni schools marks the end of the long fourth century. With a cadre of scholars such as Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, Imam al-Haramayn al-Juwaynī (d. 478/1085) and Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī (d. 476/1083), for example, we can for the first time feel totally at ease discussing a broad and unshakable guild-like loyalty to a Shāfi'ī school. Only in the ample wake of the long fourth century can we rely on the well-worn stereo-types invoked by al-Hasan b. Abī Bakr al-Naysābūrī in 536/1142 when he told a congregation, "Be Shāfi'ī but not Ash'arī, be Hanafī but not Mu'tazilī, be Hanbalī but not anthropomorphist."¹²⁹

In the long fourth century the arena for the study of the Sahāhayn extended from Transoxiana to the Hijāz. There the enduring distinction between "the two sects (al-farīqān)" of the transmission-based and reason-based scholars still ruled. The Hanafīs/ahl al-ra'y were developing a keener interest in hadīth, but the school retained its link with the Mu'tazilite doctrine so anathema to the ahl al-hadīth. The doyen of the Hanafī hadīth tradition, Abū Ja'far al-Ṭahāwī of Egypt (d. 321/933), seems to have been in a minority with his distance from Mu'tazilism. Abū al-Ḥasan 'Ubaydallāh b. al-Ḥusayn al-Karkhī (d. 340/952), the ¹²⁶ Hallaq, Authority, Continuity and Change in Islamic Law (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2001), 61.

¹²⁷ Abū Zahra, al-Shāfi ī, 339.

¹²⁸ This according to al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī. See, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 107; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 16:302.

¹²⁹ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 18:31.

most prominent Iraqi Hanafī of his time, is described as a leading Mu'tazilite (kāna ra's^{an} fī al-i'tizāl).¹³⁰ Ahmad b. Yūsuf al-Tanūkhī, who learned fiqh from al-Karkhī, was from a "house of hadīth" but was none-theless Mu'tazilite.¹³¹ 'Alī b. Muḥammad al-Tanūkhī (d. 342/953) was also a Ḥanafī ḥadīth scholar knowledgeable in Mu'tazilite kalām.¹³²

It was the monolithic construct of the ahl al-hadīth that was becoming increasingly insufficient for describing the divisions among transmission-based scholars. Two distinct strains were emerging. Al-Bukhārī's persecution at the hands of fellow hadīth scholars illustrated a break between the conservative über-Sunni interpretation of Ibn Hanbal's legacy and a more moderate transmission-based approach, which Melchert has dubbed "semi-rationalist." These two strains would later emerge as two competing parties in the Sunni Islamic heartlands, the Hanbalī/über-Sunni school and its rival Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī camp. In the long fourth century, however, these two budding schools shared a common heritage. Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī heard the entirety of al-Shāfi'ī's oeuvre from Rabīć, yet he is claimed as a Hanbalī.¹³³ Ibn Abī Hātim devoted a work to the virtues of al-Shāfi'ī but is similarly claimed by Hanbalīs.¹³⁴ This ambiguity was deeply rooted in the career of Ibn Hanbal himself, for it is reported that he considered al-Shāfi'ī to be his century's reviver of the faith.¹³⁵ The Mālikī school, based in Egypt and the lands of the Maghrib, proves tangential to the Sahīhayn Network. Only Qāsim b. Asbagh of Cordova and Abū Dharr al-Harawī belonged to the Mālikī school.

Identifying the porous boundaries between the emerging Hanbalī and Shāfi'ī strains is challenging in the long fourth century. In the early stages one cannot yet consistently identify legal schools through telltale shibboleths like the Shāfi'ī insistence on the voiced basmala (saying 'bismillāh al-Raḥmān al-Raḥīm' out loud in prayer). An early scholar like Abū 'Awāna is considered the person who brought the Shāfi'ī school to Isfarāyīn, but he broke with what became important madhhab stances such as the basmala and the issue of what invalidates prayer.

¹³⁰ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:85; cf. Aḥmad b. Yaḥyā Ibn al-Murtadā (d. 839/ 1437), Tabaqāt al-muʿtazila, ed. Suzanna Diwald-Wilzer (Beirut: Dār Maktabat al-Ḥayāt, [198–]), 130.

¹³¹ Ibn al-Murtadā, Ṭabaqāt al-muʿtazila, 108.

¹³² Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:90.

¹³³ See Abū Zahra, al-Shāfi'ī, 148; Henri Laoust, "Hanābila," EI².

¹³⁴ Ibn Abī Yaʿlā, Tabaqāt al-hanābila, 2:47–8.

¹³⁵ Abū Zahra, Ibn Hanbal, 29.

The distinction between the two transmission-based strains becomes more evident in their attitudes towards rationalism in perennial controversies such as the lafz of the Quran and the use of speculative theology (kalām). Melchert describes how by the early fourth/tenth century a "vague Shāfi'ī school" had emerged that "comprised both a particular system of jurisprudence and a particular theological tendency." "It was a compromise," he states, espousing traditionalist tenets but very often defending them rationally.¹³⁶ In the early 300s/900s this distinction is problematic, since an incontrovertibly Shāfi'ī scholar like Ibn Khuzayma proved one of the most ruthless critics of those who upheld the created wording of the Our'ān. Yet by the time of al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī in the mid-400s/1000s, this intransigence on questions of rationalism had become a hallmark of the Hanbalī school, not the Shāfi'ī. Al-Khatīb began his scholarly career as a Hanbalī, but moved to the Shāfi'ī camp after his Hanbalī cohorts relentlessly criticized his indulgence in Ash'arī rationalist discourse. Ibn al-Jawzī, a later Hanbalī openly offended by al-Khatīb's defection, notes how the newly christened Shāfi'ī began mocking Ibn Hanbal's legendary intransigence on the issue of the created Our'ān.137 An incontestable Shāfi'ī, al-Dāragutnī distrusted a reliance on reason and rejected famous hadīths praising it. Yet he also evinced an appreciation for the use of kalām. He reportedly told Abū Dharr al-Harawī that one of the founding members of the Ash'arī school, Abū Bakr al-Bāgillānī (d. 403/1013), was "the imām of Muslims and the defender of the religion (al-dhābb 'an al-dīn)."¹³⁸ Despite his personal aversion to speculation, al-Dāragutnī had himself written a refutation of the Mu'tazila and probably understood its utility in defending against rationalist opponents.

Perhaps the most effective way to identify the two strands, however, is through personal relationships and textual transmission. Daphna Ephrat asserts that even after the dawn of the madrasa and the distinct Sunni madhhabs in the late fifth/eleventh century, it was the bonds of personal loyalty between teachers and their students that proved the most cohesive.¹³⁹ In the long fourth century both the emerging Shāfi'i ¹³⁶ Melchert, The Formation of the Sunni Schools of Law, 70.

¹³⁷ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 16:132.

¹³⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:202.

¹³⁹ Ephrat, A Learned Society in a Period of Transition, 88. For a fascinating study on the tight links between the development of Sufism in Khurāsān and the Shāfiʿī tradition, see Margaret Malamud, "Sufi Organizations and Structures of Authority in Medieval Nishapur," International Journal of Middle East Studies 26, no. 3 (1994): 427–442, esp.

and Hanbalī camps expressed themselves most clearly through the teachings of specific individuals with strong attachments to the legacies of the two eponymous founders. The nascent schools extended out from these individuals, whom Melchert refers to as "local chiefs,"¹⁴⁰ through teacher/student relationships and through the study of formative texts.

At the epicenter of the Shāfi'ī pedagogical and textual tradition were his most prominent students, Rabī' and al-Muzanī. Their student Ibn Khuzayma became a bastion of the Shāfi'ī tradition in his native Naysābūr. Another student of Rabī', Muḥammad b. Naṣr al-Marwazī (d. 294/906) of Samarqand, became one of the first scholars to discuss the "madhhab" of al-Shāfi'ī and elaborate his stances on legal theory.¹⁴¹ Later Baghdad scholars such as Ibn Surayj and Abū Hāmid al-Isfarāyīnī also served as pivots for the Shāfi'ī tradition during the long fourth century. In addition to scholarly relationships with these pillars, the Shāfi'ī tradition propagated itself through the transmission of its formative text, al-Muzanī's Mukhtaṣar of al-Shāfi'ī's Umm. While the Shāfi'ī scholar al-Ismā'īlī produced an independent treatise on legal theory, many of the nascent school's adherents preferred to write commentaries or studies on the Mukhtaṣar.

The tradition of Ibn Hanbal likewise propagated itself through a network of scholars tied closely to the school's two formative texts, Ibn Hanbal's Musnad and what developed as the definitive collection of his legal opinions. Ibn Hanbal's son 'Abdallāh served as the most committed transmitter of his teachings, crafting a finished draft of his father's Musnad. Abū Bakr al-Qaṭī'ī transmitted the Musnad from Ibn Hanbal's son and became a central figure in disseminating his teachings. The earliest extant collection of Ibn Hanbal's legal and doctrinal responsa, the Kitāb al-masā'il, was the work of Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī.¹⁴² Abū Hātim al-Rāzī also collected a selection of Ibn Hanbal's responsa, and later the school claimed his son Ibn Abī Hātim as a member. Abū Bakr ^{430.} For a discussion of the formative period of the Hanafi school, see Nurit Tsafrir, The History of an Islamic School of Law: The Early Spread of Hanafism (Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2004).

¹⁴⁰ Melchert, The Formation of the Sunni Schools of Law, 87.

¹⁴¹ Muhammad b. Nașr al-Marwazī, al-Sunna, ed. 'Abdallāh b. Muhammad al-Bașīrī (Riyadh: Dār al-ʿĀṣima, 1422/2001), 231. The entire second half of this work consists of a discussion of al-Shāfiʿī's school of thought on the issue of abrogation (naskh).

¹⁴² This work has been published as Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī, Kītāb masā'il al-imām Ahmad, 16 vols. (Beirut: Muhammad Amīn Damaj, [197–]).

al-Khallāl (d. 311/923–4) traveled extensively in a quest to unite Ibn Hanbal's legal legacy and compiled a massive collection of his opinions as well as other works, such Ibn Hanbal's ʿilal. He also compiled the first roster of Hanbalīs. Al-Khallāl's student Abū al-Qāsim al-Khiraqī (d. 334/945–6) edited his master's work and produced the school's formative legal text, the Mukhtaşar.¹⁴³

The intellectual landscape of Iraq and Iran in the long fourth century thus consisted of three dominant schools: the Hanafī ahl al-ra'y, the Hanbalī/über-Sunnīs and the nascent Shāfi'ī tradition. In order to place the network of Ṣaḥīḥayn scholars in this milieu, we can identify Shāfi'īs as exhibiting three major characteristics. Firstly, they are not Hanafī. Secondly, they tend to be more moderate than their über-Sunni counterparts. Finally, they exist within a network of personal and textual relationships with bastions of the school such as Ibn Khuzayma and al-Muzanī's Mukhtaṣar.

Oddly, not a single scholar from the Ṣaḥīḥayn Network is claimed as Hanafī in the definitive rosters of the school.¹⁴⁴ While Hanafī scholars did not participate in the study of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works, they did play noted roles in the transmission of the two texts.¹⁴⁵ According to Ibn al-Ṣalāh, the critical transmitter of Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ, Ibn Sufyān, was probably Hanafī.¹⁴⁶ Abū al-Khayr Muḥammad b. Mūsā al-Ṣaffār (d. 471/1078–9), one of the most prolific transmitters

¹⁴³ For more information, see Laoust, "Hanābila," *EI*²; Abū Zahra, Ibn Hanbal, 179–188; Melchert, The Formation of the Sunni Schools of Law, 144–6; Nimrod Hurvitz, The Formation of Hanbalism: From Piety to Power (London: Routledge-Curzon, 2002), 78–90.

¹⁴⁴ The most comprehensive is the Jawāhir al-mudiyya of Ibn Abī al-Wafā' (d. 775/ 1374). For an earlier list, al-'Abbādī's Tabaqāt al-fuqahā' al-shāfi iyya includes a lengthy list of scholars whom this fifth/eleventh-century scholar considered Hanafi; al-'Abbādī, Tabaqāt al-fuqahā', 2 ff.

¹⁴⁵ Here we must note the work of Abū al-Layth al-Naşr b. Muhammad al-Samarqandī (d. 373/983–4 or 393/1002–3), a Hanafī jurist and exegete of Transoxiana. One of his lesser known works, al-Laţā if al-mustakhraja min Ṣahāħ al-Bukhārī (Useful Niceties Derived from Ṣahāħ al-Bukhārī), would seem to have been small collection of the author's musing on elements from the Ṣahāħ but could not have qualified as either a commentary on the work or a study of its hadīth science dimensions. The unique manuscript of the Latā if was in the rare books library at Istanbul University, and was "lost" after the terrible 1999 earthquake. Some Turkish scholars debate whether the work ever existed.

¹⁴⁶ Ibn al-Şalāh, Şiyānat Şahīh Muslim, 107; cf. Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:267. Ibn Sufyān is not, however, included in Ibn Abī al-Wafā''s al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya fī țabaqāt al-hanafiyya.

of Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī from al-Kushmīhanī, was Ḥanafī.¹⁴⁷ Abū Ṭālib al-Husayn b. Muḥammad al-Hāshimī (d. 512/1118–1119), one of the main transmitters of the Ṣaḥīḥ from the famous Meccan female student of al-Kushmīhanī, Karīma al-Marwaziyya, was also Ḥanafī.¹⁴⁸

Why would Hanafis actively and enthusiastically transmit al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's Sahīhs but not study the works? One possible explanation lies in the function of the mustakhrajs that sparked the flurry of interest in the Sahīhayn. Mustakhrajs were interpretations of formative texts that allowed transmission-based scholars to express and elaborate their relationship with the source of hermeneutic authority in Islam. For Hanafis this role was already played by the school's formative legal texts. For them the chain of legal scholars emanating from Abū Hanīfa and his students provided that link to the Prophet's message.

Neither did the network of Sahīhayn scholars identify with the Hanbalī/über-Sunni tradition. Only one member of this group, Ibn Manda, is listed as Hanbalī in Ibn Abī Ya'lā's Tabagāt al-hanābila.¹⁴⁹ The Hanbalī school seemed to prefer critics of al-Bukhārī or Muslim such as Abū Hātim al-Rāzī and his son Ibn Abī Hātim.¹⁵⁰ None of the well-known Hanbalīs of the period, such as Abū Bakr al-Najjād (d. 348/959-60) of Baghdad, Abū Bakr al-Ājurrī (d. 360/971) and al-Hasan b. Hāmid al-Warrāq (d. 403/1012-13), appears in the Sahīhayn Network. Given al-Bukhārī's pariah status among über-Sunnis, it is not difficult to understand why they did not participate in the study and transmission of his Sahīh. We have already discussed how the dominant scholarly presence in Naysābūr of the über-Sunnis Ibn Khuzayma and al-Sarrāj played a central part in preventing the study of al-Bukhārī's collection in that city. The attitude of über-Sunni members of the Baghdad scholarly community did not differ. Al-Hasan b. 'Alī al-Barbahārī (d. 329/940-1) was one of the Hanbalī tradition's most outspoken advocates in Baghdad. He never mentions al-Bukhārī in his manifesto of the ahl al-hadith creed, the Sharh al-sunna (Explanation of the Sunna), but he does assert that anyone who says that the lafz of the Qur'an is ¹⁴⁷ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 3:215; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:245.

¹⁴⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 4:32.

¹⁴⁹ Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Ṭabaqāt al-ḥanābila, 2:142–3.

¹⁵⁰ Laoust, "Hanābila," EI².

created is a heretic (mubtadi^c).¹⁵¹ Although he did not officially belong to the Hanbalī madhhab, Abū Hafş 'Umar b. Aḥmad Ibn Shāhīn (d. 385/ 996) provides another interesting example of this scholarly strain in the Abbasid capital. Ibn Shāhīn heard from many of the same teachers as his contemporary al-Dāraquṭnī, whom he enlisted at least once to review his ḥadīth corpus.¹⁵² Yet Ibn Shāhīn is completely absent in the network of Ṣaḥīḥayn scholars. In his Sharḥ madhāhib ahl al-sunna wa maʿrifat sharāʾiʿ al-dīn wa al-tamassuk biʾl-sunan (Explanation of the Ways of the Ahl al-Sunna, Knowledge of Religious Law and Clinging to the Sunna), he echoes al-Barbahārī by narrating that anyone who says that the lafz of the Qurʾān is created is Jahmī, or worse.¹⁵³

Still, how do we explain the absence of über-Sunni interest in Muslim's Sahāh? Unlike al-Bukhārī, he was not tainted by the lafz scandal. It seems most likely that in the first half of the fourth/tenth century Muslim's collection was simply not well-circulated in the Hanbalī/über-Sunni bastion of Baghdad. We do know that the work had limited circulation in places like Jurjān and seems to have been relatively unknown in the Hijāz through the first half of the fourth/tenth century. Al-'Uqaylī (d. 323/934) of Mecca knew al-Bukhārī's al-Tārīkh al-kabīr intimately but never refers to Muslim in any form in his Kītāb al-du'afā'. That al-'Uqaylī totally rejects a ḥadīth found in Muslim's Sahāh without mentioning the work reinforces the notion that he was ignorant of it.¹⁵⁴ Another notable non-Khurāsānī ḥadīth scholar of the mid 300s/900s, al-Ḥasan b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Rāmahurmuzī, likewise makes no mention of Muslim.

Unlike the Hanbalī/über-Sunnis, members of the Shāfi'ī tradition actively accommodated al-Bukhārī and Muslim. In their treatises on the Sunni creed and proper ahl al-sunna stances, both al-Barbahārī and Ibn Shāhīn had implicitly condemned al-Bukhārī for his stance on the ¹⁵¹ Abū Muhammad al-Ḥasan al-Barbahārī, Sharḥ al-sunna, ed. Khālid b. Qāsim al-Raddādī (Beirut: Dār al-Ṣumay'ī; Riyadh: Dār al-Salaf, 1421/2000), 92.

¹⁵² Al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 11:264–7; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:107.

¹⁵³ Abū Hafş Umar b. Ahmad Ibn Shāhīn, Sharh madhāhib ahl al-sunna wa ma'rifat sharā ï' al-dīn wa al-tamassuk bi'l-sunan, ed. 'Ādil b. Muḥammad (Cairo: Mu'assasat Qurtuba, 1415/1995), 32.

¹⁵⁴ This hadīth is, "If two caliphs receive allegiance kill the second of them...(idhā būyi'a li-khalīfatayn fa-qtulū al-ākhir minhumā...), and al-ʿUqaylī criticizes it in his biography of Fadāla b. Dīnār, saying: "Narration on this topic is not sound (wa al-riwāya fī hādhā al-bāb ghayr thābit)." We know this represents a blanket dismissal of the hadīth because when al-ʿUqaylī merely criticizes narrations he uses the term 'wajh'; al-ʿUqaylī, Kītāb al-ḍuʿafā', 3:1144.

lafz issue. The Shāfi'ī al-Lālakā'ī, however, affirms both al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's worthiness as commendable Sunnis. His Kitāb al-sunna focuses overwhelmingly on the controversial sectarian issues of the nature of the Qur'ān and the definition of faith (īmān). Yet he cites al-Bukhārī as one of a small set of exemplary figures who upheld the Sunni definition of faith as including both a profession of belief and proper practice (qawl wa 'amal). Al-Lālakā'ī lists al-Bukhārī in the company of al-Awzā'ī, Ibn Hanbal, al-Shāfi'ī and al-Muzanī, even including two quotations from him.¹⁵⁵ He also lists both al-Bukhārī and Muslim as two of the scholars who upheld the uncreated nature of the Qur'ān, along with Abū Zur'a, Abū Hātim al-Rāzī and Abū Dāwūd.¹⁵⁶ Al-Lālakā'ī's book, in fact, represents the first work in the Sunni creed genre to accept al-Bukhārī. The Ṣahīhayn Network proved fairly accommodating to rationalists as well. Both Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī and Abū Dharr al-Harawī were Ash'arīs, and al-Ismā'īlī had marked rationalist tendencies.

Of the forty-four scholars in the network who composed works on the Sahāhayn, fully fourteen (32%) directly studied with or instructed Abū Hāmid al-Isfarāyīnī, Ibn Khuzayma, Ibn Surayj, Rabī[°] al-Murādī or al-Muzanī. Six (14%) of them either wrote books based on al-Muzanī's Mukhtaşar or composed their own works on al-Shāfiʿī's legal method. Ten (23%) are later explicitly referred to as Shāfiʿīs by al-Dhahabī. He calls Abū al-Nadr Muḥammad b. Muḥammad al-Ṭūsī (d. 344/955) "shaykh al-shāfiʿŷyya," which should not surprise us since he studied extensively with Muḥammad b. Naṣr al-Marwazī in Samarqand.¹⁵⁷ Abū al-Walīd Ḥassān b. Muḥammad al-Umawī of Naysābūr (d. 344/955) studied fiqh in Baghdad with Abū al-ʿAbbās Ibn Surayj and composed legal rulings (ahkām) for the madhhab. He even had a ring patterned after those worn by Rabī[°] b. Sulaymān and al-Shāfiʿī.¹⁵⁸

¹⁵⁵ Al-Lālakā'ī, Sharh usūl i'tiqād ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a, 5:959.

¹⁵⁶ Al-Lālakā'ī, Sharh usūl i tiqād ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a, 1:302.

¹⁵⁷ Mullā Khāţir, Makānat al-Şahāhayn, 176; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:73; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:311–12; cf. al-ʿAbbādī, Kitāb tabaqāt al-fuqahā', 77.

¹⁵⁸ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Siyānat Ṣahīḥ Muslim, 90; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:75; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:417-8; cf. al-ʿAbbādī, Kītāb ṭabaqāt al-fuqahā', 74.

Intense Canonical Process: Imagining a New Epistemological Status for Ḥadīth Books

The long fourth century had not simply seen a profound interest in the Ṣaḥīḥayn among a relatively limited network of scholars. In this period before the canonization of the two works, we also see the appearance of what Frank Kermode called a "canonical habit of mind" in the Muslim community in general.¹⁵⁹ For the first time Muslim scholars began discussing the ḥadīth tradition in terms that endowed certain books with a sense of communal and epistemological preeminence. Among ḥadīth scholars this derived from personal convictions about the broad acceptance and overwhelming utility of certain books. For legal theorists this resulted from an increased application of the notion of the community's authoritative consensus, ijma^c, to the ḥadīth corpus. What lay behind both these perceptions, however, was a new conception of what kind of authority certain ḥadīths and specific ḥadīth collections could exercise. It was in this period that the Sunni community imagined a new epistemological status for ḥadīth works.

The notion of authoritative consensus $(ijm\bar{a}^c)$ has ancient origins in Islam. In addition to functioning as one of the primary means of justifying decisions during the time of the Companions and their followers, it arose quickly as a tool in debates between the early schools of law in cities like Kufa.¹⁶⁰ By the time of the eponymous founders of the four madhhabs, hadīths were circulating that established the consensus of the community as a source of legal and doctrinal authority. One of the most famous was the tradition in which the Prophet says, "My community will not agree on error (lā tajtami'u ummatī 'alā al-dalāla)."¹⁶¹ In correspondences between al-Awzā'ī and Abū Ḥanīfa's chief disciple Abū Yūsuf (d. 182/798), each contested the other's claim that his stances enjoyed the consensus of the Muslim community.¹⁶² Later, al-

¹⁵⁹ Kermode, "The Canon," 601.

¹⁶⁰ Hallaq, A History of Islamic Legal Theories (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997), 20. For more discussion on the development of ijmā^c, see idem, "On the Authoritativeness of Sunni Consensus," International Journal of Middle East Studies 18 (1986): 427–54.

¹⁶¹ Wahba al-Zuhaylī, Uşūl al-fiqh al-islāmī, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Fikr al-Muʿāşir, 1406/1986), 1:488. See also, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Sarakhsī, Usūl al-Sarakhsī, ed. Abū al-Wafā' al-Afghānī, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1414/1993, reprint of the Lajnat Iḥyā' al-Maʿārif al-Nuʿmāniyya edition from Hyderabad, citations are to Beirut edition), 1:299.

¹⁶² Abū Zahra, Ibn Hanbal, 260-1; Zafar Ishaq Ansari, "Islamic Juristic Terminology

Shāfiʿī and Ibn Ḥanbal grew very skeptical of such claims about $ijm\bar{a}$. Although they acknowledged that $ijm\bar{a}$ existed as a source of authority among Muslims, they limited it to fundamental issues, such as the ordination of the five daily prayers, that truly enjoyed total communal consensus. Their skepticism was well-founded, as the later Shāfiʿī jurist Abū Isḥāq al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 418/1027) estimated that "the questions on which $ijm\bar{a}$ " has been invoked (masāʾil al-ijmā°) number more than twenty thousand."¹⁶³

By the time of al-Shāfi'ī in the early third/ninth century the notion of universally agreed-upon precedent from the Prophet was manifesting itself in scholarly discourse. Al-Shāfi'ī placed "sunna on which consensus has been achieved" on the same level of legal compulsion as the Qur'ān. As opposed to ḥadīth with limited attestation (khāṣṣ), those who knowingly rejected such reports must repent immediately.¹⁶⁴ Even later in the thought of the Ibn Surayj, however, this articulation remained primitive.¹⁶⁵

Al-Ţabarī discussed these most authoritative instances of the Prophet's sunna in the more technical terms of hadīth study. These were reports so widely transmitted (mustafīd qāți^(an)) that they are epistemologically certain. Indeed, rejecting them places one outside the pale of Islam. These include reports such as the hadīth ordering stoning as a punishment for adultery.¹⁶⁶ More importantly, however, on two occasions al-Ţabarī refers to certain reports that are not massively transmitted but nonetheless convey a great deal of certainty. Al-Ţabarī describes a ḥadīth in which God states that He will remove certain people from Hellfire after they have been appropriately punished for their sins as coming from "someone whose transmission prohibits error, oversight or lying and yields certainty (ʿilm)...."¹⁶⁷ We thus see nascent in al-Ṭabarī's before Šāfi'ī: A Semantic Analysis with Special Reference to Kūfa," Arabica 19 (1972): 282–7.

¹⁶³ Al-Zuḥaylī, Uṣūl al-fiqh, 1:489.

¹⁶⁴ See Norman Calder, "Ikhtilâf and Ijmâ' in al-Shafi'i's Risala," Studia Islamica 58 (1983): 60, 74–8; al-Shāfi'ī, al-Umm, 7:255.

¹⁶⁵ Ibn Surayj, "al-Waḍā'iʿ li-manṣūṣ al-sharā'iʿ," ed. Ṣāliḥ al-Duwaysh (unpublished manuscript), 2:672–3. Here Ibn Surayj states that the consensus of the umma on a report is merely one way in which a ḥadīth is established as legally compelling. I am totally indebted to my friend and colleague Ahmed El Shamsy of Harvard University for this citation and for providing me with the text itself.

¹⁶⁶ Al-Ṭabarī, al-Tabsīr, 161.

¹⁶⁷ Al-Tabarī, al-Tabsīr, 185. For the other instance, see 212. Although he does not cite it from any sources, this hadīth appears in the Sahīhayn. See Sahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb thought the idea that certain transmitters or collectors could themselves guarantee the authenticity and epistemological yield of non-massively transmitted $(\bar{a}h\bar{a}d)$ hadīths.

The concept of universally agreed-upon hadīths extended beyond Sunni circles. The Mu'tazilite Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī writes in his Qubūl al-akhbār that the ultimate test for determining a good narrator or report is its accordance with the Qur`ān, the sunna "agreed upon by consensus (mujma '`alayhi)," the ijmā ' of the umma, the ways of the early community and the Mu'tazilite slogans of justice (`adl) and God's unicity (tawhīd).¹⁶⁸

Although Abū Nuʿaym al-Iṣbahānī lived a century later than these scholars, his work nonetheless affords an interesting glimpse into the place of hadīth consensus in sectarian debates. One of the chief impediments he faced in his dialectical handbook for debating Imāmī Shiites was the different repertoires of hadīths from which the two sides drew proof texts. As a solution to this lack of common ground, al-Iṣbahānī proposed that "the recourse at that point is to what the umma has agreed on after the Prophet (s), and those authentic (sahīħ) reports (akhbār) from him that the scholars have transmitted and are uncontested (lā dāfi^c lahā)."¹⁶⁹ Abū Nuʿaym is not admitting any parity between Sunni and Shiite hadīths; quite the opposite, he maintains that Sunnis actually uphold standards for using hadīths as proof texts, while Shiites use forged reports.¹⁷⁰ But here we see the notion of shared and commonly accepted material that neither camp can contest.

The epistemological status of these universally accepted reports and their role in deriving law also began receiving more attention in the long fourth century. Unlike al-Shāfi'ī and Ibn Hanbal, who believed $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ traditions of the Prophet could be used to determine issues of dogma and abrogate Qur'ānic verses, the Hanafī tradition remained al-riqāq, bāb sifāt al-janna wa al-nār; Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim: kitāb al-īmān, bāb ithbāt al-shafā'a wa ikhrāj al-muwaḥḥidīn min al-nār. Another ḥadīth he cites in this context appears in the collections of Ibn Hibbān and Ibn Khuzayma.

¹⁶⁸ Al-Balkhī, Qubūl al-akhbār, 1:17. Even earlier, al-Jāḥiz (d. 255/868–9) had mentioned a report accepted by consensus (khabar mujtama''alayhi) as one of the four sources of knowledge, citing the founder of the Mu'tazilite school, Wāşil b. 'Atā' (d. 131/750), as the originator of this idea; Marie Bernand, ''la Notion de 'Ilm chez les premiers Mu'tazilites,'' Studia Islamica 36 (1972): 26.

¹⁶⁹ Al-Işbahānī, Kītāb al-imāma, 244. Although he does not cite any collections, the hadīths he then presents are all found in either al-Bukhārī or Muslim, with one in al-Tirmidhī's collection.

¹⁷⁰ Al-Işbahānī, Kitāb al-imāma, 241.

very wary of endowing these relatively uncorroborated reports with such authority. The concept of universally accepted hadīths, however, emerged as a common ground acceptable to Hanafis. Like al-Tabari, the early Hanafi legal theorist Abū Bakr Ahmad al-Jassās of Ravy (d. 370/982) acknowledged that there exists a category of reports that lack massive transmission (tawātur, istifāda) but nonetheless convey epistemological certainty.¹⁷¹ For these $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths to yield such knowledge and function in abrogating Qur'anic verses, for example, certain indications (dalāla) must accompany them assuring their authenticity. These include reports that enjoy the consensus $(ijm\bar{a}^{c})$ of the umma's scholars, such as the report denving members of a family guaranteed a portion of the deceased's estate from receiving additional inheritance (lā wasiyya li-wārith).¹⁷² Following the earlier Hanafī scholar 'Īsā b. Abān, al-Jassās states that āhād reports that are used in important issues of dogma and ritual (umūr al-divānāt) must be widespread (shā'i'a mustafīda) in the umma, which accepts (talaqqathā) and acts on them.¹⁷³

Among hadīth scholars, this new epistemological status attainable by hadīths is evident in a revised historical conception of the hadīth tradition. This new vision viewed the sahīh movement in general and certain collections in particular as loci of scholarly consensus. While previously we have seen that scholars such as Ibn Abī Hātim identified the pinnacle of the hadīth tradition with the greatest generation of Ibn Hanbal and ignored the existence of the sahīh movement, Ibn Manda's perspective is very different. Like Ibn Abī Hātim, Ibn 'Adī and Ibn Hibbān, he lists the generations (tabaqāt) of hadīth scholars up to the generation of Ibn Hanbal, 'Alī b. al-Madīnī and Ibn Ma'īn. In a novel step, however, he then mentions the "four imāms" who ¹⁷¹ For a discussion of al-Jaşşāş's legal theory, see Marie Bernand, "Hanafī Uşūl al-Fiqh through a Manuscript of al-Ğaşşāş," Journal of the American Oriental Society 105, no. 4 (1985): 623–35.

¹⁷² Abū Bakr Ahmad al-Jassās, Uşūl al-Jassās, al-musammā al-Fusūl fī al-usūl, ed. Muhammad Muhammad Tāmir, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1420/2000), 1:532–5. The numerous narrations of this hadīth have been individually criticized, but scholars have generally agreed that the text of the hadīth is too widely attested and has been accepted too widely to be false. Al-Shāfiī even described it as effectively mutawātir; Ibn Hajar, Fath, 5:467–9; cf. Abū Ibrāhīm Muhammad b. Ismā'īl al-Amīr al-Ṣan'ānī, Tawdīḥ al-afkār h-ma'ānī Tanqīḥ al-anzār, ed. Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān Ibn 'Uwayda, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1417/1997), 1:229. See also, David Powers, Studies in Qur'ān and Hadīth: The Formation of the Islamic Law of Inheritance (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1986), 159–64.

¹⁷³ Al-Jaşşāş, Uşūl, 1:548. Such reports include the hadīth of the Prophet accepting the word of one Bedouin that the new moon of Ramadān was visible.

produced the şaḥiḥ books: al-Bukhārī, Muslim, Abū Dāwūd and al-Nasā'ī. He notes other, less impressive installments of the şaḥīḥ movement as well, such as the works of al-Dārimī, al-Tirmidhī, Ibn Khuzayma and Aḥmad b. Abī 'Āṣim al-Nabīl. Although they followed in the footsteps of the four imāms, "they were less skilled."¹⁷⁴ This generation that Ibn Manda describes as studying at the hands of Ibn Hanbal and his cohort, however, has achieved an unprecedented station. "Al-Bukhārī, al-Ḥasan b. 'Alī al-Ḥulwānī, al-Dhuhlī, Abū Zurʿa, Abū Hātim, Muslim, Abū Dāwūd, and al-Nasā'ī...make up the generation (tabaqa) accepted [by all] by consensus, and their knowledge trumps all others (wa bi-ʿilmihim yuḥtajju ʿalā sāʾir al-nās)."¹⁷⁵ Ibn Manda thus articulates the notion that the generation of al-Bukhārī and Muslim represents a compelling concentration of knowledge agreed upon by all. More importantly, this mastery is articulated in the şaḥīḥ collections of four scholars who embody the authority of their age.

Implicit in Ibn Manda's genealogy of the hadīth tradition is the same problem that Abū Nu'aym faced in his polemic: the vast corpus of hadīths had become too broad and diverse to be succinctly studied and employed. Specific outstanding collections that embody the utility of the hadith tradition should thus be viewed as common references. Ibn Manda echoes a statement attributed to the Egyptian hadīth scholar and transmitter of al-Bukhārī's Sahīh, Ibn al-Sakan (d. 353/964). Disturbed by the great number of hadīth collections flooding the book markets, a group of hadīth scholars gathered at Ibn al-Sakan's house asking him to direct them to what books they should study at the expense of others. Ibn al-Sakan entered his house and reemerged with four books, saying "these are the foundations (qawā'id) of Islam: the books of Muslim, al-Bukhārī, Abū Dāwūd and al-Nasā'ī."176 These four collections are thus not only the most important for students of hadīth, they also provide the common references to be shared by all. Ibn al-Sakan's own sahih work, in fact, may have been little more than a digest of these four books.¹⁷⁷

¹⁷⁴ Ibn Manda, Shurāț al-a'imma, 42–43; cf. al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 14:135 (biography of al-Nasā'ī).

¹⁷⁵ Ibn Manda, Shurūț al-a'imma, 67-8.

¹⁷⁶ Ibn Hazm 'Alī b. Ahmad, "[Two Hadīths from the Şahīhayn—One from al-Bukhārī and One from Muslim—that Ibn Hazm Considers Forgeries]," MS Ahmet III 624, Topkapı Sarayı, 28b; al-Maqdisī, *Shurū*t, 16; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:93.

¹⁷⁷ Shams al-Dīn al-Sakhāwī, Bughyat al-rāghib al-mutamannī fî khatm al-Nasā'ī, ed. Abū al-Fadl Ibrāhīm b. Zakariyyā (Cairo: Dār al-Kitāb al-Mişrī, 1991), 38.

The notion that a hadīth collection can serve as the locus for consensus and as legal and doctrinal common ground appears even more clearly in the work of Ibn Manda's contemporary, al-Khaṭṭābī (d. 388/ 998). In the introduction to his commentary on Abū Dāwūd's Sunan, he states that the collection is:

a noble book unique in the science of religion...approved by all people. It has become the ultimate recourse for differences of opinion amongst the various sects of the learned and the generations of scholars...the people of Iraq, Egypt, the lands of the West, and still more from among the cities and regions of the Earth, rely upon it.¹⁷⁸

Acknowledging the Khurāsānī cradle of the Ṣaḥīḥayn Network, he notes that the scholars of that region preferred those two works and books based on their requirements, although he personally considers Abū Dāwūd's Sunan more legally useful.¹⁷⁹ Al-Khaṭṭābī describes al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ in language similar to but less grandiose than his accolades of the Sunan, with an emphasis on authenticity as opposed to legal utility:

It has become a treasure for [our] religion, a mine for [its] sciences. It has become, due to the quality of its criticism (naqdihi) and the severity of its articulation (sabk), a judge (hakam) in the umma in what is sought out from among hadīths as authentic or weak.¹⁸⁰

Ibn Manda, Ibn al-Sakan and al-Khaṭṭābī provide no extensive or concrete explanations for their evaluations of these works as loci of consensus in law and ḥadīth. Neither do they articulate their specific authority or epistemological yield. What is nonetheless clear, however, is that the community of transmission-based legal scholars was beginning to see a proto-canon of ḥadīth collections as extant and necessary.

Why the Sahīhayn?

When examining the mustakhraj and 'ilal/ilzāmāt phenomena, one cannot help but ask why these fleeting genres focused so predominantly on the Ṣaḥīḥayn. The resilient regional barriers of the first half of the long fourth century cannot provide a full explanation for the nature of the ¹⁷⁸ Al-Khațțābī, Ma'ālim al-sunan, 1:6.

¹⁷⁹ Al-Khațțābī, Ma'ālim al-sunan, 1:6.

¹⁸⁰ Al-Khațtābī, A'lām al-hadīth fī sharh Ṣaḥīh al-Bukhārī, ed. Muhammad b. Sa'd Āl-Su'ūdī, 4 vols. (Mecca: Mu'assasat Makka li-al-Tibā'a wa al-I'lām, [n.d.]), 1:102.

mustakhraj genre, since the Sahāhayn were not the only collections used as templates even within one region. Muslim's Sahāh enjoyed favored status in his home city of Naysābūr, but the city and its environs also saw the production of three mustakhrajs based on Abū Dāwūd's Sunan, two on al-Tirmidhī's $\tilde{J}ami'$, and one on Ibn Khuzayma's Sahāh (with Ibn al-Jārūd's Muntaqā a possible second). Scholars in Naysābūr thus could and did see other collections as attractive and available formative texts.

Having exhausted the path of material constraint, we must ultimately turn to matters of functionalism and scholarly preference. As al-Ismā'īlī's, Ibn 'Uqda's and Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī's testimonies prove, many scholars of the Ṣahīḥayn Network simply felt that a specific work was the most accurate and useful presentation of the Prophet's legacy. Al-Ismā'īlī favored al-Bukhārī's collection over Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ, Abū Dāwūd's Sunan and the Sunan of al-Ḥulwānī (d. 243/857–8) because in his eyes it provided a more authentic selection of hadīths and a better analysis of their legal content. Conversely, Ibn 'Uqda felt Muslim's work outshone al-Bukhārī's because it was more purely a collection of ḥadīths without the incomplete narrations and commentary added for legal elucidation. Al-Ismā'īlī and Ibn 'Uqda were attracted to the differing functional methodologies of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, but why did Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī favor Muslim's work above all others? Such matters of scholarly preference lie beyond our ken.

Certainly, if hadīth scholars of the long fourth century hoped to prove the quality of their isnāds by composing mustakhrajs, it seems logical to choose the most rigorous collections as templates. This explains why all the template collections were products of the sahīh movement and not earlier works like Mālik's Muwațța'. In fact, the only work one might call a mustakhraj of the Muwațța', the Kitāb al-tamhīd of Ibn 'Abd al-Barr (d. 463/1070), was effectively an attempt to place Mālik's work on equal footing with other şahīh books. Because the Muwațța' is replete with hadīths lacking complete isnāds, Ibn 'Abd al-Barr set out to collect complete narrations. As Ibn 'Abd al-Barr makes clear in his introduction, one of his goals in the Tamhīd is to establish Mālik's book according to the language and requirements of the şaḥīḥ movement.¹⁸¹

¹⁸¹ Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Tamhīd li-mā fī al-Muwațța' min al-ma'ānī wa al-asānīd, ed. Muştafā Ahmad al-'Alawī and Muhammad 'Abd al-Kabīr al-Bakrī, 2nd ed., 26 vols. (Rabat: Wizārat 'Umūm al-Awqāf wa al-Shu'ūn al-Islāmiyya, 1402/1982), 1:7.

The nature of the Sahihayn also partly explains why they were the only works to prompt ilal or ilzāmāt studies in this period. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim were two of the only scholars to purpose works devoted solely to sahh hadīths. Others such as Abū Dāwūd and al-Tirmidhī acknowledged that they relied on weak or lackluster narrations when necessary. Consequently, as al-Khaṭṭābī noted, the Sahīḥayn and the notion of their authors' "conditions (shart, rasm)" proved attractive targets for study. Only with works that set uniform standards could one apply these standards elsewhere. Only with authors who claimed to include only authentic material could one object that certain hadīths fell short of this measure.

Even in this matter, however, we cannot escape the aesthetics of critical preference. Ibn Khuzayma also sets up a clear requirement for authenticity (sihha) on the first page of his Ṣahīh. But despite the arguably unparalleled accolades al-Ḥākim grants him, al-Ḥākim found Ibn Khuzayma an unsatisfactory judge of authentic reports (sihha).¹⁸² Although some scholars like al-Khatīb said that Ibn Khuzayma's work deserved mention alongside the Ṣahīḥayn, his collection never accumulated critical studies.¹⁸³

Conclusion: The Eve of Canonization

Our analysis of the Sahīhayn Network of the long fourth century brings us to the eve of the canonization of these two texts. Among Mu'tazilites, hadīth-minded Sunnis like al-Ţabarī, the hadīth-wary Ḥanafī theorist al-Jaṣṣāṣ and even in the realm of Sunni-Shiite polemic, there had arisen the idea that hadīths could enjoy the consensus of the umma and thus wield tremendous epistemological authority. Among transmission-based scholars this concept expressed itself in a proto-canon of hadīth collections that certain scholars felt provided loci of legal and narrative consensus.

¹⁸² Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 313.

¹⁸³ Al-Khațīb al-Baghdādī, al-Jāmi 'li-ikhtilāf al-rāwī wa ādāb al-sāmi', 2:185. It was not until the eighth/fourteenth century that 'Umar b. 'Alī Ibn Mulaqqin (d. 804/1401) added the men of Ibn Khuzayma to al-Mizzī's ever-expanding biographical dictionary of hadīth transmitters; Taqī al-Dīn Muḥammad Ibn Fahd al-Makkī, Lahz al-lihāz, ed. Zakariyyā 'Umayrāt (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1419/1998), 130.

But how did this period of intense study affect al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works? One can best answer this question by referring to sahīh hadīth collections that never attained canonical status. In his brief explanation of why Sahīh Ibn Hibbān did not become one of the famous Six Books, the Azhar scholar Muhammad al-Qī'ī states curtly that Ibn Hibbān (d. 354/965) narrated from unknown transmitters (majāhīl).¹⁸⁴ This negative evaluation of Ibn Hibbān's work originated as early as the writings of his own student, al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī.¹⁸⁵ Yet as our review of transmitter studies has shown, the earliest work on al-Bukhārī's teachers freely admits that at least one of his sources in the Sahīh was also unknown. It was only after another two generations of study that al-Kalābādhī discovered the identity of this transmitter. Ibn Hibbān died almost a century after al-Bukhārī and lived in an era that he himself bemoaned as a sad time, when people no longer wrote sahīh books.¹⁸⁶ Had his Sahīh received the generations of scholarly attention devoted to the Sahīhayn during the long fourth century, it too might have been purged of unknown transmitters, in which case al-Hakim would have read it with glowing approval. Indeed, later scholars such as Ibn Taymiyya (d. 728/1328), Ibn Kathīr (d. 774/1373) and Zayn al-Dīn al-'Irāqī (d. 806/1404) did champion Ibn Hibbān's work as an exceptional source for authentic hadīth.187 As we will see in the next chapter, they were simply too late.

Conversely, the extraordinary efforts of the Sahīhayn Network scholars to produce definitive texts of al-Bukhārī's collection and identify his methods and transmitters made the work an ideal candidate for canonization. As we shall see in the next chapter, it was claims about al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's methods and transmitters that lay at the center of the case for their authority.

We must now also ask: How did this "period of intense canonical process" involve the community shaping and appreciating these texts in ways that made them "most meaningful and valuable?"¹⁸⁸ A number of scholars in the long fourth century immediately seized on the *Şal*_i*īhayn* as ¹⁸⁴ Muḥammad al-Qīʿī, Qānūn al-fikr al-islāmī (Cairo: Dār al-Başā'ir, 1424/2004), 145.

¹⁸⁵ See al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīḥ al-afkār, 1:66; cf. al-Sakhāwī, Fatḥ al-mughīth, 1:56.

¹⁸⁶ Ibn Hibbān, Sahīh Ibn Hibbān, 1:58.

¹⁸⁷ Ibn Taymiyya, Majmü fatāwā, 1:256; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bā ith al-hathīth, 23; al-Irāqī, al-Taqvīd wa al-īdāh, 30; Ibn al-Şalāh, Muqaddima, 164–5.

¹⁸⁸ Sanders, 30.

formative texts for engaging the Prophetic legacy and expressing their relationship with it. Their interest spawned the period's concentrated studies of the two works. It was not, however, the need that drove the mustakhraj genre that would result in the canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. Expressing one's relationship to the Prophet's legacy and interpreting his teachings through living isnāds remained the unique obsession of hadīth scholars. The canonization of the Ṣahīhayn would have to involve a broader Muslim community.

It would be the ilzāmāt genre, which extended al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards for authenticity to new hadīths, that proved crucial. It was the standards of the two scholars that served as the measure of truth in which the authority of the lawmaker could be deposited and then extended into new territory. It is no surprise that the one scholar of the long fourth century to have dealt exclusively with the standards of the Shaykhayn is the one scholar we have conspicuously avoided until now. He is the focal point of the Sahāhayn Network to whom all roads lead. Prior to al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī's seminal career, the nexus of canonicity-that of text, authority and communal identification-had not yet coalesced. Transmitters like Ibn al-Sakan, Abū Dharr al-Harawī and the various scholars who produced studies of the Sahīhayn in effect succeeded in producing definitive, accessible texts of the two works. But the Sahihayn were not authoritative even for their local mustakhraj cults. Unlike many post-canonization critics, al-Ismā'īlī, Ibn 'Ammār and al-Dāragutnī included no word of apology or explanation for criticizing the two works. Before al-Hakim the Sahahayn were simply tools and objects of interest for local communities of transmission-based scholars. After him, the canon had formed.

CHAPTER FIVE

CANON AND COMMUNITY: AL-ḤĀKIM AL-NAYSĀBŪRĪ AND THE CANONIZATION OF THE ŞAḤĪḤAYN

Introduction

Around the end of the fourth/tenth century, the Sahīh collections of al-Bukhārī and Muslim first emerged as kanòns of authenticity. Representatives from the two divergent strains of the transmission-based school, the Hanbalī/über-Sunnis and the nascent Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī camp, agreed on the Sahihayn as common references for the Prophet's authentic legacy. The study and exploration of the Sahīhayn took place at the hands of a network of devoted hadith scholars, but the canonization of the two works would result from the activities of a different cadre. Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī was the common link. He both inherited and participated in the study of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections, yet he employed the ilzāmāt genre for a new ideological purpose. Al-Hākim's vision of the critical standards that the two scholars had followed in compiling their works was designed to meet the demands of both Sunni hadīth scholars and the hadīth-wary Mu'tazilites who rivaled them. Al-Hakim used the "standards of al-Bukhari and Muslim" as a measure of authenticity to extend this common requirement to a vast new body of hadīths.

In the long fourth century, the broader Muslim community developed a new vision of the authority that Prophetic hadīths could attain when validated by communal consensus. By the mid-fifth/eleventh century, this leap had led legal theorists from the Hanafī, Mālikī, Muʿtazilite, Hanbalī and Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarī schools to a common belief that hadīths accepted by the umma yielded epistemological certainty. It was this principle that two of al-Hākim's close associates, one from the budding Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarī tradition and the other from the Hanbalī/über-Sunni school, would use to declare the Ṣaḥīḥayn a common body of authentic hadīths agreed on by these two vying groups.

CANON AND COMMUNITY

The Life and Works of al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī

Abū 'Abdallāh Muhammad b. 'Abdallāh al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī was born in 321/933 in Naysābūr and began studying hadīth at the age of nine. He studied extensively with over two thousand teachers in Kufa, Rayy, Baghdad, Abādān, Hamadhān, Merv, Transoxiana, and his native Naysābūr.¹ His primary mentors in the sciences of hadīth collection and criticism were three major members of the Sahīhayn Network: Abū 'Alī al-Navsābūrī, Abū Ahmad al-Hākim and al-Dāragutnī, as well as Muhammad b. 'Umar Ibn al-Ji'ābī (d. 355/966).² Al-Hākim traveled twice to Baghdad for his studies, once as a youth and again in 368/978-9.3 Throughout his career he and his Baghdad teacher al-Dāragutnī had an uneasy and tense relationship. Al-Hākim's student al-Khalīlī mentions that his teacher sat and discussed (nāzara) hadīth with al-Dāraqutnī and that the latter was pleased with the student from Naysābūr.⁴ In another report, however, it is said that when al-Hākim arrived in Baghdad he asked to see al-Dāraqutnī's collection of hadīths from a certain shaykh. When the young scholar looked at the first hadīth and saw it was from a transmitter whom he considered weak, he threw down the papers and never looked at them again.⁵ As we shall see, al-Hākim and al-Dāraqutnī would remain in an ongoing correspondence characterized by serious disagreements over the nature of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's methods.

In Naysābūr's rigid division between the Ḥanafī school and the transmission-based scholars, al-Ḥākim adhered firmly to the latter's moderate Shāfi'ī strain. He studied the Shāfi'ī tradition with Abū Sahl al-Ṣu'lūkī (d. 369/980) as well as others and even composed a book on the virtues of the school's eponymous founder (Faḍā ʾil al-Shāfi'ī).⁶ He complained about the way in which the Ḥanafī Muḥammad b. Sa'īd al-Bawraqī used to forge ḥadīths for that school, such as the following report attributed to the Prophet: "There will be in my umma a man named Abū Ḥanīfa, and he will be its lamp...and there will be in my

¹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:163.

² Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:165.

³ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 324.

⁴ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 324. Al-Subkī frankly admits that al-Ḥākim and al-Dāraquṭnī were often at odds; al-Subkī, Țabaqāt, 4:164.

⁵ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 3:94. Al-Khatīb adds, "Or so he said (aw kamā qāl)."

⁶ Cf. al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:164; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 4:156.

umma a man named Muḥammad b. Idrīs [al-Shāfi'ī] whose strife (fitna) is more harmful than that of Satan (Iblīs)."⁷

Like many participants in the early Shāfi'ī tradition, al-Ḥākim cultivated relationships with practitioners of dialectical theology. In fact, he studied extensively with two of the architects of the Ash'arī school. He attended the lessons of Ibn Fūrak (d. 406/1015), who held him in high regard, and also produced a sizable selection (intakhaba 'alayhi) of ḥadīths from the famous Shāfi'ī jurist, legal theoretician and theologian Abū Isḥāq al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 418/1027).⁸

Al-Hākim eventually became a leading member of the hadīth scholar community in Naysābūr. Not only was he sought out for opinions on the authenticity of hadīths and the reliability of narrators, he also exercised a great deal of authority in the community. One of al-Hākim's main teachers assigned him as the supervisor for his pious endowment (waqf) and charged him with running a small hadīth school called Dār al-Sunna.⁹ Al-Hākim towered over the multitudes of students who flocked to the city to study the Prophet's legacy. The famous Sufi exegete, Muḥammad b. al-Husayn al-Sulamī (d. 412/1021), who was accused of forging ḥadīths for the Sufi cause, had heard a small number of ḥadīths from the great Naysābūr muḥaddith Abū al-ʿAbbās al-Aṣamm (d. 346/957). After al-Hākim's firm oversight had ended with his death in 405/1014 at the age of eighty-four, however, al-Sulamī felt free to exaggerate dramatically to students the amount of material he had heard from al-Aṣamm.¹⁰

Al-Hākim's interest in hadīth dominated his oeuvre. Aside from his book on al-Shāfi'ī, a contribution to the Proofs of Prophecy (Dalā'il al-nubuwwa) genre, and his landmark biographical dictionary of Naysābūr, al-Hākim's works revolved around the science of hadīth criticism. Well before he reached the age of seventy he had written a selection of one hadīth from each of his teachers (mu'jam al-shuyūkh), a book of 'ilal, and a hadīth work called Kitāb al-iklīl about the Prophet's campaigns for the local military governor (Sāhib al-jaysh).¹¹ Much more important, however, was the introduction to that work, which served to familiarize the lay

⁷ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:379.

⁸ Cf. al-Subkī, Țabaqāī, 4:162; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:164; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 28:438.

⁹ 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 6.

¹⁰ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:245.

¹¹ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 325.

reader with the types of authentic and defective $(saq\bar{u}m)$ reports as well as the levels of narrator criticism.¹² He also wrote an introduction to his treatments of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works, called al-Madkhal ilā al-Ṣaḥīḥ (or al-Ṣaḥīḥayn), in which the author gives a tantalizing indication of his vision of the Shaykhayn's criteria and their range of acceptable narrators. In addition, he states that he wrote one book on each of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's criteria for authenticity as well as a work on those reports that one of the two scholars had included to the exclusion of the other.¹³

Probably around the age of sixty-five, al-Hākim penned his famous and comprehensive treatise on the sciences of hadīth, the Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth (Knowledge of the Sciences of Hadīth). Divided into fifty-two chapters, this book discusses the technical terms used in hadīth criticism and transmission, lists the different generations of transmitters, gives brief biographies of major hadīth scholars and outlines material essential for a hadīth student. Al-Hākim's opinions and the chapter structure of his Ma'rifa would exercise tremendous influence on the genre of hadīth's technical discipline (mustalah al-hadīth) for centuries.¹⁴

The work with which we are most concerned in this chapter was evidently one of the last al-Hākim composed: a voluminous ilzāmāt of the Sahīhayn entitled al-Mustadrak. This work differed both qualitatively and quantitatively from the ilzāmāt works of al-Hākim's teacher al-Dāraquṭnī and his student Abū Dharr al-Harawī. Unlike al-Dāraquṭnī's diminutive Kitāb al-ilzāmāt, which consists of only one hundred and nine ḥadīths, and Abū Dharr al-Harawī's lost Mustadrak, which was only one volume, al-Hākim's Mustadrak is a multivolume work. Unlike

¹² Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat kitāb al-Iklāl, 51. We know al-Hākim had composed the Iklāl, its introduction, his Madkhal ilā al-Ṣahāḥ and his Muzakkā al-akhbār well before 389 AH, because we know his Ma'rifat 'ulām al-ḥadāth was being transmitted widely as early as that date, and in that work the author refers the reader to the aforementioned books; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 4:157; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:162.

¹³ This last work was titled Mā infarada kull wāḥid min al-imāmayn bi-ikhrājihi. For lists of al-Hākim's oeuvre, see Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Tabaqāt, 1:199–200; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:170; al-Hākim, Tārīkh Nīshābūr, 38–42 (editor's introduction); al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 4:156. Al-Hākim had other small books on legal matters, such as a work called Kayfiyyat salāt al-duḥā (How to Pray the Late Morning Prayer), a work called Farā'id al-fawā'id and a forty hadīth collection, which was widely studied in Qazvīn; al-Rāfi'ī, al-Tadwīn fī akhbār Qazvīn; 1:337, 341, 346; 2:45, 58.

¹⁴ Ibn al-Ṣalāh's famous Muqaddima, for example, is influenced by the chapter structure of the Ma'rifa, to the extent that Ibn al-Ṣalāh included a certain chapter (on afrād) which he felt was covered elsewhere simply because al-Hākim had a chapter on it; al-ʿIrāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 95.

al-Dāraqutnī's random and incidental collection of hadīths, the Mustadrak is organized topically in musannaf form.¹⁵

Al-Hākim's works on the technical discipline of hadīth study were widely read even during his own lifetime, and several scholars responded to his work. His student al-Khalīlī notes that al-Hākim was sometimes not sufficiently discriminating or clear in his writings. The criticisms of his colleagues thus led him to review and clarify his work.¹⁶ 'Abd al-Ghanī b. Sa'īd of Egypt (d. 409/1019), for example, wrote to al-Hākim with some criticisms of his al-Madkhal ilā al-Sahīh, for which al-Hākim thanked him.¹⁷ Farther west than Egypt, we know that even within the author's lifetime (by 389/998-9) some hadīth scholars in Andalusia possessed copies of his Ma'rifa.¹⁸ Al-Hākim was well-known enough in the region within several decades of his death for Ibn Hazm (d. 456/1064), who never left Andalusia, to prominently note his opinion in the debate over who was the most virtuous of the Prophet's Companions.¹⁹ In the Islamic heartlands of Iraq and Iran, al-Hākim's student Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī had a copy of his Tārīkh Naysābūr, his *Madkhal ilā al-Ṣaḥī*h and probably many of his other books.²⁰ Although al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī never met al-Hākim, he relies on information and reports from him extensively through a myriad of intermediaries in his Tārīkh Baghdād.²¹

Yet al-Hākim's adherence to the moderate Shāfi'ī tradition and some of his interpretive choices in his Mustadrak precipitated a clash with ¹⁵ The Cairo edition of the Mustadrak fills five volumes; al-Hākim, al-Mustadrak 'alā al-Ṣaḥīḥayn, ed. Muqbil b. Hādī al-Wādi'ī, 5 vols. (Cairo: Dār al-Ḥaramayn, 1417/1997). See also Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon," 11. The Mustadrak has fewer chapters (47) than al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's Ṣaḥāḥs, but seems to be inspired by both works' ordering. Only 3 chapters appear in the Mustadrak that do not appear in either of the Ṣaḥīḥayn (kitāb al-hijra, kitāb qism al-fay' and kitāb tawārīkh al-mutaqaddimīn min alanbiyā').

¹⁶ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 324.

¹⁷ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:168; this work has survived in manuscript form, entitled "Bayān awhām al-Hākim fī al-Madkhal," MS Ahmet III 624, Topkapı Sarayı, Istanbul: fols. 200a–206a.

¹⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:165-6.

¹⁹ Abū Muḥammad 'Alī Ibn Ḥazm al-Zāhirī, Kītāb al-fisal fī al-milal wa al-ahwā' wa al-nihal, 5 vols. in 2 (Baghdad: Maktabat al-Muthannā, [1964]), 4:111. Ibn Ḥazm notes that al-Ḥākim upheld the unusual position that 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb was the foremost Companion of the Prophet. Considering the controversy over al-Ḥākim's supposedly Shiite views (see below), however, such a report was most likely a product of polemics surrounding his position.

²⁰ See, for example, al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:73. See also n. 98 below.

²¹ See, for example, al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:438; 10:147; 11:385.

more conservative members of the transmission-based community. Specifically, al-Hākim's statement that two pro-Alid hadīths known as the hadīth al-Tayr²² and the hadīth of Ghadīr Khumm²³ met the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim led certain hadīth scholars to accuse him of Shiism. These accusations are well documented; writing not long after al-Hākim's death, al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī notes several reports about the hadith-al-Tayr incident and al-Hakim leaning towards Shiism.²⁴ Al-Hākim's student al-Khalīlī alludes to the accusations leveled against his teacher when he writes, "For me he was an ocean, and all that was hurled at him could not detract from that (ra'aytuhu fi kull mā ulqiya 'alayhi bahr^{an} lā yu'jizuhu 'anhu)."²⁵ More extreme reports have also survived, such as stories that hadīth scholars blockaded al-Hākim in his house and that he disliked Muʿāwiya so much that he could not bring himself to narrate a hadīth praising him in order to placate his opponents. Such reports, however, appear only in later sources compiled by al-Hākim's critics, such as Ibn al-Jawzī's Muntazam.²⁶

This accusation of Shiism was probably baseless, like the scandal that had earlier tarnished al-Bukhārī's reputation. Both he and al-Ḥākim were attacked by extreme members of the transmission-based school for their more moderate stances. Al-Ḥākim's most vocal critics were all prominent über-Sunnis: the Ḥanbalī Khwāje 'Abdallāh al-Anṣārī (d. 481/1089), Muḥammad b. Ṭāhir al-Maqdisī (d. 507/1113) and Ibn al-Jawzī.²⁷ Much like al-Shāfiʿī himself, al-Ḥākim's Shāfiʿī identity led to

²² In this hadīth the Prophet is eating a fowl and calls on God to "bring me the most beloved of your creation, (kuntu akhdamu Rasūl Allāh {s} fa-quddima li-Rasūl Allāh {s} farakh mashwī...)" at which point 'Alī enters and eats with the Prophet. See $J\bar{a}mi$ ' al-Tirmidhī: kitāb al-manāqib, bāb manāqib 'Alī.

²³ In this hadīth the Prophet says, "Whoever's master I am, 'Alī is his master (man kuntu mawlāhu fa-Alī mawlāhu)." See Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad Ibn al-Najjār (d. 643/1246), al-Radd 'alā Abī Bakr al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, 129; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:168. For these ḥadīths, see al-Ḥākim, al-Mustadrak: kitāb ma'rifat al-şaḥāba, bāb ba'd fadā 'il Alī.

²⁴ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 3:94; cf. Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:109; Abū Tāhir Ahmad b. Muhammad al-Silafī (d. 576/1180), Mu'jam al-safar, ed. 'Abdallāh 'Umar al-Bārūdī (Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1414/1993), 99.

 $^{^{25}}$ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 325. The editor of this text vowels the word 'yu'jizhu,' which I think is incorrect.

²⁶ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:109–10. In addition, there is a record of al-Hākim narrating a pro-Umayyad report in which Muʿāwiya performs the pilgrimage and urges people to give their oath of loyalty to Yazīd; al-Husayn b. Ibrāhīm al-Jawzaqānī (d. 543/1148–9), al-Abātīl wa al-manākīr wa al-sihāh wa al-mashāhīr, ed. Muhammad Hasan Muhammad (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1422/2001), 142.

²⁷ See al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:174–5; Ibn Hajar, Lisān al-mīzān, 5:233; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:110.

CHAPTER FIVE

accusations of Shiism. Al-Shāfi'ī had based his legislation on issues of rebellion (al-bughāt) on the premise that 'Alī had dealt righteously and appropriately with Mu'āwiya's uprising against the caliphate. Combined with his affection for the family of the Prophet, such thinking led to a trial before the Abbasid caliph in which al-Shāfi'ī had to defend himself against accusations of Shiism.²⁸ Al-Hākim upheld this Shāfi'ī position, quoting the great Shāfi'ī Ibn Khuzayma as saying that anyone who fought 'Alī on the issue of the caliphate was a rebel (bāghi^m).²⁹

The furor caused by al-Hākim's approval of the two pro-Alid hadīths also seems to have been accidental. The hadīths themselves had been verified by earlier Sunni scholars such as al-Nasā'ī and al-Tirmidhī. In al-Hākim's time, however, the reports had become anathema to certain elements of the hadīth community. Whereas al-Nasā'ī was only vaguely criticized for not praising Mu'āwiya sufficiently, when a contemporary of al-Hākim, Ibn al-Saqqā' (d. 371/981–2), narrated the hadīth al-Ṭayr in a mosque he was expelled, confined to his house, and the place where he sat in the mosque washed clean.³⁰ It thus seems probable that the accusations of Shiism resulted from al-Hākim's Shāfi'ī approval of 'Alī's position against Mu'āwiya and his authentication of two hadīths that had become touchstones for anti-Shiite sentiment among the ahl al-ḥadīth.

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim in al-Hākim's Vision of Hadīth

As the Sahāhayn Network Chart in the previous chapter demonstrates, al-Hākim acted as a magnet for studies of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's

160

²⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Ma'rifat al-ruwāt al-mutakallam fihim bimā lā yūjibu al-radd, ed. Abū 'Abdallāh Ibrāhīm Sa'īdāy (Beirut: Dār al-Ma'rifa, 1406/1986), 49–50; cf. Abū Zahra, al-Shāfi'ī, 22–3.

²⁹ This is based on the famous hadīth in which the Prophet tells 'Ammār b. Yāsir that he will be killed by the rebellious party (i.e., Mu'āwiya); al-Ḥākim, Ma'nfat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 105.

³⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:117. For the accusations of al-Nasā'ī, see ibid., 2:194–5; al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīh al-afkār, 1:199. That these two pro-Alid hadīths were particularly controversial in al-Hākim's time is also evidedent from the fact that scholars of this period devoted specific treatises to these reports. Abū al-ʿAbbās Ibn ʿUqda (d. 332/944) wrote a work on the hadīth of Ghadīr Khumm, and al-Ṭabarī (d. 310/923) and al-Ḥākim's student Aḥmad b. Ḥamdān (d. ca. 440/1048–9) wrote works on the hadīth of al-Ṭayr, al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:206; cf. Aḥmad al-Ghumārī, Fath al-malik al-ʿalī bi-ṣiḥḥat ḥadīth bāb madīnat al-ʿilm ʿAlī, ed. ʿImād Surūr ([n.p.]: [n.p.], 1426/2005), 11–12.

work. Like his teacher, al-Dāraqutnī, al-Hākim's scholarly activities revolved around the Sahīhayn and the methods of their authors. Unlike earlier scholars such as al-Ismā'īlī, however, al-Hākim's appreciation for the Sahīhayn did not involve their legal merits. For al-Hākim, al-Bukhārī and Muslim represented the pinnacle of skill and achievement in the realm of hadīth criticism in particular. He writes in his al-Madkhal ilā al-Iklīl, "All regions testify to the superiority of Khurāsān in the knowledge of authentic hadīths...due to the precedence of the two imāms, Abū 'Abdallāh al-Bukhārī and Abū al-Husavn [Muslim] al-Navsābūrī, and their lone mastery (tafarrudihimā) of that science."31 Unlike the other members of the Sahīhayn Network who viewed the works only as formative texts or objects of study, al-Hakim endowed them with a loftier station. Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's books embodied the highest level of critical stringency, and for him they were key pillars of the science of hadīth criticism itself. In the Ma'rifa's chapter on authentic hadīths, al-Hākim begins with a description of reports that seem to have authentic isnāds but in fact possess fatal weaknesses perceptible only to master critics. He concludes that if a hadīth does not have an isnād found in one of the Sahīhayn, one must subject it to thorough examination for such hidden flaws (illa pl. ilal).³² Inclusion in one or both of the Sahīhayn thus tremendously bolsters the credibility of a narrator or his reports. In al-Hākim's chapter on how hadīth scholars have treated narrators with non-Sunni beliefs, he uses the Sahihayn to demonstrate that mild heretics are acceptable sources. Abān b. Taghlib (d. 140–1/757–9), for example, was a known Shiite who once narrated a hadīth attacking the caliph 'Uthmān. But al-Hākim states that he is nonetheless "trustworthy, with his hadīths included in the Sahīhayn." Despite Mālik's rejection of Ibrāhīm b. Tahmān (d. 168/784) for being a Murji'ite, al-Hākim defends him in the same manner.33

Al-Hākim did not, however, consider al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections infallible. He himself criticizes some of Muslim's selections. He mentions a narration of the famous hadīth in which the Prophet states that the best generations are the first three generations of Muslims, ³¹ Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat kitāb al-Iklīl, 72.

³² Al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 75.

³³ Al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 168–9. Al-Hākim lists Ibrāhīm as a one of the famous trustworthy imāms of his generation; ibid., 308. Al-Hākim himself states that one has to be a proselytizer of heresy to be placed outside the pale of 'adāla; al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 67.

adding, "That hadīth is included in the Sahīh of Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj, but it has a remarkable flaw (illa 'ajība)."³⁴ Such critiques come as no surprise, since al-Ḥākim did not feel that al-Bukhārī and Muslim had designed their works to be totally free of error. In the introduction to his Mustadrak, he states that his work will consist of hadīths meeting al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards but that "it is not possible to include [only] what has no flaws, for indeed they [al-Bukhārī and Muslim] did not even claim this for themselves...."³⁵ Here we see the first of several inconsistencies in al-Ḥākim's methodology. If the Ṣahīhayn are secure sources whose isnāds require little critical attention, how can he so readily admit that they contain flawed reports? We will be better able to solve this riddle once we have addressed al-Ḥākim's purpose in employing the standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim.

The Shurūț According to al-Hākim: The Requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim

Although scholars such as Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī and al-Dāraqutnī regularly refer to the standards (shart/shurūt/rasm) of al-Bukhārī or Muslim in their extant works, al-Ḥākim seems to be the only scholar of the long fourth century to have devoted specific treatises to this subject. These works have unfortunately been lost, but it appears that they did not succeed in clearly explaining al-Ḥākim's school of thought on the topic. The scholar's ambiguous and inconsistent writings on the requirements for sahīħ hadīths in general and al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's methodologies in particular have confounded hadīth experts from al-Ḥākim's time to the present day.³⁶ It is therefore necessary to establish the most accurate understanding of al-Ḥākim's stance, which has generally been interpreted in one of three ways. First, al-Ḥākim's writings have led many scholars to believe that he considered the elimination of unknown transmitters from the isnād of a hadīth to be essential for its inclusion in both the general category of şahīħ and in the Sahāhayn. Other scholars have interpreted al-Hākim's vision of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards as requiring what we will define as 'doubling transmission.' Finally, the third and most accurate camp has understood that al-Hākim intended both of the above meanings in his definition of the Shaykhayn's conditions.

³⁴ Al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 52; cf. al-Dāraqutnī, Kitāb al-ilzāmāt wa altatabbu', 501-2.

³⁵ Al-Hākim, al-Mustadrak, 1:39.

³⁶ One of the more recent attempts to grasp al-Hākim's definition of the shurūț comes from Muhammad 'Abd al-Hayy al-Laknawī. See his Zafar al-amānī, ed. Taqī al-Dīn al-Nadawī (United Arab Emirates: Dār al-Qalam, 1415/1995), 69–71.

a. Two Rāwīs and the Elimination of Jahāla

The first interpretation of al-Hākim's writings on the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim centers on the qualities of the transmitters they employed. The notion that a narrator needed to be well-established as a transmitter in order to form part of a sahih isnād exerted a tremendous influence among hadith scholars. The presence of an unknown transmitter in a report's isnād was one of the foremost obstacles to its achieving a *sahī*h rating.³⁷ By the time of al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī (d. 463/1071), Sunni scholars had agreed almost unanimously that a person needed at least two established narrators $(r\bar{a}w\bar{i})$ transmitting from him in order to avoid being condemned as "unknown (majhūl)."38 The first explicit formulation of this principle is usually attributed to al-Bukhārī's great adversary al-Dhuhlī.39 This concept, however, was clearly already applied in practice during al-Dhuhlī's time. Muslim had dedicated an entire work to listing transmitters who only had one transmitter $(r\bar{a}w\bar{i})$ from them, thus falling short of the requirements necessary for a sahīh isnād. Al-Nasā'ī (d. 303/915) also composed a short work on this subject, and al-Hākim himself devoted a chapter to it in his Ma'rifat 'ulum al-hadith. The opposite of unknown transmitters were "well-known (mashhūr)" ones whose testimony and transmission could validate those of others.⁴⁰

³⁷ For a discussion of this, see Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīḥ al-anzār, 102.

³⁸ Al-Khaţīb, al-Kifāya, 1:290. Later scholars such as Ibn 'Abd al-Barr and Abū al-Hasan b. al-Qaţţān al-Fāsī (d. 628/1230–1) attempted to qualify this generally consistent rule. For a discussion of such attempts, see Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīḥ al-anzār, 192–198; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqaddima, 296; al-'Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāḥ, 117–8; al-Laknawī, *al-Raf ' wa al-takmīl fī al-jarḥ wa al-ta'dī*l, ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda, 8th ed. (Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1425/2004), 256–60. Al-Shāfi'ī (d. 204/819–20) himself is attributed with the quote that one cannot accept the narration of an unknown; al-Bayhaqī, Ma'rifat al-sunan wa al-āthār, 1:75, 81.

³⁹ See al-Khatīb, al-Kīfāya, 1:290; Ibn Rajab, Sharh Ilal al-Tirmidhī, 1:82.

⁴⁰ See Ahmad b. Shu'ayb al-Nasā'ī, Thalāth rasā'i hadīthiyya, ed. Mashhūr Hasan Mahmūd Salmān and 'Abd al-Karīm Ahmad al-Warīkāt (al-Zarqā', Jordan: Maktabat al-Manār, 1408/1987), 27–50; al-Hākim, Ma'nfat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 195–200. The technical

CHAPTER FIVE

Al-Hākim's work leaves little doubt that he intended the elimination of anonymity to be an essential feature of a sahih hadith as well as a requirement of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. In the Madkhal ilā al-Iklīl, al-Hākim describes ten levels of sahīh hadīths. He notes how the first five levels are agreed on by all and are found in the collections of established experts used as proof texts (kutub al-a'imma al-muhtaji bihā).⁴¹ The bottom five levels, on the other hand, fail to meet the requirements for authenticity of certain schools of thought. The highest level of sahih, he explains, consists of reports narrated by a Companion whose identity and reputation as a narrator of hadīths has been established. This occurs, al-Hākim elaborates, when one proves that two known Successors have narrated hadiths from that Companion, thus freeing him of "anonymity (jahāla)." This report is then narrated from that Companion by a Successor who is equally well established as a transmitter. The same follows for the ensuing generations until al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's teachers. As this last clause suggests, al-Hākim concludes by stating that this is the level of hadiths found in the Sahihayn, and that their number does not exceed ten thousand.⁴² Al-Hākim then proceeds to define the other levels of authentic hadīths, which do not include those featured in the Sahīhayn.43

In the Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, written long after the Madkhal ilā al-Iklīl, al-Ḥākim provides only one definition for sahīh hadīths. Abandoning the multiple levels of authentic narrations, he restates his definition of the highest level: a sahīh hadīth is narrated from the Prophet by a Companion freed of anonymity by having two upright Successors (tābi' 'ādil) who generally transmit from him. The hadīth is then accepted and transmitted widely among (yatadāwaluhu... bi'l-qubūl) scholars from that point on. He likens this mass transmission to continuous levels of testimony by witnesses in court (shahāda).⁴⁴ Invoking this analogy between term mashhūr was already in use during the first half of the third/ninth century and appears in Muslim's writings; Muslim, al-Munfaridāt wa al-waḥdān, 88.

⁴¹ Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat kitāb al-Iklīl, 107.

⁴² Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā ma'njat kitāb al-Iklīl; 73, 78. Scholars like al-Laknawī have admitted that this passage and the following description of sihha from the Ma'nja could support the notion of doubling transmission. See al-Laknawī, Zafar al-amānī, 69–71.

⁴³ Again falling into inconsistency, al-Hākim notes that al-Bukhārī and Muslim include one narration each that belongs in the fourth level of universally accepted hadīths; see James Robson, trans., An Introduction to the Science of Tradition (London: Luzac and Co., 1953), 19.

⁴⁴ Al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 77.

bearing witness and transmitting hadīths on the topic of eliminating anonymity was odd for a Sunni muhaddith, although it was especially common among Mu'tazilites.⁴⁵ The reason for this bizarre comment will became clear when we discuss al-Hākim's target audience.

Support for this interpretation of al-Hakim's vision of the Sahihayn's criteria comes from one of his senior students, Abū Bakr al-Bavhaqī. He held that al-Bukhārī and Muslim demanded that each narrator in the isnād have the two transmitters required to eliminate anonymity. Although one would expect that this close student of al-Hākim would have provided more productive insights into his school of thought, al-Bayhaqī's comments are frustratingly brief. In his al-Sunan al-kubrā he states definitely that al-Bukhārī and Muslim did not narrate reports from a Companion or Successor with only one transmitter from him. For this reason, they did not include hadīths from one Muʿāwiya b. Hīda because only one person ever narrated material from him.⁴⁶ Another scholar very familiar with both al-Hākim's works and the Sahīhayn, Abū 'Alī al-Jayyānī al-Ghassānī of Andalusia (d. 498/1105), states that Hākim's definition of *sahī*h aimed at the elimination of majhūls. He therefore required each Companion and Successor to have two narrators establishing him as a viable transmitter.47

This definition of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's criteria and the requirements for authentic hadīths in general, however, was very controversial. Even during his lifetime, al-Hākim's colleagues attempted to correct his understanding. In fact, in his Mustadrak, al-Hākim quotes the text of a letter al-Dāraquṭnī sent him debating his claim that al-Bukhārī and Muslim included hadīths only from narrators with two transmitters from them. Al-Dāraquṭnī objects, "Indeed al-Bukhārī, God bless him, included a hadīth from...Qays b. Abū Hāzim from Mirdās al-Aslamī

⁴⁵ The invocation of the notion of witnessing (shahāda) was more common in the context of establishing the upstanding character ('adāla) of a transmitter; see Muslim, Şahāh, 1:7 and al-Khatīb, al-Kīfāya, 1:285. For an excellent discussion of rejecting the analogy with regards to the number of transmitters needed to eliminate jahāla, with references to all the Ash'arī theorists who rejected this analogy as the basis for requiring two transmitters, see al-Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 117–8. For a Ḥanafī rejection, see al-Jaṣṣāṣ, Uṣūl, 1:567–8.

⁴⁶ Åbū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, al-Sunan al-kubrā, ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1420/1999), 4:176. See also see Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb al-tahdhīb, 10:187. It is interesting to note that this Muʿāwiya is not included in Muslim's Munfaridāt.

⁴⁷ Al-Qādī Iyād, Ikmāl al-Mu'lim bi-fawā'id Muslim, 1:83; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:189.

(r) from the Messenger of God..., and Mirdās has no transmitter other than Qays." Al-Dāraquṭnī provides three more cases in which al-Ḥākim's rule fails to apply, but the scholar gives no response.⁴⁸

b. Doubling Transmission: $1 \rightarrow 2 \rightarrow 4$

A second interpretation of al-Hākim's writings on the requirements of the Sahīhavn revolved around the transmission of the actual report and not the status of its transmitters. This school of thought interpreted the same passages mentioned above as requiring what we can term 'doubling transmission,' namely a report whose narrators doubled at each stage of transmission: one Companion narrated to two Successors, who together narrated to four from the next generation, and so on. Al-Hākim's colleague and student Ibn Manda upheld this criterion, calling for two to three narrators at the level of Successor. He added that al-Bukhārī and Muslim based their books on this requirement. falling short on only a few occasions (illā aḥruf^{an}). Abū al-Fadl b. Ṭāhir al-Maqdisī, who wrote the first comprehensive book on the requirements of the Six Books, believed that this was the proper interpretation of al-Hākim's description of the ultimate level of sahih hadīths and those found in the Sahāhayn.⁴⁹ The great Andalusian scholar and traveler Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī (d. 543/1145) also explicitly states in the introduction to his commentary on Bukhārī's Sahīh that the author required doubling transmission for each hadīth.⁵⁰ Abū Bakr al-Hāzimī (d. 584/1188-9) similarly interprets al-Hākim's definition in the Madkhal ilā al-Iklīl.⁵¹ Majd al-Dīn Ibn al-Athīr explains sahīh narrations by replicating al-Hākim's list of the five universally accepted levels, echoing him further by adding that fewer than ten thousand reports meet the highest level.

⁴⁸ Al-Hākim, al-Mustadrak, 4:558–9. Generations of scholars such as Abū Bakr Muhammad b. Mūsā al-Hāzimī (d. 584/1188–9), Ibn al-Ṣalāh, al-Nawawī, al-ʿIrāqī and Ibn Hajar have echoed al-Dāraquinī's disapproval of al-Hākim's claim about al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards. See Abū Bakr Muhammad al-Hāzimī, Shurūţ al-a'imma al-khamsa, 35–36; Ibn al-Ṣalāh, Muqaddima, 554–6; al-Nawawī, Sharh Ṣahīh Muslim, 1:140; al-ʿIrāqī, al-Taqvīd wa al-īdāh, 122; Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāh, 110.

⁴⁹ Al-Maqdisī, Shurūț al-a'imma al-sitta, 15.

⁵⁰ Although it seems that Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī's commentary is lost, his statement was repeated by Ibn Rushayd in his rebuttal of this opinion based on the example of the hadīth, ''Actions are by intentions (innamā al-a'māl bi'l-niyyāt)''; Ibn Hajar, Nuzhat al-nazar fī tawdāh nukhbat al-fikar fī mustalah ahl al-athar, ed. 'Abd al-Samī' al-Anīs and 'Işām Fāris al-Ḥarstānī (Amman: Dār 'Işām, 1419/1999), 23–24.

⁵¹ Al-Hāzimī, Shurūt al-a'imma al-khamsa, 24.

He considers the possibility that al-Hākim meant the requirement of eliminating unknowns, but ultimately deems the doubling transmission interpretation more likely. Many scholars, Ibn al-Athīr explains, did indeed require this for authenticity (siḥḥa). He adds that this is the highest standard of authenticity, "so who is more deserving of it (ajdar) than al-Bukhārī and Muslim?"⁵²

We can appreciate these scholars' interpretation of al-Hākim's definition of the Sahīhayn's requirements by examining an underappreciated source for al-Hākim's thought: a question and answer session recorded by his student Mas'ūd b. 'Alī al-Sijzī of Naysābūr (d. 438-9/1046-8). It goes as follows. When al-Hākim is asked why al-Bukhārī and Muslim narrated from Humayd al-Țawīl ← Anas and not from Yazīd [b. Tahmān] al-Raqāshī \leftarrow Anas, he replied that other men corroborated Humayd's narrations from Anas while Yazīd was on his own.⁵³ In this work al-Hākim is also mentioned as saying that, for al-Bukhārī, "hadīths do not become well-known except by being narrated by two trustworthy transmitters who agree on the narration (al-hadīth lā yashtahiru indahu illā bi-thiqatayn yattafiqān 'alā riwāyatihi."54 Finally, al-Hākim's description of a sahīh hadīth as being transmitted like a series of testimonies (shahāda) leaves little doubt that he intended doubling transmission as a criterion. Islamic law required the testimony of two upstanding males in most legal matters. It thus seems clear that al-Hākim felt that al-Bukhārī and Muslim required hadiths to be transmitted by the same number at every stage of transmission.

With the exception of Ibn Manda, Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī, Ibn al-Athīr and, oddly, the later Yemeni ḥadīth scholar 'Abd al-Khāliq al-Mizjājī (d. 1786–7), commentators who followed this interpretation of al-Ḥākim's work vehemently rejected it as an inaccurate expression of the Ṣaḥīḥayn's criteria.⁵⁵ Al-Maqdisī exclaims that doubling transmission was an admirable ideal, but one that totally fails to describe the reality

⁵² Ibn al-Athīr, $\tilde{J}ami^{c}al-usult, 1:161-3$. Ibn al-Athīr adds that this requirement would be impossible to meet in his own time, since hadīth transmissions had become far too diffuse. Here he echoes al-Ghazālī a century earlier; Ibn al-Athīr, $\tilde{J}ami^{c}al-usult, 1:70$; al-Ghazālī, al-Mankhūl, 255.

⁵³ Al-Hākim, Su'ālāt Mas'ūd b. 'Alī al-Sijzī ma'a as'ilat al-baghdādiyyīn 'an aḥwāl alruwāt, ed. Muwaffaq b. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Qādir (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1408/1988), 223-4.

⁵⁴ Al-Hākim, Su'ālāt Mas'ūd b. 'Alī al-Sijzī, 209.

⁵⁵ 'Abd al-Khāliq al-Mizjājī, Nuzhat riyād al-ijāza al-mustaļāba, ed. Mustafā 'Abd al-Karīm Khatīb (Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1418/1997), 43.

of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's books. Al-Ḥāzimī says that he has been shocked how this palpably false notion had become so widespread, demolishing al-Ḥākim's claim with a long list of examples.⁵⁶ These scholars note that the very first hadīth in al-Bukhārī's Ṣahīh has only one transmitter for the first three levels of the isnād!⁵⁷ Ibn Ḥajar roundly rejects all scholars who interpret al-Ḥākim's explanations as meaning doubling transmission.⁵⁸ He believes that al-Ḥākim's Madkhal ilā al-Iklīl, where he identifies the top level of şahīh with al-Bukhārī and Muslim, and his Ma'rifa, which universalizes this definition, both clearly intend the elimination of anonymity. Like earlier scholars, he rejects both these standards as patently inaccurate representations of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's criteria.⁵⁹

Ibn Ḥajar's teacher, Zayn al-Dīn al-ʿIrāqī, invokes the authoritative testimony of al-Ḥākim's senior disciple al-Bayhaqī to disprove the notion of doubling transmission. He quotes a letter in which al-Bayhaqī skeptically mentions that one Abū Muḥammad al-Juwaynī (d. 438/1047) had cited a ḥadīth scholar who had required doubling transmission for authenticity. No scholars of the ahl al-ḥadīth, al-ʿIrāqī asserts, ever upheld that opinion.⁶⁰

c. A Standard for Authenticity and a Standard for the Ṣaḥīḥayn

In my opinion, the most accurate interpretation of al-Hākim's definition of the Ṣaḥīḥayn criteria comes first from a scholar that many later commentators underestimated. The North African 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Majīd al-Mayyānishī (d. 583/1187) recognized that al-Hākim distinguished between the requirements for authentic reports in general and the ⁵⁶ Al-Hāzimī, Shurūţ; 15, 24.

⁵⁷ Ibn al-Athr, Jāmi al-usūl, 1:161–3. Ibn al-Athr acknowledges these criticisms, but retorts that al-Hākim knew what he was doing and must have come to this conclusion after intensive study. Turning to principles of Islamicate logic, he argues that whoever objects to al-Hākim's position could certainly have delved no deeper than he did. A critic is thus merely negating al-Hākim's statement. Invoking the principle that the affirmative supersedes the negative (al-muthbit muqaddam ʿalā al-nāfī), he concludes that al-Hākim's position prevails. In any case, it may be that al-Hākim had more information at his disposal, so later scholars should assume the best of him.

⁵⁸ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 110.

⁵⁹ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Salāh, 41-42.

⁶⁰ Al-Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 21. No mention of doubling transmission appears in the text of a letter preserved from al-Bayhaqī to al-Juwaynī in al-Subkī's Țabaqāt al-shāfi'iyya; al-Subkī, Țabaqāt al-shāfi'iyya, 5:77–90.

standards employed by al-Bukhārī and Muslim in particular. Al-Mayyānishī's definition for a şaḥīḥ ḥadīth quotes al-Ḥākim's Ma'rifa verbatim, even citing him clearly as the source. As for the criteria of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, al-Mayyānishī states (obviously) that they limited their works to authentic ḥadīths, namely reports narrated from the Prophet by two Companions, four Successors etc.⁶¹ Here the scholar provides an unmistakable description of doubling transmission.

Al-Mayyānishī's younger contemporary, Ibn al-Jawzī, also understood that al-Ḥākim had intended two separate definitions. First, he required the elimination of majhūl narrators for şaḥīḥ ḥadīths in general. Second, he defined the Ṣaḥīḥayn's criteria as doubling transmission, with the hadīth being relayed by "two upstanding narrators from two upstanding narrators ('adlayn 'an 'adlayn)." Like al-Maqdisī, al-Ḥāzimī and Ibn Hajar, however, Ibn al-Jawzī deems both these standards reprehensible (qabīḥ) assessments of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards. Instead, Ibn al-Jawzī says that al-Bukhārī and Muslim required simply "a reliable transmitter and a well-known report (al-thiqa wa al-ishtihār)."⁶²

At first glance, the writings of al-Hākim's most well-known student, al-Bayhaqī, present the one opposing piece of evidence to the argument that al-Hākim intended two separate definitions. In his al-Sunan al-kubrā al-Bayhaqī clearly states that the Sahīhayn excluded narrators with only one transmitter. This does not necessitate, however, that al-Hākim believed that al-Bukhārī and Muslim added no other requirements, such as doubling transmission. Since al-Bayhaqī never provides any systematic discussion of al-Hākim's school of thought or the standards of the Shaykhayn, we cannot dismiss anything due to absence of evidence. Al-'Irāqī's reading of al-Bayhaqī's letter to Abū Muhammad al-Juwaynī suggests that al-Bayhaqī questioned whether doubling transmission was an existing requirement for authenticity among hadīth scholars.

⁶¹ 'Umar al-Mayyānishī, "Mā lā yasa'u al-muḥaddith jahlahu," in Khams rasā'il fī 'ulūm alḥadīth, ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda (Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1423/2002), 266. The text of al-Mayyānishī's work seems to have been corrupted slightly at some crucial point in the transmission process, since it reads "and four Successors from each one of the Companions (wa mā nagalahu 'an kull wāhid min al-ṣaḥāba arba'a min al-tābi'īn)." Doubling transmission would entail four Successors from every two Companions. All later scholars reacting to this passage gloss it as meaning $1 \rightarrow 2$, not $1 \rightarrow 4$. It thus seems possible that some copyist mistakenly added "from each one" to the text; cf. al-Mayyānishī, Mā lā yasa'u al-muḥaddith jahlahu, ed. Subḥī al-Sāmarrā'ī (Baghdad: Sharikat al-Ṭab' wa al-Nashr, 1387/1967), 9.

⁶² Ibn al-Jawzī, *Kitāb al-mawdū a*t, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān Muḥammad 'Uthmān, 3 vols. (Medina: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, 1386–88/1966–68), 1:33–34.

Yet al-'Irāqī admits that his explanation interpolates a great deal. He cautiously states that "it is as if al-Bayhaqī saw [this requirement] in Abū Muḥammad al-Juwaynī's words and was alerting him that it is not known among transmission-based scholars."⁶³

Al-Mayyānishī's and Ibn al-Jawzī's interpretation of al-Ḥākim's work seems to be the most convincing. Considering the well-established principle of rejecting reports through majhūl narrators, it is very reasonable to conclude that al-Ḥākim considered their elimination to be an essential feature of an authentic chain of transmission. In light of al-Ḥākim's statements to al-Sijzī and the legion of ḥadīth scholars who upheld the interpretation of doubling transmission, it seems equally certain that al-Ḥākim also considered this to be part of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's requirements.

Admitted Exceptions: al-Mustadrak and the Standards of the Shaykhayn as Ideal Rather than Reality

Al-Hākim's writings leave no doubt that he was aware that many hadīths from the Ṣaḥāḥayn did not live up to his definition of their authors' criteria. Indeed, as al-Dāraquṭnī's letter proves, al-Hākim faced criticisms of his definition of their criteria during his own lifetime. He nonetheless retained total faith in his "requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim." What is evident is that al-Hākim understood these "requirements" as an ideal that the two masters strove to achieve in their work rather than a consistent reality. In the Mustadrak al-Hākim thus concedes that al-Bukhārī and Muslim did not always meet their own requirements for eliminating majhūls.⁶⁴ In his responses to Mas'ūd al-Sijzī's questions, al-Hākim admits that one of Muslim's transmitters, Fuḍayl b. Marzūq, did not meet Muslim's own standards for authenticity and that he should not have narrated from him in his Ṣaḥīḥ (fa-ība 'alā Muslim biikhrājiḥi fī al-ṣaḥīḥ).⁶⁵

⁶³ Al-Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 21.

⁶⁴ Al-Hākim, al-Mustadrak, 1:47.

⁶⁵ Al-Hākim, Su'ālāt Mas'ūd b. 'Alī al-Sijzī, 109. Scholars like al-Nawawī, Abū Hafş 'Umar al-Bulqīnī and al-Sakhāwī felt that al-Hākim exempted the Companions from the Shaykhayn's requirement for two rāwīs; see al-Nawawī, Sharh Ṣahīḥ Muslim, 1:327; 'Umar al-Bulqīnī, Maḥāsin al-istilāḥ, in Muqaddimat Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ wa maḥāsin al-istilāḥ, 296-7; al-Sakhāwī, Fath al-mughīth, 1:68.

How could al-Hākim compile an entire hadīth collection replicating al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's methodologies when he acknowledged that even these two giants could not always meet their own standards? Although al-Hākim envisioned the Ṣahīhayn's requirements as very restrictive and claimed that the contents of his Mustadrak fulfilled them, his actual application of them proved latitudinarian. As he notes in the introduction to his Mustadrak, he simply compiled the work from hadīths narrated by transmitters that appeared in one or both of the Ṣahīḥayn, or those "like" them. He adds haphazardly that Addition by a trustworthy transmitter (ziyādat al-thiqa) does not constitute a flaw (ʿilla) in ḥadīth.⁶⁶ As we discussed in Chapter Three, however, selecting reliable isnāds represented only half of the critical methodology of ḥadīth scholars; even reports narrated via such transmitters had to be examined for corroboration or irregularities such as inappropriate Addition.

Al-Hākim's vague and lax methods led many later scholars to severely criticize the authenticity of material found in the Mustadrak. The consummate Hanafi hadīth scholar Jamāl al-Dīn 'Abdallāh b. Yūsuf al-Zayla'ī (d. 762/1361) struck at the heart of al-Hākim's strategy: he had relied on the same transmitters as al-Bukhārī and Muslim, but he did not thoroughly examine his material to sift weak narrations from those enjoying corroboration. "Simply because a transmitter is used in [one of] the Sahihs," al-Zayla'i explains, "does not entail that if he is found in another hadīth, that hadīth meets al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's standards."67 Al-Dhahabī thus concluded that the Mustadrak was seriously flawed and detracted from al-Hākim's reputation.⁶⁸ According to him, only one-fourth of the work's contents actually meet the standards of the Sahīhayn, with another quarter of its hadīths being authentic but not meeting their requirements. The remaining half, he states, is of dubious reliability.⁶⁹ Along the same lines, Ibn Hajar admits that he cannot comprehend how al-Hakim could have included certain material ⁶⁶ Al-Hakim, al-Mustadrak, 1:39-40.

⁶⁷ Jamāl al-Dīn 'Abdallāh b. Yūsuf al-Zayla'ī, Naşb al-rāya li-aḥādāth al-Hidāya, ed. Muhammad 'Awāma, 5 vols. (Jeddah and Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Rayyān and Dār al-Qibla al-Thaqāfiyya al-Islāmiyya, 1418/1997), 1:342.

⁶⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:166. Al-Dhahabī states, "Would that he had not composed the Mustadrak, for his poor comportment in it detracted from his virtues (wa laytahu lam yuşannif al-Mustadrak, fa-innahu ghadda min fadā'ilihi bi-sū' taşarrufihi."

⁶⁹ Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīḥ al-anẓār, 38. Al-Bulqīnī states that approximately one hundred hadīths in the Mustadrak are forgeries (mawdū'); al-Bulqīnī, Maḥāsin al-iṣṭilāḥ, 164.

CHAPTER FIVE

in his Mustadrak. He notes how al-Hākim even used transmitters he himself considered weak and had thus consigned to his Kitāb al-du'afā' (Book of Weak Narrators). Ibn Hajar believes that al-Hākim was too skilled a scholar to make such simple mistakes, but if he knew that some material was unreliable and yet included it anyway, then "this is a tremendous betrayal (khiyāna 'azīma)." Ibn Hajar tried to excuse the great scholar on the grounds that he wrote the Mustadrak near the end of his life when senility had taken its toll.⁷⁰

Al-Hākim's Politics: the Expansion of the Authentic Umbrella

The motivation behind al-Hākim's controversial definition of the requirements of the Sahāhayn as well as the cause of his inconsistency in applying them become clear, however, when one appreciates the true purpose of the Mustadrak. He did not compose this work as a legal reference, as Abū Dāwūd had, or as an expression of the body of hadīths he had personally collected in his career, as al-Ṭabarānī had. Rather, al-Ḥākim's objective was polemical.

The unbroken thread running throughout al-Hakim's career was his concerted drive to increase the number of hadīths considered authentic in the wider Muslim community. Yet this was a matter of great controversy even among Sunni hadīth scholars. In the generation after al-Hākim, his own student al-Bayhaqī would make an unprecedented declaration that all the reliable hadīths of the Prophet had been documented, and thus any previously unrecorded attributions to Muhammad should be considered de facto forgeries.⁷¹ Already in al-Hākim's time, prominent scholars maintained that the umma had grown too distant from the Prophet to identify authentic hadīths. Al-Hākim's colleague Ibn Manda, for example, thus stated that "anyone who produces (yukharriju) sahih hadiths today is either relying on too lengthy an isnad (yanzilu) or is lying."72 On the other hand, many shared al-Hakim's vision of expanding the number of reports considered authentic. Ibn al-Akhram once admitted that he had wasted his life working on his mustakhraj of Muslim and regretted having written a joint mustakhraj of the Sahihayn ⁷⁰ Ibn Hajar, Lisān al-mīzān, 5:233.

⁷¹ Ibn al-Šalāḥ, Muqaddima, 307.

⁷² Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:158.

(Mukhtaşar al-şahīh al-muttafaq 'alayhi) because "it is our obligation (min haqqinā) to strive in increasing the sahīh hadīths."⁷³

Al-Hākim's opponents among the hadīth scholars, however, were not his principal concern. Relatively early in his career, he had asked how it was possible that some groups believed that the hadīths of the Prophet amounted to no more than ten thousand reports. The Companions, he exclaimed, numbered at least four thousand and spent over twenty years in the company of the Prophet! One hadith scholar alone had memorized over five hundred thousand hadīths.74 Such ludicrous claims limiting the number of reliable hadīths disconcerted al-Hākim terribly, and he thus urged hadith scholars to avoid circumscribing the body of authentic reports. He objected, for example, to his teacher al-Māsarjisī's research on the total number of transmitters in the Sahīhayn. A group of "heretics and deniers (mubtadi'a wa mulhida),"75 he explained, were using these statements made by transmission-based scholars against them to defame (yashtumūna) the use of hadīths.⁷⁶ Much later in his career, in his very succinct introduction to the Mustadrak, al-Hākim reiterated the same complaint. "There has emerged in our time a group from among the heretics (mubtadi'a) who defame the narrators of traditions, [saying]: the totality of your hadīths that are authentic (yasihhu) does not reach

⁷³ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:55.

⁷⁴ Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat kitāb al-Iklīl, 81–3.

⁷⁵ The term mulhida here should probably neither be understood in its true technical sense of "atheists" or "religious skeptics," nor in the later denotation of Ismā'īlīs. As Madelung has discussed, al-Ash'arī described mulhid as a term encompassing those who deny God's attributes (mu'attil), crypto-Zoroastrians (zanādiqa) as well as other bizarre heresies. In the sixth/twelfth century in Iran the term had come to denote Ismā'īlīs. The Māturīdī theologian Abū al-Mu'īn al-Nasafī (d. 508/1114) thus wrote a refutation of the sect entitled Kitāb al-ifsād li-khudā' ahl al-ilhād. Al-Shahrastānī (d. 548/1153) concurs that in this time in Khurāsān Ismā'īlīs were also called mulhids. Although even in the early fourth/tenth century there was Ismā'ilī missionary activity in Naysābūr, we should not assume that al-Hākim intended this group with his reference. He was neither a theologian nor a heresiographer, so his addition of the label mulhida to mubtadi'a probably just represents another denigration of his opponents. Considering that transmission-based scholars of Rayy felt that the Mu'tazilites of the city had joined forces with Ismā'īlī rebels in an uprising in the city in 420/1029, a hadīth scholar of al-Hākim's time may not have even distinguished between Mu'tazilites and Ismā'īlīs. See S.M. Stern, "The early Ismā'īlī missionaries in North-West Persia and in Khurāsān and Transoxania," Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 23 (1960): 56-90, esp. 76; W. Madelung, "Mulhid," El²; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:196; see also n. 84 below.

⁷⁶ Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā al-Ṣaḥīh, 112.

ten thousand, and all these [other] isnāds amount to only about one thousand fascicules (juz'), all of them weak, not authentic."⁷⁷

Although al-Hākim reverently describes the Ṣaḥīḥayn as two works "whose mention has spread far and wide (intashara dhikruhumā fī al-aqtār)," he based his mission to expand the umbrella of authentic hadīths on the premise that al-Bukhārī and Muslim had neither intended to nor succeeded in including all of the authentic reports in their works.⁷⁸ Thus, someone's exclusion from the Ṣaḥīḥayn must not be interpreted as a criticism of his reliability.⁷⁹ A wide body of ḥadīths and ḥadīth transmitters still existed outside the two books that met the standards of the Shaykhayn, and al-Ḥākim proved this through an innovative reading of Muslim's introduction to his Ṣaḥīḥ. He concluded that of the two levels of narrators upon which Muslim said he would draw in compiling his collection, the author had only exhausted the first and had died before he could include ḥadīths from the second level.⁸⁰

Al-Hākim's interpretation of al-Bukhārī's work is even more creative. Because that scholar had provided no introduction to his Sahih, al-Hākim treated al-Bukhārī's cumulative oeuvre as the key to understanding his requirements. He viewed al-Bukhārī's biographical dictionary al-Tārīkh al-kabīr as the total body of transmitters who comprised the scholar's hadīth worldview. Based on the research conducted earlier by al-Māsarjisī, he set the number of transmitters in the $T\bar{a}r\bar{k}h$ at about forty thousand. But all the reliable transmitters who narrated authentic material and appear in the Sahīhayn amount to only about two thousand. Al-Hākim then turned to al-Bukhārī's list of weak transmitters (his Kitāb al-du'afā'), which included about seven hundred names, as a list of those whom al-Bukhārī considered unacceptable. After subtracting the narrators al-Bukhārī used in the Sahīh and those he considered weak from the forty thousand transmitters included in the Tārīkh al-kabīr, al-Hākim concluded that more than thirty thousand acceptable transmitters "remain between the house and the gate." By drawing on this untapped body of reliable transmitters and also targeting subjects that

⁷⁷ Al-Hākim, al-Mustadrak, 1:39.

⁷⁸ Al-Hākim, al-Mustadrak, 1:39.

⁷⁹ Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā al-Ṣahīh, 114.

⁸⁰ Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat kitāb al-Iklīl, 78; idem, al-Madkhal ilā al-Ṣaḥīḥ, 112; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Şiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 91.

al-Bukhārī had omitted in his Ṣaḥīḥ, one could thus add to the number of traditions meeting al-Bukhārī's standards.⁸¹

Al-Hākim's Mubtadi'a and the Ten Thousand

Who were these "heretics (mubtadi 'a)" whose claim that there existed only ten thousand authentic hadīths so plagued al-Hākim throughout his career? Unfortunately, the scholar provides little description of them beyond the brief complaints found in his works. But he does offer two important clues as to their identity. First, he quotes al-Bukhārī's teacher Ahmad b. Sinān al-Qaṭṭān (d. 259/872–3) using the term mubtadi 'to indicate those who oppose hadīth and transmission-based scholars.⁸² We could infer from this that during al-Hākim's time mubtadi 'a served as a transmission-based nomenclature for the reason-based Hanafīs or Mu'tazilites who constantly criticized the ahl al-hadīth's heavy reliance on āhād reports.

Other evidence for usage of the term suggests it denoted the Mu^ctazilites more specifically. According to Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200), in 408/1017–18 the Abbasid caliph al-Qādir (d. 422/1031) publicly demanded, in the famous Qādirī creed, the repentance of the "mubtadi'a." Ibn al-Jawzī elaborates that the caliph was requiring "the Mu^ctazilite-Hanafī jurists (fuqahā') to repent" and disassociate themselves from Mu^ctazilism (al-i'tizāl), which, like Shiism (al-rafā), the caliph called "counter to Islam."⁸³ In a letter written to the caliph in 420/1029–30, the Buyid amīr Yamīn al-Dawla mentions the twin perils of "the sinful Bāținīs (al-bāținiyya al-fajara)" and "Mu^ctazilite heretics (mu^ctazilia mubtadi'a)."⁸⁴ Mubtadića thus appears to have indicated Mu^ctazilites and not Shiites in these contexts. Ibn al-Jawzī writes that in 460/1067–8 the jurists and ḥadīth scholars (al-fuqahā' wa ahl al-ḥadīth) of Baghdad congregated and demanded that the Qādirī doctrine be publicly promulgated once again, because the Mu^ctazilite teacher Abū al-Walīd

⁸¹ Al-Hākim, al-Madkhal ilā al-Ṣahīh, 112.

⁸² "There is not a mubtadi' in the world who does not hate the ahl al-hadīth, and when a man becomes a mubtadi' the sweetness of hadīth is torn from his heart"; al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 5.

⁸³ "al-mukhālifa li'l-islām..."; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:125; cf. al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 4:257–58. Al-Khatīb, who saw the caliph many times, explains that the ruler wrote treatises declaring the Mu'tazila infidels (ikfār).

⁸⁴ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:195.

was insisting on teaching his school's doctrine. One scholar stood up in the gathering and cursed the Shiites $(R\bar{a}fida)$, then another rose to separately curse the "mubtadi'a."⁸⁵

Ibn al-Jawzī was writing almost a century and a half after these events, but his Muntazam often relies on earlier histories such as $T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh$ Baghdād. The promulgation of the Qādirī creed in 408/1017–8 was a well-known event, and Ibn al-Jawzī had documentary evidence for its wording.⁸⁶ Moreover, he was a member of the ahl al-hadīth extraordinaire and was even more vehemently opposed to the ahl al-ra'y than al-Hākim had been. We may safely assume that he understood the term in approximately the same manner as al-Hākim. From this evidence, we can thus deduce that the term mubtadi'a frequently denoted the Mu'tazilites.

The second clue that al-Hākim provides for identifying these mubtadi'a is their claim that there are only ten thousand sahih hadiths. The most obvious candidate for such a group would be the Mu'tazilites, who cultivated a continuous skepticism about the flood of āhād hadīths adduced by transmission-based scholars. The Fadl al-i'tizāl (Virtue of Mu'tazilism) of the Shāfi'ī Mu'tazilite al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār of Rayy (d. 415/1025) supports this conclusion. He states that he and his Mu^ctazilite colleagues are very critical of those who employ significant numbers of hadīths in scholarly discourse.⁸⁷ Although he uses such $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths in debates with his transmission-based opponents, he does so only so they would not doubt his affection for the Prophet's sunna. In their own theology, however, Mu'tazilites limit themselves to epistemologically certain evidence (adilla qat'iyya) such as the Qur'ān.⁸⁸ Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār refers to the Mu'tazilites' discriminating standards in his rebuttal of a serious transmission-based accusation: that Mu'tazilites use too few hadīths. The only reason, he states, that the Mu'tazilites limit their use of hadīths is that āhād reports have too high a probability of being false.⁸⁹

⁸⁵ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 16:106.

⁸⁶ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:279–82. The actual wording of the creed as provided by Ibn al-Jawzī, however, does not include the term mubtadi'a.

⁸⁷ Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār b. Ahmad, Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī and al-Hākim al-Jushamī, Fadl al-itizāl wa Tabaqāt al-mu'tazila, ed. Fu'ād Sayyid (Tunis: al-Dār al-Tūnisiyya, 1393/1974), 193.

⁸⁸ Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār, Fadl al-i tizāl, 156.

⁸⁹ Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār, Fadl al-i'tizāl, 195.

Ibn al-Jawzī's Muntazam provides similar evidence for this outstanding ahl al-ḥadīth grievance with the Muʿtazilites.⁹⁰ In 456/1064 partisans of the transmission-based school physically attacked the Muʿtazilite Abū ʿAlī Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Muʿtazilī (d. 478/1085–6), whom Ibn al-Jawzī mocks as having narrated only one ḥadīth.⁹¹ Ibn al-Jawzī hurls the same accusation at the famous Shāfiʿī Muʿtazilite Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Başrī (d. 436/1044).⁹²

But why did the Mu'tazilites to whom al-Hākim refers set the number of authentic hadīths at ten thousand and not some other number? This is so because it was the number of hadīths considered to be contained in the Sahīhayn. Al-Hākim's mubtadi'a opponents told him that this was the number of sahīh hadīths "in your school (indakum)," namely the ahl al-hadīth. Al-Hākim himself stated that the top level of authentic hadīths identified with the Sahīhayn did not exceed ten thousand.⁹³ Al-Hāzimī concluded from this that the Mu'tazilites' number was based on estimations of how many hadīths the Sahīhayn contained.94 This number must indicate the number of Prophetic traditions, since Ahmad b. Salama had counted twelve thousand narrations in Muslim's Sahīh alone, and al-Hākim's teacher al-Jawzagī had placed the total number of narrations (turuq) in the Sahīhayn at 25,480.95 Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ placed the number of traditions (usul) in each of the Sahihayn at four thousand, amounting to a total of eight thousand.⁹⁶ Considering that scholars generally put the number of Prophetic traditions in al-Bukhārī's book at 3,397-4,000 and in Muslim's at between 4,000 and 8,000, the average number for the Sahīhayn combined would be approximately 9,700.97

Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī provides further evidence that the Ṣaḥīḥayn were an important tool in the Mu'tazilites' polemics against the transmission-based school. He reports that someone who "belittles the ⁹⁰ Conflict between the transmission-based school and their opponents on this matter seems to have extended back to the time of al-Bukhārī and Muslim themselves. Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ quotes someone telling Abū Zurʿa al-Rāzī, "Is it not said that the ḥadīths of the Prophet are only four thousand?" He replies, "Whoever says that, may God jar his teeth, this is the claim of the heretic crypto-Zoroastrians (zanādiqa), for who can account [all] the ḥadīths of the Messenger of God (§)...?"; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqaddima, 494.

⁹¹ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 16:247.

⁹² Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:300.

⁹³ See n. 42 above.

⁹⁴ Al-Hāzimī, Shurūț al-a'imma al-khamsa, 32.

⁹⁵ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāh, 70; al-Sakhāwī, Fath al-mughīth, 1:50.

⁹⁶ Ibn al-Ṣalāh, Siyānat Ṣahīh Muslim, 101-2.

⁹⁷ For the wide range of opinions on this, see Chapter 3, nn. 72, 124, 125.

CHAPTER FIVE

acceptance of reports" said that al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥāḥ only uses some two thousand transmitters; all the others are thus clearly unreliable for hadīth scholars. Abū Nuʿaym responds with a lengthy quotation from al-Ḥākim's Madkhal ilā al-Ṣaḥāḥ, reiterating al-Ḥākim's argument that al-Bukhārī's al-Tārīkh al-kabīr contains over thirty thousand acceptable but untapped transmitters.⁹⁸

This Mu'tazilite attack was a recurring theme in al-Hākim's career and almost certainly served as his primary motivation in composing the Mustadrak. Just as Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī had feared over a century earlier, the opponents of the Sunnis had made use of the esteemed standards set by al-Bukhārī and Muslim in order to object to reports lying outside the Sahāhayn. Indeed, al-Hākim's Mu'tazilite interlocutors condemned the thousands of hadīths not included in the two works as defective (saqīma). In order to understand how the Mustadrak embodied al-Hākim's response to this attack, we must trace the history of the Mu'tazilite treatment of Prophetic traditions until al-Hākim's time.

Al-Hākim's Target Audience: The Mu'tazilites and their Criteria for Authentic Hadīths

As Josef van Ess has demonstrated, Mu'tazilites found themselves forced to adjust the place of Prophetic traditions in their legal and doctrinal epistemologies following the Sunni victory in the Baghdad Inquisition (Mihna). When Dirār b. 'Amr (fl. 195/810) established Mu'tazilism as a cosmological system, hadith played no major role. He rejected the āhād reports adduced as evidence by his transmission-based opponents in favor of the Qur'ān and reason, and this position was taken up by Abū Bakr al-Asamm (d. 201/816) of the Basran Mu^stazilite school. Van Ess postulates that in the wake of al-Shāfi'ī's championing the use of ahad hadiths in law as well as the compilation of major hadith collections in the late second/eighth century, Mu^ctazilites found themselves forced to meet the challenges posed by the transmission-based school. Another early member of the Basran school, Abū Hudhayl (d. 200/815), thus tackled the epistemological problem of hadith with numerical requirements. With him we see Mu'tazilites beginning to limit the use of hadīths to those they considered massively transmitted beyond the scope of error (mutawātir). For a hadīth to be accepted in discussions of dogma, Abū Hudhayl required twenty separate transmitters to meet the conditions of tawātur. For legal matters, he demanded only four.⁹⁹ The Basran Mu'tazilite and polymath al-Jāḥiz (d. 255/869) also required four narrations for a report to qualify as authentic.¹⁰⁰

⁹⁸ Abū Nuʿaym al-Isbahānī, Mustakhraj, 1:52.

With the end of the Inquisition (Mihna) in 234/848, the Mu'tazilite position against the transmission-based scholars was further weakened.¹⁰¹ Ironically, it was during the classical period of Mu'tazilism from the late third/ninth century to the early fifth/eleventh that the school had to increasingly compromise with its opponents. In this period Mu'tazilites began serious studies of hadīth comparable to those of their transmission-based adversaries. Although Muhammad b. 'Imrān al-Marzubānī of Baghdad (d. 384/994) was Mu'tazilite, hadīth scholars considered him reliable as a transmitter, and he composed a book on the hadīth of the Mu'tazila.¹⁰² Abū Saʿīd Ismāʿīl b. 'Alī al-Sammān of Rayy (d. 434 or 445/1042–3 or 1053–4) was one of al-Khatīb al-Baghdādīt's hadīth teachers but was a Ḥanafī imām of the Mu'tazilites.¹⁰³ Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār was an active student and transmitter of hadīth who, in a series of dictation sessions (amālī) in Rayy and Qazvīn, transmitted twenty fascicules (*juz*²) of hadīths with his own isnāds.¹⁰⁴

In matters of law, both the Baghdad and Basran schools of Mu'tazilism dropped their requirements for authenticating legal hadīths to two narrators at each link in the isnād—the same doubling transmission required by al-Hākim. The doyen of the Basran school, Abū 'Alī al-Jubbā'ī (d. 303/915–6) explicitly demanded doubling transmission for $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths to be admitted in "legal matters (al-shar iyyāt)."¹⁰⁵ Abū al-

- ¹⁰² Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 3:353.
- ¹⁰³ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:213.
- ¹⁰⁴ Al-Rāfi'ī, al-Tadwin fi akhbār Qazwin, 3:40.

⁹⁹ Josef van Ess, "L'Autorité de la tradition prophétique dans la théologie mu'tazilite," in La Notion d'autorité au Moyen Age: Islam, Byzance, Occident, ed. George Makdisi et al. (Paris: Presses Universitaires de France, c. 1982), 216–7. For a short but comprehensive discussion of the different rationalist requirements for accepting hadīths, see Ibn Qutayba, Ta'wīl mukhtalif al-hadīth, ed. Muḥammad Zuhrī al-Najjār (Beirut: Dār al-Jīl, 1393/1973), 65–66.

¹⁰⁰ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 43.

¹⁰¹ Van Ess, "L'Autorité de la tradition," 220.

¹⁰⁵ Abū al-Husayn Muhammad b. 'Alī al-Başrī, (d. 436/1044), Kītāb al-mu'tamad fī uşūl al-fiqh, ed. Muhamed Hamidullah et al., 2 vols. (Damascus: Institut Français de Damas, 1964), 2:623; al-Juwaynī, Kītāb al-burhān, 1:607; Abū Ya'lā Ibn al-Farrā' Muhammad b. al-Husayn al-Hanbalī (d. 458/1066), al-Udda fī uşūl al-fiqh, ed. Ahmad b. 'Alī Sīr al-Mubārak, 3 vols. (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1400/1980), 3:861; Abū

CHAPTER FIVE

Qāsim al-Balkhī (d. 319/931), who lived mostly in Naysābūr and whose works gained a wide readership in the region, compromised similarly.¹⁰⁶ In his Qubūl al-akhbār, he still demanded massively transmitted hadīths (mutawātir) for theological doctrine (usūl al-kalām) and "general legal indications (al-amr al-ʿāmm)." For deriving laws (furūʿ), however, he believed that one need only provide a report transmitted by two or three people to two or three upstanding (ʿadl) people at each level of the isnād. He equates this with the requirements for testimony in court.¹⁰⁷

The Mu'tazilites' final compromise to the transmission-based Sunnis occurred during al-Hākim's lifetime. This brings us to the career of al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār of Rayy, which represented a major shift in the Mu'tazilite school. Whereas Mu'tazilites had previously associated with the hadīth-wary Hanafī madhhab, al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār retained his loyalty to the Shāfi'ī school after embracing Mu'tazilite doctrine.¹⁰⁸ As a Shāfi'ī, he was obliged to accept rulings from āhād hadīths in matters of law even if they lacked the multiple narrations required by earlier Mu'tazilites such as al-Balkhī and al-Jubbā'ī. In his al-Uṣūl al-khamsa, al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār thus states that, while discussing issues of dogma and theology (diyāna) requires massively transmitted reports (mutawātir), deriving law (furū' al-fiqh) demands only one or two narrations.¹⁰⁹

By the time al-Hākim was writing in the second half of the fourth/ tenth century, the Mu^ctazilites' standard for authentic hadīth admissible in discussions of law thus generally demanded doubling transmission. Previously, al-Hākim's teacher and author of a famous sahīh work, Ibn Hibbān, had railed against this stance.¹¹⁰ Responding to those who rejected āhād hadīths lacking doubling transmission, Ibn Hibbān exclaims, "There exists no report from the Prophet (s) narrated by two

Ishāq al-Shīrāzī, al-Tabşira fī uşūl al-fiqh, ed. Muḥammad Ḥasan Hītū (Damascus: Dār al-Fikr, 1400/1980), 312; al-Ghazālī, al-Mankhūl, 255; Ibn Ḥajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 43; idem, Nuzhat al-nazar, 23.

¹⁰⁶ Cf. Ibn al-Nadīm, The Fihrist, 425–30; al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 9:392; Ibn al-Murtaḍā, Tabaqāt al-mu'tazila, 88–9.

¹⁰⁷ Al-Balkhī, Qubūl al-akhbār, 1:17–18. For a short discussion of al-amr al-ʿāmm, see Aron Zysow, "Muʿtazilism and Māturīdism in Hanafī Legal Theory," in Studies in Islamic Legal Theory, ed. Bernard Weiss (Leiden: Brill, 2002), 252 ff.

¹⁰⁸ Richard C. Martin, Mark R. Woodward and Dwi S. Atmaja, Defenders of Reason in Islam: Mu'tazilism from Medieval School to Modern Symbol (Oxford: Oneworld, 1997) 43; cf. Ibn al-Murtadā, Tabaqāt al-mu'tazila, 112–113. Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār was not the first Shāfi'ī Mu'tazilite, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Sa'īd al-Iştakhrī (d. 404/1014) preceded him, but he was certainly the first influential one; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 11:429–30.

¹⁰⁹ Martin, Defenders of Reason in Islam, 108.

¹¹⁰ For al-Hākim's link to Ibn Hibbān, see al-Subki, Tabaqāt, 4:156.

upstanding transmitters ('adlayn), each one of them from two upstanding transmitters until it ends at the Prophet (§)!" Those who uphold such stringent requirements, he adds, "have intended to abandon all of the sunna (sunan)."¹¹¹ Al-Hāzimī says that the Mu'tazila were in fact the only group to require a certain number of transmitters for the acceptance of $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths. As al-Balkhī had stated, they based this on the requirements for court testimony.¹¹²

Al-Hākim was no doubt extremely familiar with the Mu'tazilite demands for authentic hadīths as expressed by both al-Balkhī and al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār. Not only did al-Balkhī reside in Naysābūr for many years just before al-Hākim's birth, his writings also enjoyed popularity in the city. Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār lived in Khurāsān at the same time as al-Hākim, and several of his students also lived in Naysābūr.¹¹³ We cannot know exactly where al-Hākim encountered the Mu'tazilites whose criticism he noted in his al-Madkhal ilā al-Iklīl, his al-Madkhal ilā al-Sahīh and finally his Mustadrak, but he would have had ample opportunity to do so in his native Naysābūr.

The Mustadrak as Common Measure of Authenticity

The polemical aim of al-Hākim's Mustadrak and the underlying reason for his inclusion of doubling transmission in al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's criteria now becomes clear. Al-Hākim devoted his career to increasing the number of authentic Prophetic traditions in circulation. For him the work of al-Bukhārī and Muslim provided the highest standards of critical rigor, but their two collections had by no means exhausted the pool of sahīh hadīths. The threat that worried, and motivated, al-Hākim throughout his career was the Mu'tazilite claim that only the Sahīhayn were admissible as authentic. For al-Hākim, the response to this criticism lay in the standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. By defining their criteria as requiring reports free of transmitters deemed unknown by Sunni hadīth scholars and possessing the doubling transmission that Mu'tazilites required, al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards became a measure of authenticity accepted by all. The Mustadrak constituted the fruit of al-Hākim's efforts; it applied standards he believed compelled the acceptance of Sunnis and Mu'tazilites alike to a massive new corpus of Prophetic traditions.

¹¹¹ Ibn Hibbān, Sahīh Ibn Hibbān, 1:118.

¹¹² Al-Hāzimī, Shurūt al-a'imma al-khamsa, 47.

¹¹³ Ibn al-Murtadā, Tabaqat al-mu tazila, 116-7.

In this new light, al-Ḥākim's non-sequitur remark that authentic hadīths must circulate among scholars like "testimony upon testimony" now also becomes clear. Since the Mu'tazila were a key target audience of his expansion of authentic hadīths, his definition of şaḥīḥ had to satisfy their requirements. Ibn Ḥajar alludes to this matter while discussing the doubling transmission requirement of the Mu'tazilite al-Jubbā'ī. He says, "This is what al-Ḥākim was getting at (wa ilayhi yūmi'u kalām al-Ḥākim)."¹¹⁴ Ibn Ḥajar was certainly justified in concluding that al-Ḥākim's standards somehow involved the Mu'tazila. As Ibn Ḥibbān had angrily explained, the notion of requiring doubling narration was totally alien to Sunni transmission-based scholars.

We can now better understand why al-Hākim conceived of the standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim more as an ideal than a reality, and why he adhered so fiercely to his definition of their requirements in the face of tremendous opposing evidence. For him, the two scholars' requirements embodied a kanòn of authenticity accepted by the broader community of Sunnis and Mu'tazilites. Unlike earlier hadīth collections, the purpose of the Mustadrak was not simply to record al-Hākim's personal corpus of hadīths or to compile a legal reference for transmission-based scholars. Al-Hākim's effort was political. It aimed at demonstrating that both the Ṣaḥīḥayn and material that measured up to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards met the requirements of two opposing scholarly camps. This notion of the Ṣaḥīḥayn as common ground was to prove central in the two works' canonization.

Yet how could al-Hākim have expected his audience to grasp the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as he defined them if they caused later scholars so much difficulty? Al-Hākim's extant works suggest that the answer lies in the immediacy of his intended audience. Both al-Hākim's responses to Mas'ūd al-Sijzī and his elliptical analogy between transmission and court testimony illustrate that the scholar relied more on his personal interaction with others and their familiarity with context than on detailed expositions of his theories. The introduction to the Mustadrak is thus no manifesto; in fact, it consists of slightly more than a single page of disorganized text. Only in another text does al-Hākim make his sole reference to his two treatises on the methodologies of al-Bukhārī and Muslim.¹¹⁵ But these also appear to have been ephemeral, and not a single later scholar mentions them. This explains why the Mustadrak was never treated as a polemic by later analysts. Only by reconstructing the context of al-Hākim's works and reading them against the grain could a later scholar understand his motivations and target audience. Just as he felt comfortable providing only the most tantalizing references to the dreaded "mubtadi'a" and his "standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim," so must he have assumed that the bustling scholarly circles of Naysābūr would have grasped his intent.

¹¹⁴ Ibn Hajar, Nuzhat al-nazar, 23.

The Discourse of Legal Theory: The Consensus of the Umma on Hadith

Al-Hākim pioneered the notion of the Sahāhayn as a commonly accepted measure of authenticity and a tool for extending this authority to hadīths outside the works of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. The wider acceptance of the Sahāhayn in this role, however, depended on the status that the various Muslim schools of thought were willing to grant āhād hadīths. By the late fourth/tenth and early fifth/eleventh centuries, the broader Muslim community, including transmission-based scholars, Hanafīs, Muʿtazilites and even mainstream Shiites had accepted the notion that certain Prophetic traditions had received uniform approval and were above doubt. Shortly thereafter, by the mid-fifth/eleventh century, the major legal schools in Iraq and Iran had acknowledged this class of reports and incorporated it into their epistemological systems.¹¹⁶

¹¹⁵ See Chapter 4 n. 58.

¹¹⁶ The issue of the epistemological yield of $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths and their potential uses in deriving law and dogma is long and complicated. The oldest aspect of the debate centers on whether or not $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths are admissible in deriving laws and are legally compelling. This debate raged between Mu'tazilites like Ibrāhīm Ibn 'Ulayya (d. 218/833) and transmission-based scholars like al-Shāfi'ī. Even among those who accepted that $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths were legally compelling, however, there was debate over whether or not they yield religious knowledge strong enough to elaborate dogma (i'tiqād) and/or govern worship (ta'abbud). Hanafīs, Mālikīs and transmission-based Shāfi'ī and Hanbalī scholars further disagreed over what kind of $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths could delineate or specify Qur'ānic rulings such as cutting off the hand of a thief. In addition, scholars debating the subject did not adhere to a rigid set of terminology. In other debates, scholars used the terms 'i'm al-yaqīn and 'i'm al-yaqīn to indicate certain knowledge and probable knowledge respectively. In the debate over the yield of $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths and the effect of the community's consensus, however, the term 'i'm denoted certain knowledge (i.e., equivalent to the epistemological strength of the Qur'ān in deriving law and dogma)

CHAPTER FIVE

A shared conceptual and even linguistic notion of the umma's "acceptance (al-talaqqī bi'l-qubūl)" appeared among later Mu'tazilites, Ḥanafīs, Mālikīs, Ḥanbalīs/über-Sunnis and Shāfi'īs/Ash'arīs. These agreed-upon reports formed a new middle tier: one that yielded an epistemological certainty below the almost unattainable confidence conveyed by unimpeachable mass-transmission (tawātur) but above the mere probability (zann) yielded by āḥād ḥadīths. The āḥād ḥadīths that had received the consensus of the community produced a level of certainty sufficient for such lofty and restricted tasks as abrogating the Qur'ān and elaborating dogma.¹¹⁷ This widely accepted notion of the epistemological transformation that āḥād ḥadīths could undergo when agreed upon by all would prove an essential element in the canonization of the Ṣaḥīḥayn.

a. The Hanafis

Systematic discussions of the role of hadīth in the Hanafī epistemological system seem to have originated with the writings of the early Hanafī judge 'Īsā b. Abān (d. 221/836). Later Hanafī legal theorists such as al-Jaṣṣāṣ regularly quoted his works at length. Our earliest extant works of Hanafī legal theory trace their discussions of hadīth back to Ibn Abān, who originated the tripartite distinction of reports into those massively transmitted (mutawātir), well-known (mashhūr) and āhād. Unfortunately, we must depend on later scholars such as al-Jaṣṣāṣ and Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Sarakhsī of Khurāsān (d. ca. 490/1096) for explanations of Ibn Abān's theories, we can treat their expositions as illustrations of Ḥanafī legal theory in Rayy and Khurāsān during the fourth/tenth and fifth/eleventh centuries.

Al-Sarakhsī states that Ibn Abān believed that mutawātir hadīths yielded epistemologically certain apodictic knowledge ('ilm darūrī); and zann meant probable knowledge (i.e., sufficient only for deriving substantive law). For a discussion of the epistemological yield of mutawātir, mashhār and āhād hadīths as well as the general historical development of these concepts, see Wael Hallaq, "On Inductive Corroboration, Probability and Certainty in Sunnī Legal Thought," in Islamic Law and Jurisprudence, ed. Nicholas Heer (Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1990), 3–31; idem, "The Authenticity of Prophetic Hadîth: a Pseudo-problem," Studia Islamica 89 (1999): 75–90, esp. 80–1.

¹¹⁷ Ibn Taymiyya was the first to collect a list of scholars from various schools who upheld this stance; Ibn Taymiyya, Majmū fatāwā, 13:351–2; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bā ith al-hathīth, 31; al-Bulqīnī, Mahāsin al-isțilāh, 172; Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat ʿalā kitāb Ibn al-Salāḥ, 113.

anyone who heard the report was immediately certain, without any consideration, that its contents were authentic. Mashhūr hadīths yielded epistemologically certain acquired knowledge ('ilm muktasab); only those able to properly contemplate the report's transmission would grasp its total authenticity.¹¹⁸ Āhād hadīths provided mere probability (zann), which was suitable only for elaborating law in certain circumstances. Al-Sarakhsī, who also upholds this opinion, states that mashhūr reports begin as āhād hadīths but then spread out like mutawātir hadīths. Their epistemological strength stems from the fact that the umma has accepted them $(qub\bar{u}l)$. Such hadīths include the famous Prophetic tradition allowing believers to wipe water on their socks during ablution instead of having to remove them to wipe their feet (al-mash 'alā al-khuffayn). Because mashhūr reports yield certain knowledge, Hanafīs allow their use to abrogate, modify or supplement Qur'anic rulings. Although al-Sarakhsī concedes that mashhūr reports cannot produce the same level of certainty associated with mutawātir reports, scholarly consensus on their reliability (talaqqat bi'l-qubūl) endows mashhūr reports with "assuring knowledge ('ilm al-tuma'nīniyya).¹¹⁹

Although few of his works have survived, we know from later sources that the great Mu'tazilite Hanafī master of the first half of the fourth/ tenth century, Abū al-Hasan 'Ubaydallāh al-Karkhī (d. 340/952), also elevated $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths agreed upon by the scholars to a higher level of proof. Unlike others, however, he believed that the consensus (ijmā ') of the umma, in and of itself, caused no epistemological change in the hadīth. It simply indicated the existence of some compelling proof (hujja) for the authenticity of the report, since consensus would not have occurred in the first place without such evidence.¹²⁰

Another Hanafī legal theorist of the fourth/tenth century follows Ibn Abān in his tripartite distinction. In his brief treatise on Hanafī legal theory, Abū 'Alī Ahmad b. Ishāq al-Shāshī (d. 344/955–6) defines mashhūr as a report that begins as $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ and becomes widespread in the second and third generations ('aṣr) until, finally, the umma accepts it by consensus (talaqqathu bi'l-qubūl). Mashhūr reports yield "assured knowledge ('ilm al-tuma'nīniyya)," and those who reject them are heretics

¹¹⁸ Al-Sarakhsī, Uşūl al-Sarakhsī, 1:292.

¹¹⁹ Al-Sarakhsī, Uşūl al-Sarakhsī, 1:292–3; cf. al-Jaşşāş, Uşūl, 1:548.

¹²⁰ Abū al-Husayn al-Başırī, Kitāb al-mu'tamad, 2:556. This information does not appear in al-Karkhī's short extant uşūl work. See Abū al-Hasan 'Ubaydallāh al-Karkhī, al-Uşūl allatī 'alayhā madār furū' al-ḥanafiyya (Cairo: al-Maṭba'a al-Adabiyya, [n.d.]).

(mubtadi^{\circ}). Unlike $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths, al-Shāshī states, scholars do not differ over whether or not such reports are legally compelling. As examples, he provides the hadīth of wiping over the socks as well as the hadīth enjoining stoning as a punishment for adulterers.¹²¹

We have already discussed al-Jaṣṣāṣ's opinions on $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths enjoying the consensus of the umma and on which scholars have acted in law; he admits them as compelling evidence in issues of law and dogma (umūr al-diyānāt).¹²² Al-Jaṣṣāṣ describes such reports as "widespread (mustafīda)."¹²³ His discussion of reports, in fact, devotes significant space to defending the use of $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths from groups such as the Mu'tazila who attack them.¹²⁴

A significant development seems to have occurred in the Hanafī use of the term mashhūr between the times that al-Jaṣṣāṣ was writing in the mid-fourth/tenth century and al-Sarakhsī in the second half of the fifth/eleventh. While al-Sarakhsī felt that mashhūr reports could abrogate or adjust Qur'ānic rulings, al-Jaṣṣāṣ limited that power to mutawātir hadīths.¹²⁵ Abū al-Hasan al-Karkhī also maintained that only mutawātir hadīths could abrogate the holy book. Yet it appears that this ¹²¹ Abū 'Alī Ahmad b. Muhammad Nizām al-Dīn al-Shāshī, Usūl al-Shāshī, ed. Muhammad Fayd al-Hasan al-Kankuhī (Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-Arabī, 1402/1982), 269-72. For his biography, see Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 1:262. There is significant debate over the identity of the author of this text as well as when he lived. Three editions of the work have been published, each attributed to a different Shāshī. In addition to the above-mentioned work, one is attributed to Ishāq b. Ibrāhīm Abū Ya'qūb al-Shāshī al-Khurāsānī (d. 325/937), who lived mostly in Egypt (see Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 1:364) and has been published as Usul al-Shāshī (Delhi: Kotob-khāne-ye Rashīdeyye, [1963]). Finally, the most recent edition attributes the work to another Nizām al-Dīn al-Shāshī (fl. 700s/1300s) and is published as $Us\bar{u}l$ al-Shāshī: mukhtaşar fī uşūl al-fiqh al-islāmī, ed. Muhammad Akram Nadwī and Yūsuf al-Qaradāwī (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 2000). Murteza Bedir has argued that the Usul al-Shāshī cannot have predated the work of the Hanafī legal theorist Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Muhammad al-Bazdawī of Samargand (d. 482/1089). The edition used here contains some references to figures (al-Dabūsī {d. 430/1038}, for example) who died after the fourth/tenth century, so at the very least we can be sure that additions were made to the text. The bulk of the work, however, seems to be representative of other Hanafī usūl treatises from the late fourth/tenth to mid-fifth/eleventh centuries, so there is little reason to assume the whole work dates from a later time. Suggestions that Usul al-Shāshī is a work of Shāfi'ī usul are untenable given the distinctly Hanafī contents and format of the book. See Murteza Bedir, "The Problem of Usul al-Shāshī," Islamic Studies 42, no. 3 (2003): 415-36.

¹²² See Chapter 4, nn. 171 and 173.

¹²³ Al-Jassās, Usūl, 1:548.

¹²⁴ See al-Jassās, Usūl, 1:560 and 1:568–73.

¹²⁵ Al-Jassās, Usūl, 1:449.

change involved a semantic shift in the usage of the term mashhūr rather than any revolution in Ḥanafī epistemology. All these scholars believed that the ḥadīth of wiping one's socks was sufficiently well-attested to abrogate the Qur'ān. But while Abū al-Ḥasan al-Karkhī and al-Jaṣṣāṣ had considered it mutawātir,¹²⁶ al-Shāshī and al-Sarakhsī considered it mashhūr.

b. The Later Mu'tazilites

Abū al-Ḥusayn al-Baṣrī (d. 436/1044) was a product of late Muʿtazilism. Like his teacher, al-Qādī ʿAbd al-Jabbār, he espoused Muʿtazilite theology while belonging to the Shāfiʿī school of law. His work on legal theory, the Kitāb al-muʿtamad, would become one of the most influential works in that genre and provide a framework for many later Shāfiʿī uṣūl books.¹²⁷ Abū al-Husayn's stance on the epistemological yield of āhād hadīths reflected the Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarī position embraced as orthodox among almost all Sunnis: such hadīths yield only probable knowledge (zann), but are nonetheless legally compelling (mūjib al-ʿamal).¹²⁸ The consensus of the umma, however, alters this completely. He explains, "As for the wāhid [i.e., āhād hadīth], when the umma has come to consensus as to what it entails (muqtadāhu) and deemed it authentic, then its authenticity is epistemologically certain (yuqtaʿu ʿalā ṣihhatihi)."¹²⁹

There does not appear to be any evidence that the later Mu'tazilites endowed the term mashhūr with any technical meaning. In his Fadl ali'tizāl, however, al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār does use the term to describe a "well-known" hadīth that he employs as a proof text.¹³⁰

¹²⁶ Al-Jașșāș, Ușūl, 1:467, 518.

¹²⁷ This is the opinion of the later Mu'tazilite Abū Sa'īd al-Muḥassin b. Muḥammad al-Ḥākim; Ibn al-Murtaḍā, Ṭabaqāt al-mu'tazila, 119.

¹²⁸ Abū al-Husayn al-Başırī, Kītāb al-mu'tamad, 2:570. For what became the stance of the Ash'arī orthodoxy, see al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, al-Kiţāya, 2:557; idem, Kītāb al-faqīh wa al-mutafaqqih, ed. 'Ādil b. Yūsuf al-'Azzāzī, 2 vols. (Riyadh: Dār Ibn al-Jawzī, 1417/1996), 1:278; al-Juwaynī, Sharh al-Waraqāt fī 'ilm uşūl al-fiqh (Cairo: Maktabat Muḥammad 'Alī Şubayḥ, [1965]), 12; al-Shīrāzī, al-Tabşira, 315; al-Ghazālī, al-Mankhūl, 252. For a similar Mālikī opinion, see Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī, al-Ishāra fī uşūl al-fiqh, 207–8, and Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Tamhīd, 1:2, 8. For a Hanbalī discussion of the school's stance and an explanation of the conflicting quotes of Ibn Ḥanbal on this matter, see Abū Ya'lā Ibn al-Farrā', al-'Udda, 3:861, 900. For the Ḥanafī position, see Aḥmad b. Muḥammad al-Ghaznawī, Uşūl fiqh al-Ghaznawī, ed. Muḥammad Tuʿmat al-Quḍāt (Amman: n.p., 1421/2001), 31.

¹²⁹ Abū al-Husayn al-Başrī, Kitāb al-mu'tamad, 2:555.

¹³⁰ Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār, Fadl al-i'tizāl, 195.

c. The Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī Orthodoxy

Although Abū al-Ḥasan al-Ash'arī served as the eponym and inspiration of the Ash'arī school of speculative theology, its tenets and doctrines took shape mainly through the work of three scholars who lived in the late fourth/tenth and early fifth/eleventh century: the Baghdad Mālikī Abū Bakr Muḥammad al-Bāqillānī (d. 403/1013), Abū Isḥāq Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 418/1027) and Abū Bakr Muḥammad Ibn Fūrak (d. 406/1015). The influential Buyid vizier and intellectual al-Ṣāḥib Ibn 'Abbād described these three figures colorfully thus, "Al-Bāqillānī is an engulfing sea, Ibn Fūrak a silent serpent (sall muṭriq) and al-Isfarāyīnī a burning fire."¹³¹ Here we will focus only on Ibn Fūrak and al-Isfarāyīnī, the two scholars who played salient roles in the articulation of the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī orthodoxy that would compete with the Ḥanbalī/über-Sunni orthodoxy for ascendancy in fifth/eleventh-century Baghdad.

Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī was born in 337/949 in the city of Isfarāyīn, a town nestled in the gateway to the northern mountains of Khurāsān and separated from the main road running from Bayhaq to Naysābūr by a grassy valley and a chain of hills. He studied hadīth intensively with scholars such as al-Ismā'īlī and also attended the lessons of his older contemporary Ibn Fūrak. He was sought out as a hadīth expert, and among the students to whom he transmitted hadīth were al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī and the great Shāfi'ī of Baghdad Abū al-Ṭayyib al-Ṭabarī (d. 450/1058). Al-Hākim and al-Bayhaqī in particular studied Abū Ishāq's works in depth. Among the other noteworthy figures who studied law, legal theory, hadīth and theology at Abū Ishāq's hands were the other great Shāfi'īs of the age: Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī, 'Abd al-Qāhir al-Baghdādī (d. 429/1037) as well as the famous Sufi systematizer Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd al-Karīm al-Qushayrī (d. 465/1072).¹³²

Abū Ishāq spent many years studying in Baghdad, but retired to his native Isfarāyīn to teach. He also undertook a visit to the court of Maḥmūd al-Ghaznavī in Ghazna in order to debate the Karrāmiyya.

188

¹³¹ "al-Bāqillānī baḥr mughriq wa Ibn Fūrak şall muṭriq wa al-Isfarāyīnī nār muḥriq"; 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 152; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 28:438; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 4:257.

¹³² Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:353–5; cf. Moḥammad Javād Hojjetī Kermānī, "Abū Ishāq Isfarāyīnī," Dār'erat al-ma'āref-e bozorg-e eslāmī, 5:158–9; 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 151–2; al-Subkī, al-Tabaqāt, 4:259.

Upon the request of the scholars of Naysābūr, he traveled to that city and taught at a school built there for his use. When he died, his body was carried back to Isfarāyīn for burial.¹³³

In his addendum to al-Hākim's Tarīkh Naysābūr, 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī (d. 529/1134–5) says that Abū Ishāq's works "will last until the Day of Judgment, God willing."¹³⁴ God's will was not forthcoming, however, and almost nothing of Abū Ishāq's writings has survived. Al-Nawawī (d. 676/1277) said that his books were too vast to be contained in tomes;¹³⁵ he wrote treatises on legal theory, Shāfi'ī substantive law and the art of dialectic, but it seems that he devoted a great deal of attention to attacking the Mu'tazila. He penned one work entitled al-Mukhtaşar fī al-radd 'alā ahl al-i'tizāl wa al-qadar (Abbreviated Refutation of the Mu'tazila and those Believers in Free Will) and another named al-Jāmi' al-ḥaly fī uṣūl al-dīn wa al-radd 'alā al-mulḥidīm (The Ornamented Concordance of the Principles of Dogma and a Refutation of the Nonbelievers). In addition, Abū Isḥāq engaged in several debates with the Mu'tazilite al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār.¹³⁶

Despite the fact that none of these works have survived, Abū Ishāq's scholarly opinions appear frequently in later Shāfiʿī works on legal theory, and figures like al-Shīrāzī and Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ recognized the importance of Abū Isḥāq's role in formulating the Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarī stances on issues like abrogation and consensus.¹³⁷ Later Shāfiʿī legal theorists have thus preserved Abū Isḥāq's stance on the issues of the epistemological yield of ḥadīths and the effect of consensus. From the works of Imām al-Ḥaramayn al-Juwaynī and al-Ghazālī, we know that Abū Isḥāq matched the Ḥanafī tripartite division of reports, identifying ḥadīths as mutawātir, āḥād and a middle tier called mustafīd (reminiscent of al-Jaṣṣāṣ's terminology). While mutawātir reports yielded certain apodictic knowledge (ʿilm darūrī) and āḥād ḥadīths mere probability (zann), these mustafīd reports conveyed "epistemologically certain discursive knowledge (ʿilm nazarī)." Like the ʿilm muktasab that Ḥanafīs

¹³³ Kermānī, "Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī," Dār'erat al-ma'āref-e bozorg-e eslāmī, 5:158-9.

¹³⁴ Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Šiyāq, 151-2.

¹³⁵ Al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā', 1:170.

¹³⁶ Kermānī, "Abū Ishāq Isfarāyīnī," 5:158–9; al-'Abbādī, Kitāb Ţabaqāt al-fuqahā', 104. Partial transcripts or quotations from some of these debates seem to have survived. See al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 4:261; Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Sharh al-Fiqh al-akbar, ed. Marwān Muḥammad al-Sha"ār (Beirut: Dār al-Nafā'is, 1417/1997), 123.

¹³⁷ See, for example, Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī, Sharh al-luma', ed. 'Abd al-Majīd Turkī (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1988), 1:573; al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā', 1:170.

CHAPTER FIVE

attributed to mashhūr reports, this discursive knowledge resulted from a consideration of the report's transmission. Abū Ishāq defined this middle tier as those reports on which the imāms of hadīth (a'immat al-hadīth) had reached consensus.¹³⁸

In many respects, Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī's career mirrors that of his senior colleague Abū Bakr Muhammad Ibn Fūrak, who also belonged to the Shāfi'ī school. Ibn Fūrak studied in Baghdad, spent a period in the Buyid capital of Rayy and then moved to Naysābūr to teach at a madrasa built specifically for him. There he remained until the last years of his life, when he accompanied Abū Ishāq to the Ghaznavid court to debate the Karrāmiyya sect.¹³⁹ Unlike Abū Ishāq's books, several of Ibn Fūrak's writings have survived. Like him, though, the main opponents that he addresses are the Mu'tazila. The most noteworthy is his exposition of Abū al-Hasan al-Ash'arī's school of speculative theology, entitled Mujarrad maqālāt al-Ash'arī (The Essential Positions of al-Ash'arī). In addition, he authored a condensed work on $us\bar{u}l$ entitled Kitāb al-hudūd fī al-usūl (Definitions in Legal Theory). Finally, he devoted a book to interpreting problematic hadīths in a manner that trod a middle path between Mu'tazilite rationalism and über-Sunni anthropomorphism.140

In his Mujarrad maqālāt al-Ash'arī, Ibn Fūrak employs Prophetic traditions very carefully. He admits authentic hadīths as evidence in describing God's attributes if they can convey the requisite epistemological certainty, denying that He is Hannān because "there has not been established any authentic report (khabar ṣaḥīḥ) that could dependably predicate that attribute to Him."¹⁴¹ Ibn Fūrak concedes the ambiguity in the Ash'arī stance on the ability of ḥadīths to abrogate the Qur'ān. He states that al-Ash'arī required that a report be mutawātir or have the

190

¹³⁸ Cf. al-Juwaynī, al-Burhān, 1:584; al-Ghazālī, al-Mankhūl, 244. Both al-Ghazālī and al-Juwaynī disagree with Abū Ishāq on this matter; cf. al-Juwaynī, al-Kāfiya fi al-jadal, ed. Fawqiyya Husayn Mahmūd (Cairo: Maṭbaʿat ʿIsā al-Bābī al-Halabī, 1399/1979), 55–6.

¹³⁹ W. Montgomery Watt, "Ibn Fūrak," *EI*²; M.A.S. Abdel Haleem, "Early Islamic Theological and Juristic Terminology: Kitāb al-Hudūd fī 'l-uṣūl, by Ibn Fūrak," Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 54, no. 1 (1991): 5–41.

¹⁴⁰ These works have been published as: Abū Bakr Muḥammad Ibn Fūrak, Kītāb al-hudūd fī al-usūl, ed. Mohamed al-Sulaymani (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1999); idem, Muğarrad maqālāt al-Aš^carī: exposé de la doctrine d'al-Aš^carī, ed. Daniel Gimaret (Beirut: Dar al-Machreq, 1987); idem, Bayān muškil al-aḥādīt des Ibn Fūrak, ed. Raimund Köbert (Rome: Pontificium Institutum Biblicum, 1941). Cf. Watt, "Ibn Fūrak," *EI*².

¹⁴¹ Ibn Fūrak, Muğarrad maqālāt al-Aš^carī, 57.

ruling of tawātur in order to abrogate the holy book, although he admits that in its capacity as a restriction or specification (takhṣīş) of Qur'ānic rulings, abrogation can in effect occur with $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths as well.¹⁴² In his Kitāb al-hudūd fī al-uṣūl, Ibn Fūrak bisects reports into mutawātir and $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$; the first conveys epistemologically certain apodictic knowledge ('ilm darūrī), while $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths are all those that do not meet the requirements of tawātur and thus do not yield certain knowledge.¹⁴³

Later sources, however, provide an impression of a more nuanced understanding of reports that allows for the tripartite division present in Abū Ishāq's thought. Al-Juwaynī states that Ibn Fūrak believed that reports that scholars had accepted by consensus were "of assured authenticity (maḥkūm bi-ṣidqihi)," even if these scholars did not act on their legal implications.¹⁴⁴ Ibn Ḥajar states that Ibn Fūrak believed that if an āḥād ḥadīth became "mashhūr" with well-established transmission, it could yield certain discursive knowledge (ʿilm nazarī).¹⁴⁵

d. The Hanbalī Orthodoxy: Abū Ya'lā Ibn al-Farrā'

During the late fourth/tenth and the fifth/eleventh centuries in major cities tension between the two increasingly divergent strains of the transmission-based school became more intense. In Baghdad, partisans of the conservative Hanbalīs/über-Sunnis and those of the Shāfi'ī/ Ash'arī camp competed with one another for intellectual ascendancy and state patronage. Both were and remain competing orthodoxies in Sunni Islam.

Abū Ya'lā Ibn al-Farrā' al-Ḥanbalī (d. 458/1066) of Baghdad served as the pivot for the Ḥanbalī school in the fifth/eleventh century and was the single most influential formulator of its legal theory. He wrote a commentary on the Ḥanbalī formative text, the Mukhtaṣar of al-Khiraqī, and authored the school's first significant uṣūl text, al-Udda.¹⁴⁶ Through his writings on issues such as God's attributes and the fundamentals of doctrine (uṣūl al-dīn), he proved himself an inveterate opponent of ¹⁴² Ibn Fūrak, Muğarrad maqālāt al-Aš'arī, 199.

¹⁴³ Ibn Fūrak, Kitāb al-hudūd fī al-usūl, 150.

¹⁴⁴ Al-Juwaynī, al-Burhān, 1:585.

¹⁴⁵ Ibn Hajar, Nuzhat al-nazar, 29–30.

¹⁴⁶ Ibn al-Farrā' himself notes that an ealier Hanbalī, al-Hasan b. Hāmid al-Warrāq (d. 403/1012–13), wrote a work on $us\bar{u}l$ al-fiqh, which seems not to have survived; al-Khaṭīb, $T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh$ Baghdād, 7:213 (biography of al-Hasan).

the Mu'tazila and the burgeoning Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī orthodoxy. Among his many works we thus find a rebuttal of Ash'arism (al-Radd 'alā al-Ash'ariyya).¹⁴⁷ This Ḥanbalī-Ash'arī disagreement centered on the proper interpretation of Qur'ānic verses and ḥadīths dealing with God's attributes and movement. Ibn al-Farrā' believed that true proponents of the Prophet's legacy accept the meaning of such reports at face value, while Ash'arīs deigned to interpret them figuratively.¹⁴⁸ Ironically, this enmity masked a growing rapprochement between the Ash'arīs and leading elements of the Ḥanbalī school. Ibn al-Farrā', for example, found himself forced to admit that the wording of the Qur'ān was indeed created, and by penning a work of ustal structured like those of his opponents he was in effect agreeing to join in the discourse established by the Ḥanafīs, Mu'tazilites and Shāfi'īs/Ash'arīs.¹⁴⁹

In his work on Hanbalī legal theory, al-Udda fī uṣūl al-fiqh, Ibn al-Farrā' explains that while $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths convey only probability (zann), when the umma reaches consensus (ijmā') on some piece of evidence such as a hadīth (an yatalaqqāhu bi'l-qubūl), the report then yields certain knowledge ('ilm). According to the general rules of reality ('āda), no hadīth enjoying this level of credibility could be incorrect.¹⁵⁰ In another work attempting to reconcile Ibn Hanbal's contrasting statements on issues of dogma, Ibn al-Farrā' reveals that he shares the other schools' view on the special capacity of these consensus-approved āhād hadīths. For an āhād hadīth to be considered as proof on an issue such as seeing God on the Day of Judgment, he explains, the umma must have accepted it with consensus (talaqqathu bi'l-qubūl).¹⁵¹

Ibn al-Farrā' does not acknowledge a middle tier of reports, mentioning only $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ and mutawātir. Interestingly, however, he does refer to the term mashhūr in his effort to translate the jargon used by earlier hadīth scholars such as Ibn Hanbal into terms comprehensible in the arena of legal theory. He explains that hadīth scholars employed mashhūr for "a report whose transmissions have become massively widespread (tawātara)."¹⁵² ¹⁴⁷ For a list of Ibn al-Farrā''s works, see Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Ṭabaqāt al-ḥanābila, 2:175.

¹⁴⁸ Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Tabaqāt al-ḥanābila, 2:179.

¹⁴⁹ Ibn al-Farrā', al-Masā'il al-'aqdiyya min Kītāb al-riwāyatayn wa al-wajhayn, ed. Su'ūd b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Khalaf (Riyadh: Adwā' al-Salaf, 1419/1999), 77 ff.

¹⁵⁰ Abū Ya'lā Ibn al-Farrā', al-'Udda fī usūl al-fiqh, 3:900–1.

¹⁵¹ Ibn al-Farrā', al-Masā'il al-'aqdiyya, 70.

¹⁵² Ibn al-Farrā', al-'Udda fī uşūl al-fiqh, 3:930.

e. The Mālikīs

Although Abū Bakr al-Bāqillānī and later Ash'arīs such as Abū Dharr al-Harawī belonged to the Mālikī school of law, Mālikīs were not as prominent as the Shāfi'īs in their contributions to the discourse on epistemology or legal theory. Al-Bāqillānī seems to be the exception in not mentioning any special status for $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths on which the community had agreed. Nonetheless, Ibn Hajar mentions that al-Qādī 'Abd al-Wahhāb al-Mālikī of Baghdad (d. 422/1031–2) insisted in his Kītāb al-Mulakhkhaş (which has probably not survived) that the authenticity of reports that the umma accepted with consensus was absolute.¹⁵³ For him tawātur and the consensus of the umma were the only means by which transmitted material could yield epistemological certainty.¹⁵⁴ Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī, another prominent Mālikī of the fifth/eleventh century, also stated that there are six circumstances in which $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths can yield 'ilm, one of which is when the umma has accepted the $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīth with consensus (talaqqathu bi'l-qubūl).¹⁵⁵

f. Al-Hakim and the Consensus of the Umma

Although al-Hākim attended the lessons of Ibn Fūrak, studied closely with Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī and transmitted hadīths from him, his work bears little trace of this ubiquitous agreement on the effect of consensus on the epistemological yield of hadīths. Furthermore, he does not employ the widespread terms mashhūr or mustafīd in the technical sense explored above. Perhaps the closest he comes to acknowledging the role of ijmā^c or utilizing its associated jargon is his statement that authentic reports must be "circulated with acceptance (bi'l-qubūl)" among hadīth scholars.¹⁵⁶ Such feeble evidence, however, does not establish any link between al-Hākim's methodology and that of the legal theorists of his time. Although al-Hākim associated with giants ¹⁵³ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 113.

¹⁵⁴ Abū Muhammad 'Abd al-Wahhāb b. 'Alī al-Mālikī, al-Ishrāf 'alā nukat masā'il alkhilāf, ed. al-Habīb b. Ṭāhir, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999), 1:233.

¹⁵⁵ Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān al-Bājī, Ihkām al-fusūl fi ahkām al-usūl, ed. Abdel-Magid Turki (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1407/1986), 330.

¹⁵⁶ Ål-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 77. Ål-Hākim did sometimes employ the concept of the umma coming to consensus on issues of hadīth, such as the unreliability of a certain narrator, in other works. Al-Dhahabī, who had access to al-Hākim's lost Tārīkh Naysābūr, reports that he wrote, "the umma has come to consensus that ['Abdallāh b. Muslim] al-Qutabī is a liar"; al-Dhahabī, Mīzān al-i'tidāl, 2:503.

CHAPTER FIVE

in the fields of law, legal theory and theology, he was ultimately only a hadīth scholar. He offered the standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as a kanòn of authenticity binding for hadīth scholars and Mu'tazilites alike, but it was his students and colleagues from among the ranks of the legal theorists who truly declared the two works common ground. For them the widely accepted notion that $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths that had earned the acceptance of the umma could be declared epistemologically certain would provide the key to canonizing the Sahīhayn.

A New Common Ground between the Hanbalī/Über-Sunni and the Shāfi'ī/ Ash'arī Schools

The role of the Sahāhayn as an authoritative common ground between two of the major scholarly camps of the early fifth/eleventh century expressed itself in the careers of two of al-Hākim's close associates: his teacher and colleague Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 418/1027) and his student Abū Naṣr 'Ubaydallāh b. Sa'īd al-Wā'ilī al-Sijzī (d. 444/1052). A slightly later figure, Imām al-Haramayn 'Abd al-Malik al-Juwaynī (d. 478/1085), soon reiterated this new standing for the two books. Beyond their belief in the Qur'ānic revelation and a general Sunni loyalty, a common reverence for al-Bukhārī or the Sahāhayn constituted the only firm common ground between figures whose relationships with one another were otherwise characterized by bitter enmity.

A discussion of the role of the Ṣaḥīḥayn as a common denominator in the scholarly community must begin with three landmark quotations from Abū Isḥāq, Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī and al-Juwaynī.¹⁵⁷ Al-Subkī ¹⁵⁷ Although we have no extant proof of these quotes from the books of these three scholars themselves, this should not lead us to reject their provenance. Only one of al-Wā'ilī's works has survived; none of Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī's books is extant. Furthermore, both al-Wā'ilī's and al-Juwaynī's quotes are of a decidedly oral nature, and we should not be surprised not to find the quote in the many works of al-Juwaynī that have survived. Ibn al-Ṣalāh provides an isnād back to al-Juwaynī for his quote, which suggests at least some documentation. Al-Juwaynī's contemporary, Abū al-Muẓaffar Manşūr al-Sam'ānī of Naysābūr (d. 489/1096), describes Şahīḥ al-Bukhārī with the statement, "It has been said that the authenticity from the Prophet of what is in it is absolutely certain." This proves that this claim was known during al-Juwaynī's lifetime, providing a firm terminus ante quem that is relatively close chronologically to the earliest quote, namely that of al-Isfarāyīnī. In light of these circumstances, we should not equate an absence of documentary evidence for these quotes with evidence of absence. One claim does exist for a declaration about al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works before that of al-Isfarāyīnī, but this lacks credibility: Ibn Ḥajar states elliptically that al-Jawzaqī

(d. 771/1370) cites the following statement from Abū Ishāq's lost Kitāb fī uşūl al-fiqh:

The authenticity of the reports in the Ṣahāḥayn is epistemologically certain in terms of their texts ($u,\bar{u}lih\bar{a}$ wa mutūnihā), and no disagreement can occur concerning them. If disagreement does occur, it is over the transmissions and narrators (turuq wa $ruw\bar{a}tih\bar{a}$). Anyone whose ruling disagrees with a report and does not provide some acceptable interpretation ($ta'w\bar{u}l$ $s\bar{a}'igh$) for the report, we negate his ruling, for the umma has accepted these reports with consensus.¹⁵⁸

Abū Nașr al-Wā'ilī is attributed with the following statement:

Scholars (ahl al-'ilm), the jurists among them and others, have reached consensus (ajma'a) that, if a man swears that if anything in al-Bukhārī's collection that has been reported from the Prophet (s) is not authentic and that the Prophet (s) indeed did not say it, he will divorce his wife, he would not be breaking his word and the wife would stay as she was in his custody (hibālatihi).¹⁵⁹

¹⁵⁸ Al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 4:261.

⁽d. 388/998) also declared the material in the Ṣaḥāḥayn to be absolutely authentic due to the consensus of the umma, but we have no other mention or evidence of this. The quote does not appear in al-Jawzaqī's al-Muttafaq. Furthermore, why would al-Jawzaqī's student al-Hākim never mention his teacher's statement among his accolades of the Ṣaḥāḥayn? Another figure who supposedly made this claim somewhat later was Abū Naşr 'Abd al-Raḥīm b. 'Abd al-Khāliq al-Yūsufī (d. 574/1178–9) of Mecca, about whom we know very little. See Abū al-Muzaffar Manşūr b. Muḥammad al-Samʿānī, Qawātī al-adilla fī uṣūl al-fiqh, ed. 'Abdallāh b. Ḥāfiẓ al-Ḥakamī, 5 vols. (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Tawba, 1418/1998), 2:500; Ibn Ḥajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 116; 'Abd al-Hayy b. Aḥmad Ibn al-ʿImād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 8 vols. in 4 (Beirut: al-Maktaba al-Tijārī, [1960]), 4:248.

¹⁵⁹ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqaddima, 168. Abū Naṣr's statement was echoed later by someone whom Ibn al-Imād identifies only as Ibn al-Ahdal; see Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:135 (biography of al-Bukhārī). I have found only one instance of the divorce oath trope being used to testify to the authenticity of a hadith collection other than the Sahihayn, namely the Muwatta' of Mālik. In his Tartīb al-madārik, al-Qādī 'Ivād quotes Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī as saying, "If a man swore by divorce that Mālik's hadīths that are in the Muwatta' are all authentic (sihāh), he would not be violating his oath. If he swore by the hadīths of another he would be." Although this source is late, it is entirely possible that this attribution is correct. As we shall see in the next chapter, such statements gave voice to the Mālikī desire to put the Muwatta' on par with or above the Sahīhayn; al-Qādī Iyād, Tartīb al-madārik fī taqrīb al-masālik li-ma rifat a lām madhhab Mālik, ed. Ahmad Bakir Mahmud, 5 vols. in 3 (Beirut: Dar Maktabat al-Hayāt, 1387/1967), 1:196. Yossef Rapoport notes how, in the Islamic culture of the Middle Period, the divorce oath was "the most solemn form of oath" and was frequently invoked by participants in scholary and political culture when they wanted to underscore their certainty or commitment on an issue; Yossef Rapoport, Marriage, Money and Divorce in Medieval Islamic Society (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005), 90 ff. For examples of scholars using divorce oaths in debates, see al-Khatīb,

Finally, al-Juwaynī is quoted as saying:

If a man swore that he would divorce his wife if something in the books of al-Bukhārī and Muslim that they had declared authentic were not [really] from the words of the Prophet (s), I would not oblige him to divorce her and he would not be violating his oath due to the consensus of the Muslim umma on the authenticity of the two books.¹⁶⁰

An Articulate Über-Sunni: Abū Nașr al-Wā'ilī

We are already familiar with the life and career of the great Shāfi'ī theorist, ḥadīth scholar and Ash'arī theologian Abū Isḥāq al-Isfarāyīnī, for the Shāfi'ī tradition has sufficiently recorded and honored his legacy. Conversely, the Ḥanbalī/über-Sunni Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī has never received his due from the school to which he belonged and for which he battled so fiercely. Ibn Abī Ya'lā devotes no entry to him in the Tabaqāt al-ḥanābila, although he does respectfully mention a letter Abū Naṣr wrote to Ibn al-Farrā' from Mecca praising one of the latter's books.¹⁶¹ Abū Naṣr's sole surviving work, however, leaves no doubt as to his allegiances. He was an über-Sunni who viewed Ibn Ḥanbal as the culmination of the Islamic religious tradition. After al-Shāfifi's convoluted attempts at theorizing Islamic law had left Muslims confused, Ibn Ḥanbal took what he could from al-Shāfi's work as well as that of Mālik and Abū Ḥanīfa, and restored the pure tradition of complying with the Prophet's sunna.¹⁶²

Abū Naṣr extends the budding Ash'arī school no mercy. He condemns al-Bāqillānī, Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī and Ibn Fūrak as the "imāms of misguidance (a'immat al-dalāl)" of his time. For, although they reject some opinions of the Mu'tazila, they reject more from the partisans of hadīth (ahl al-athar).¹⁶³ Abū Naṣr is unconvinced by the Ash'arī use of speculative reasoning to trump the Mu'tazila, whom he is convinced

196

Tārīkh Baghdād, 7:306; 10:333; cf. Ibn 'Adī, al-Kāmil, 1:141; al-Nawawī, Fatāwā al-imām al-Nawawī (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1402/1982), 140; Abū Zahra, Ibn Taymiyya (Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-'Arabī, [1964]), 428–430.

¹⁶⁰ Ibn al-Şalāh, Siyānat Şahīh Muslim, 86.

¹⁶¹ Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Tabaqāt al-hanābila, 2:173.

¹⁶² Abū Naşr 'Ubaydallāh b. Saʿīd al-Wā'ilī al-Sijzī, Risālat al-Sijzī ilā ahl Zabīd fī al-radd 'alā man ankara al-ḥarf wa al-ṣawt, ed. Muḥammad b. Karīm b. 'Abdallāh (Riyadh: Dār al-Rāya, 1414/1994), 215.

¹⁶³ Al-Wā²ilī, al-Radd, 223.

are a spent force. He explains that while Ash'arīs purport to debate the Mu'tazila, they are in fact with them. Indeed, "they are viler than them (akhass hāl^{an})."¹⁶⁴

Abū Naşr al-Wā'ilī was born in the Iranian province of Sijistān to a family that followed the Hanafi madhhab.165 He soon split from his father's school, however, and traveled to Khurāsān and Ghazna. In 404/1014 he undertook the pilgrimage to Mecca, then visited Baghdad, Egypt and Basra before returning to Mecca, where he remained until his death.166

Abū Naşr studied hadīth with al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, probably in Naysābūr, and clearly respected him a great deal. He seems to have viewed him as an exemplary hadīth scholar. Abū Naşr would tell a story about his teacher's encounter with the famous litterateur Badī ' al-Zamān al-Hamadhānī (d. 398/1008) upon his arrival in Naysābūr to a crowd of admirers. When al-Hamadhānī awed onlookers by memorizing a hundred lines of poetry after one hearing and then belittled the memorization of hadīths, al-Hākim decided the time had come to put this bonvivant litterateur in his place. He approached him and asked him to memorize a juz' of hadīths. When he returned a week later to test al-Hamadhānī, he could not remember the specifics of the isnāds. Al-Hākim scolded him for mocking something more difficult to memorize than poetry and told him, "Know your place (i'raf nafsak)."167

Abū Nașr seems to have produced very few works, only one of which has survived. His al-Radd 'alā man ankara al-harf wa al-sawt (Rebuttal of Those who Deny [that God's Speech Consists of] Words and Sounds), written as a letter to the people of Zabīd in Yemen, is probably a summary of his magnum opus, the Kitāb al-ibāna al-kubrā. Al-Dhahabī praises both this work and its author, whom he lauds with the unique accolade "the imām of the knowledge of the sunna (imām 'ilm al-sunna)."¹⁶⁸ He

¹⁶⁴ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd; 81, 222. He considers the last generation of Mu'tazilites to be 'Abd al-Jabbār and al-Ṣāḥib Ibn 'Abbād. ¹⁶⁵ This is the cause of Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī's outrageous inclusion in Ḥanafī biographical dictionaries, see below n. 166.

¹⁶⁶ Cf. Ibn al-Athīr, al-Lubāb fī tahdhīb al-ansāb, 3:351-2; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 16:187 (Ibn al-Jawzī errs in his death date, which he has as 469 AH); al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:654-6; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 30:95-97; al-Ṣafadī, al-Wāfī bi-al-wafāyāt, vol. 19, ed. Ridwan al-Sayyid (Beirut: Steiner Verlag, 1413/1993), 19:372-3, "Abu Naşr Sijzī," Dā'erat al-ma'āref-e bozorg-e eslāmī, 6:318–9; Ībn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 2:495.

¹⁶⁷ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:173.

¹⁶⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Ťadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:211.

CHAPTER FIVE

explains that the work dealt incisively with questions of the Qur'ān's nature and God's attributes.¹⁶⁹ The Rebuttal itself addresses numerous topics, such as the nature of the Qur'ān, God's speech, His sitting on the throne, the beatific vision, and His descending to the lowest heavens at night. The Ibāna was read during its author's lifetime, for Ibn Taymiyya tells us that when Abū Naṣr and the Ash'arī Abū Dharr al-Harawī were both in Mecca they fell into a serious argument over the nature of the Qur'ān and the Ibāna.¹⁷⁰ In addition, later scholars such as Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ cite Abū Naṣr's ḥadīth work on the narration of sons from their fathers as the definitive book in that genre.¹⁷¹

The Radd indicates that Abū Naṣr possessed a deep understanding of both Ash'arī and Mu'tazilite thought as well as the Ash'arī mission of defending Sunnism using the Mu'tazilites' rational tools. The Mu'tazila claimed that speech consists of words and sounds, which are created. Since Sunnis believed that the Qur'ān was God's speech, it must also be created. The Ash'arīs circumvented this trap by denying that God spoke in sounds; rather, His speech was figurative. His words were "meaning inhering in the essence of the Speaker (ma'nā qā'im bidhāt al-mutakallim)." Abū Naṣr rejects the Ash'arī position, stating that it was well-understood amongst Arabs that the term "speech (kalām)" denoted actual words.¹⁷² The Ash'arīs claimed that God "spoke" only in the figurative (majāzī) sense because, if He were actually to articulate words, this would be anthropomorphism (tajsīm, tashbīh).¹⁷³

Against this, Abū Naṣr defends the über-Sunnis' literalist interpretation of God speaking or moving in space. He states that his party is the true ahl al-sunna "who stand fast on what the early generations (salaf) had transmitted to them from the Messenger of God (§)" and rely on the traditions of the Companions where God and His Prophet are silent.¹⁷⁴ Reports about God speaking, ascending His throne or descending to the lowest heavens have been bequeathed to the Muslims of the present day by upstanding and trustworthy imāms like Mālik through many corroborating reports (turuq mutasāwiya).¹⁷⁵

¹⁶⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:654.

¹⁷⁰ "Abū Naşr Sijzī," Dā'erat al-ma'āref-e bozorg-e eslāmī, 6:318.

¹⁷¹ Al-Irāqī, al-Taqvīd wa al-īdāh, 273; Zakariyyā al-Anṣārī, Fath al-bāqī bi-sharh alfiyyat al-Irāqī, ed. Thanā'allāh al-Zāhidī (Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999), 562.

¹⁷² Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 81–2.

¹⁷³ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 82.

¹⁷⁴ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 99.

¹⁷⁵ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 186.

Abū Naṣr's position on the epistemological yield of $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths reveals an acute and cunning approach to dialectic. He acknowledges that most scholars believe that $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths are only compelling in law ('amal). Unlike massively transmitted reports (mutawātir), they do not yield certainty ('ilm). He replies using the Ash'arīs' own position that tawātur is not defined by a fixed number of reports, but rather by circumstances that lead to the total alleviation of doubt concerning the authenticity of the message. This could occur with one hundred narrations, four or even less depending on circumstances. Most hadīths dealing with God's attributes, he continues, have been transmitted in sufficient number to alleviate doubt and make the heart feel at ease.¹⁷⁶ He mocks the Ash'arīs' attempts to parry the Mu'tazila using rational argumentation without recourse to hadīths that are "āhād and do not yield 'ilm." How can they say that a şahīh āhād hadīth does not yield ilm but their reason does!?¹⁷⁷

Although Abū Naṣr never provides a systematic discussion of the different levels of hadīths and their epistemological yields, he employs the notions of consensus and other terminology of the legal theorists of his day. This should not surprise us, for we know that he read Ibn al-Farrā's works.¹⁷⁸ He describes one hadīth as "şahīħ mashhūr" and as having been "accepted by the umma (talaqqathu al-umma bi'l-qubūl).¹⁷⁹ In fact, in a brief listing of the different kinds of Prophetic traditions, he lists reports that enjoy the consensus of the umma as the opposites of those that scholars have abandoned and not acted on.¹⁸⁰

As Abū Naṣr's quotation about the umma's consensus on al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ indicates, he respected the work highly. On the controversial issue of God speaking audibly, he cites al-Bukhārī for his inclusion of a ḥadīth in which God calls to the believers on the Day of Judgment with a voice.¹⁸¹ On another occasion he describes a ḥadīth as "occur

¹⁸⁰ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 206.

¹⁸¹ "istashhada bihi al-Bukhārī fī kitābihi al-Şahīh"; al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 164. Hadīth: yahshuru Allah al-nās yawm al-qiyāma.... For a discussion of this Prophetic tradition, see Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 13:555–561; Şahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-tawhīd, bāb 32.

¹⁷⁶ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 187.

¹⁷⁷ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd; 81, 101.

¹⁷⁸ See n. 161 above.

¹⁷⁹ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 151. This hadīth, "Inna Allah tajāwaza li-ummatī mā haddathat bihi anfusuhā mā lam tatakallam aw ta'mal bihi," appears in Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ. See Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim: kitāb al-īmān, bāb 58.

ring in the Ṣaḥīḥ ($j\bar{a}$ 'a fī al-Ṣaḥīḥ)."¹⁸² His work makes no specific mention of Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ. When urging Muslims to resort to the ḥadīth collections of those who have stood out as experts on Islam and the Prophet's legacy, he names as examples the Sunans of Abū Dāwūd, Ibn al-Athram, 'Uthmān b. Saʿīd al-Dārimī (d. 280/894) and Ḥarb b. Ismāʿīl al-Sīrjānī (d. 280/893–4).¹⁸³ Given his esteem for al-Bukhārī's collection, it seems odd that he does not include his Ṣaḥīḥ in this list. But Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī was first and foremost a loyal Ḥanbalī, and the four collections that he mentions are all the works of Ibn Ḥanbal's close associates.

Imām al-Haramayn al-Juwaynī: A Consummate Shāfi'ī and Ash'arī

Born in 419/1028 in the constellation of villages called Jovayn astride the winding road from Bayhaq to Isfarāyīn in the hills near Naysābūr, 'Abd al-Mālik b. 'Abdallāh al-Juwaynī studied Shāfi'ī law and Ash'arī theology in Naysābūr until the new Seljuq administrator of the city declared that "[Abū al-Ḥasan] al-Ash'arī is guilty of innovation in religion (mubtadi') worse than the Mu'tazilites."¹⁸⁴ Al-Juwaynī thus fled to Baghdad and then to the Hijāz in 450/1058. He became one of the most sought-after masters of his school, teaching in Mecca and Medina and earning the honorary title "imām of the two Sanctuaries (al-ḥaramayn)." When the great administrator Niẓām al-Mulk came to power, al-Juwaynī became one of his favorites. The vizier invited the scholar to return to Naysābūr and teach at his state-sponsored college, the Niẓāmiyya. He remained in the city until his death in 478/1085.¹⁸⁵

Al-Juwaynī produced extremely important works in the fields of legal theory, Shāfi'ī substantive law and Ash'arī theology. His Waraqāt

¹⁸² Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 174. This hadīth, "Yahmilu al-samāwāt 'alā aşba' wa al-ardayn 'alā aşba'..." appears in the Şahīhayn; Şahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-tawhīd, bāb qawl Allāh limā khalaqtu bi-yadī; Şahīh Muslim: kitāb şifāt al-munāfiqīn, bāb şifat al-qiyāma wa al-janna wa al-nār.

¹⁸³ Al-Wā'ilī, al-Radd, 223.

¹⁸⁴ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:340; see also, Bulliet, "The Political-Religious History of Nishapur in the Eleventh Century," 82 ff.

¹⁸⁵ 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 508; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 18:468–77; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 5:171–88; al-Ṣafadī, al-Wāfī bi-al-wafāyāt, 19:171–5; C. Brockelmann and L. Gardet, "al-Djuwaynī," EI²; Hallaq, "Caliphs, Jurists and the Saljuqs in the Political Thought of Juwayni," Muslim World 74, no 1 (1984): 27–8.

(Pages) and his Kitāb al-burhān (Book of Demonstration) have remained two standard texts for teaching the principles of jurisprudence in the Shāfi'ī school. In addition, his massive twenty-volume fiqh work entitled Nihāyat al-matlab fī dirāyat al-madhhab (The End of the Question for Knowing the Path) served as the formative text around which all later legal references in the Shāfi'ī school would revolve.¹⁸⁶ Al-Juwaynī also composed a seminal work on Ash'arī theology entitled al-Shāmil (The Comprehensive Book) as well as another book rebutting the Mu'tazilite school.

The study of hadīth was certainly al-Juwaynī's weakest field. He did receive an ijāza from Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī (although as a child) and was very familiar with the Sunan of al-Dāraquṭnī, which he employed as a source of legal hadīths and narrator criticism (jarh wa ta'dīl).¹⁸⁷ We also know that he received a copy of Muslim's Sahīh from Abū 'Abdallāh al-Ḥusayn b. 'Alī al-Ṭabarī (d. 499/1105–6).¹⁸⁸ Al-Dhahabī, however, questioned his mastery of the şaḥīh collections. He points out that in the Kītāb al-burhān al-Juwaynī describes the hadīth in which the Prophet approves of Mu'ādh b. Jabal's decision to use his own reasoning in the absence of any Qur'ānic or Prophetic injunctions as "recorded in the ṣahīḥs, with its authenticity agreed upon (mudawwan fī al-ṣiḥāḥ muttafaq 'alā ṣiḥḥatihi)." Al-Bukhārī and al-Tirmidhī, however, expressly reject this ḥadīth as unreliable.¹⁸⁹

The Sahīhayn Canon: The Authority of Convention and Common Ground

The above three quotations of al-Isfarāyīnī, Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī and al-Juwaynī provide the first historical evidence that the Sahīhayn

¹⁸⁶ Al-Şafadī, al-Wāfi bi-al-wafāyāt, 19:173; 'Alī Jum'a, al-Imām al-Shāfi ī wa madrasatuhu al-fiqhiyya (Cairo: Dār al-Risāla, 1425/2004), 80–82.

¹⁸⁷ Al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 5:171, 182.

¹⁸⁸ Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 305.

¹⁸⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 18:471–2; al-Ṣafadī, al-Wāfī bi-al-wafāyāt, 19:173; al-Juwaynī, Burhān, 2:882. Al-Subkī contests his teacher al-Dhahabī's condemnation of Juwaynī's ḥadīth skills, saying that the ḥadīth, in which Mu'ādh b. Jabal tells the Prophet what steps he would take in deciding the correct course of action while traveling to Yemen (i.e., consulting the Qur'ān, the Prophet's precedent, then his own reason), is in al-Tirmidhī's collection; al-Subkī, Țabaqāt, 5:187–8. This is immaterial, however, since al-Juwaynī had claimed that the authenticity of the ḥadīth was agreed upon by all—a statement that al-Bukhārī's dismissal undermines. Al-Bukhārī considered the ḥadīth to be weak because one of the narrators, al-Ḥārith b. 'Amr al-Thaqafī, was majhūl; Ibn Ḥajar, Tahdhīb al-tahdnīb, 2:139–40. In addition, al-Tirmidhī criticizes the report for lacking a continuous isnād; Jāmi' al-Tirmidhī: kitāb al-aḥkām, bāb mā jā'a fī al-qādī kayfa yaqdī.

functioned as texts authorized by a certain community. In these three cases, representatives from the two opposing strains of the transmission-based school affirm a common source for discussing the authentic legacy of the Prophet. For one Hanbalī/über-Sunni and two Shāfi'ī/Ash'arīs, the works of al-Bukhārī and Muslim had authenticated a common tract of the Prophetic past. This agreement authorized the Ṣaḥāḥayn by demonstrating that the three scholars all acknowledged a common body of proof texts that had been guaranteed by a mutually recognized scholarly consensus.

We must note that the quotations of al-Wā'ilī and al-Juwaynī do not directly identify the authority of the Sahīhavn as that of legal compulsion. Rather, they focus on the two works' total authenticity and the authority that this created for the books as a convention within a community of discourse. These two statements took place in a context that was uniquely interactive. The formula of swearing to divorce one's wife in order to prove the truth of a statement was a trope among scholars in the classical Islamic world.¹⁹⁰ It was a rhetorical statement made in a dialectical context. Al-Juwaynī's and Abū Nașr's statements were responses to stimuli designed to test the conventions to which they subscribed. They made these statements because some questioner or adversary had elicited them. Perhaps someone had probed the two scholars for their opinion on the Sahīhayn or questioned the authenticity of al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's collections. Their responses showed that the scholars acknowledged a common convention to which both were accountable. They recognized a new canon regarding sources for the Prophet's sunna.

This role of drawing inclusive lines for a community that certainly encompassed the Hanbalī/über-Sunnis and the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arīs but also may have included other groups such as the declining Mu'tazilites was unique to the Ṣaḥīḥayn. Al-Isfarāyīnī, who penned polemical works against the Mu'tazilites, felt he could claim the Ṣaḥīḥayn as an authoritative common ground in his work on legal theory. Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī, who denigrated Abū Isḥāq al-Isfarāyīnī as one of the most destructive religious forces of his time, nonetheless seconds his evaluation of Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī's reliability. Years later, al-Juwaynī echoed Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī's evaluation, including Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ as well. What is truly shocking is that al-Juwaynī detested Abū Naṣr both personally and ideologically.

¹⁹⁰ Rapoport, Marriage, Money and Divorce in Medieval Islamic Society, 90 ff.

Once while strolling through the book market in Mecca, he found al-Wā'ilī's book Mukhtaṣar al-bayān (probably an abbreviation of his Ibāna). In a lost refutation entitled Naqq kitāb al-Sijzī (Refutation of al-Sijzī's Book), he describes the work as dealing with the nature of the Qur'ān and "saying that Ash'arīs are unbelievers (kuffār)." Al-Juwaynī states, "I have never seen an ignoramus (jāhil^m) more daring in calling people unbelievers and hastier in judging the imāms..."¹⁹¹ Considering that Abū Naṣr and al-Juwaynī viewed each others' positions as anathema on issues ranging from ritual law to the nature of the Qur'ān and God's attributes, the Ṣaḥāḥayn (or, for Abū Naṣr, Ṣaḥāḥ al-Bukhārī) were one of the few articles on which they actually agreed.

Bridging the chasm between these two strains of transmission-based scholars was not merely a personal matter. In the fifth/eleventh century, Baghdad was plagued by internecine violence between the Hanbalī/ über-Sunnis and the Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarīs. Throughout 469/1076–7 and 470/1077–8, for example, debates between Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī and his Hanbalī opponents spilled into the streets, where mobs supporting the two groups ruthlessly hurled bricks at one another.¹⁹² Only state intervention could end the quarrel. On the level of doctrine and public religious symbolism, the Ṣahīħayn could thus serve as one of the few threads joining these two parties, the canon that bound both together as one community.

The notion of consensus ($ijm\bar{a}$ or $talaqq\bar{a}$ al-umma $bi'l-qub\bar{u}l$) provided the key to authorizing these two works within the expanded boundaries of a widened Sunni Islam. As we have seen, the augmenting effect of communal consensus on $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths proved a common discourse among the Ḥanafī, Mālikī, Mu'tazilite, Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī and Ḥanbalī schools in the first half of the fifth/eleventh century. It was to this epistemological authority that Abū Ishāq, Abū Naṣr and al-Juwaynī turned in order to empower the new ḥadīth canon.

Clearly, however, the entire Muslim world did not consider the two works totally authentic. Imāmī Shiites, for example, would never have subscribed to this opinion. How, then, should we understand these claims of consensus? Ijmā^c is fundamentally self-centered, invoked and defined by scholars attempting to make their beliefs normative by ascribing them to a wider community. This 'community' rarely actually applies to the entire Muslim world. Rather, it encompasses those Muslims who uphold correct belief or practice as imagined by the scholar invoking $ijm\bar{a}^c$ in that moment. As al-Juwaynī states, $ijm\bar{a}^c$ does not include those Muslim heretics (mubtadi'a) whom "we have declared unbelievers."¹⁹³ A claim of $ijm\bar{a}^c$ is thus always 'accurate' from the point of view of the scholar invoking it, since anyone who disagrees with it is, according to the claimant, not truly part of the Muslim community at that moment. Claims of $ijm\bar{a}^c$ are thus inherently subjective, and their efficacy in a debate thus depends entirely on the opponents' willingness to consider themselves beholden to the same "we," the same community, and the same terms invoked by the claimant.

¹⁹¹ Taqī al-Dīn 'Alī b. 'Abd al-Kāfī al-Subkī (d. 756/1356), al-Sayī al-saqīl fī al-radd 'alā ibn al-Zafīl, ed. Muḥammad Zāhid al-Kawtharī and 'Abd al-Ḥafīẓ Sa'd 'Aṭiyya ([Cairo]: Maṭba'at al-Sa'āda, 1356/1937), 19–20.

¹⁹² Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 16:171–2.

In essence, then, $ijm\bar{a}$ is prescriptive and not a description of reality.¹⁹⁴ Someone who invokes the authority of consensus is attempting to force another to heed evidence he considers universally compelling. In this sense, the actual boundaries of the umma mentioned by Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī, Abū Naşr al-Wā'ilī and al-Juwaynī prove immaterial. In reality, asserting the authenticity of the hadīths in the Sahīhayn could convince only those willing to accept the premises of mainstream Sunni hadīth criticism as it existed in the fifth/eleventh century. This claim of consensus would not even have convinced a great Sunni muhaddith like al-Dāragutnī, whose standards for Addition had proven more stringent than al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's.¹⁹⁵ On the rhetorical plane, however, invoking the authority of consensus on the Sahīhayn could prove compelling provided one's opponent also upheld the status of the two books. Claims made about $ijm\bar{a}$ on the Sahīhavn thus depended on an opponent's commitment to imagining the same authoritative station for the two books and acknowledging the same conventions of argument.

¹⁹³ Al-Juwaynī's requirements for inclusion in $ijm\bar{a}$ are vague and highly subjective, generally restricting it to qualified jurists and legal theorists ($us\bar{u}l\bar{n}$). He states that the opinions of vaguely named "heretics (mubtadi'a)" may be considered depending on the circumstances; al-Juwaynī, al-Burhān, 2:684–5, 689.

¹⁹⁴ This follows Snouck Hurgronje, Goldziher and Makdisi. See Makdisi, "Hanbalite Islam," in Studies on Islam, ed. and trans. Merlin L. Swartz (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1981), 253.

¹⁹⁵ Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon," 31-34.

CANON AND COMMUNITY

Conclusion: Why the Sahīhayn Now?

As the long fourth century came to a close around 450/1058, a cadre of hadīth scholars and legal theorists from the transmission-based schools had put forth al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections as texts wielding the authority of a common convention. Yet the Şahīhayn were not necessarily the most widely used hadīth collections. Mālikīs could rely on the Muwațța', Hanbalīs on the Musnad. Even Abū Naşr al-Wā'ilī clearly favored Abū Dāwūd's collection; al-Juwaynī relied more on al-Dāraquţnī's Sunan in his everyday work. Moreover, when Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī made his proclamation about the Ṣahīhayn many decades had passed since ḥadīth scholars such as Ibn al-Sakan and jurists like al-Khaţtābī had articulated the possibility and need for ḥadīth works that could act as loci of consensus. Why canonize the Ṣahīḥayn, and why now?

It was al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī who provided the necessary catalyst for the transformation of al-Bukhārī and Muslim into kanòns of authenticity. He served as a magnet for studies of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, inheriting two works the contents of which had been thoroughly studied and whose transmitters had been painstakingly identified. No other ḥadīth collections had received the ceaseless attention devoted to the Ṣaḥīḥayn and their authors' methods, and no other works had consistently earned the admiration of the community of ḥadīth scholars. Most importantly, no other collections could conceivably bear the claims that al-Ḥākim made about their authors' methods and the status of their transmitters.

The genre of ilzāmāt had been established by al-Dāraquţnī, but al-Ḥākim transformed it from an obscure and personal activity into a polemical tool. The mission of expanding the number of authentic hadīths in circulation motivated al-Ḥākim throughout his career, and the concept of the "requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim" furnished the vehicle for doing so. He identified the methodologies that the two scholars employed in compiling their works with the highest level of critical stringency. Apparently conscious that he was acting more on ideals than reality, al-Ḥākim defined their standards in a manner that met the requirements of both Sunni hadīth scholars and the Muʿtazilites whose attacks on the transmission-based school had irked him throughout his career. In his Mustadrak, al-Ḥākim presented the standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as a kanòn of authenticity that could endow a vast new body of hadīths with the reliability of the Ṣahīḥayn. Al-Ḥākim's work became very influential very quickly, attracting commentary and spreading as far as Andalusia during the author's lifetime.

Al-Hākim, like most of the Sahīhayn Network, worked within the realm of hadīth collection and criticism, but his colleague Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī and his student Abū Naşr al-Wā'ilī participated in the wider discourse of epistemology, law and legal theory. Indeed, the broader Muslim community had earlier imagined the authority with which imā' could endow hadīths, and hadīth scholars had begun conceiving of the hadith collection as a possible locus of communal consensus. It was only during the late fourth/tenth and early fifth/eleventh centuries, however, that legal discourse among a wide variety of schools had collectively articulated that the $ijm\bar{a}$ of the umma could raise $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths from yielding mere probability to total certainty. Abū Ishāg and Abū Nasr al-Wā'ilī combined these notions of the hadīth collection as a common ground and the authority endowed by $ijm\bar{a}$ in their proclamation of the absolute authenticity of al-Bukhārī's and/or Muslim's Sahīhs. Al-Juwaynī seconded this declaration, proving that the Sahīhayn could bridge the serious enmity between the Hanbalī/über-Sunni and Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī camps.

These developments endowed the Sahīhayn with a new potential authority within the body of transmission-based scholars. They had been acknowledged as a common ground and a convention recognized by both the Hanbalī/über-Sunni and the Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarī schools. Moreover, both al-Hākim and the scholars who declared the community's authoritative consensus on the two books envisioned a canon that reached beyond the boundaries of the transmission-based schools. With the end of the long fourth century we thus find that members of the transmission-based schools had authorized two texts that both defined an existing convention for discussing the Prophet's legacy and carried the potential to extend that convention to a wider community. What would come of this potential beyond the three figures of Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī, al-Wā'ilī and al-Juwaynī? Only by meeting widespread needs within the scholarly community could the Sahīḥayn canon take root. PART TWO

CHAPTER SIX

THE CANON AND THE NEEDS OF THE COMMUNITY: THE SAHIHAYN AS MEASURE OF AUTHENTICITY, AUTHORITATIVE REFERENCE AND EXEMPLUM

Introduction

At some moment around the dawn of the fifth/eleventh century, the Sahāhayn emerged as authoritative representations of the Prophet's sunna among the transmission-based Shāfi'ī and Ḥanbalī schools. Beyond that theoretical singularity when a book becomes more than the sum of its pages, however, canonization involves forces greater than the career of one remarkable individual, like al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī, or the iso-lated declarations of a few, like Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī or Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī. It represents the choice of a community to transform texts into authoritative institutions, to endow them with authority because doing so allows them to meet certain needs or perform certain essential functions.

The authorization of the Sahīhayn indeed met three important needs in the Sunni scholarly community of the mid-fifth/eleventh century. First, the canon provided a common measure of authenticity for scholars from different legal schools engaged in debate, exposition of their doctrines or efforts to bolster the hadīths they employed as proof texts. Spreading out from al-Hākim's students and prominent members of the Sahīhayn Network to leading scholars among the Shāfi'ī, Hanbalī and Mālikī schools in Iraq and Iran, the two works became an authoritative convention for evaluating attributions of the Prophet's interpretive authority. This canon would become indispensable for scholars, for citing a hadith as being included in one or both of the Sahīhavn endowed it with an authenticity guaranteed by the umma's consensus. By the mid-eighth/fourteenth century, even the hadīthwary Hanafi school found it essential to acknowledge this convention. Second, in a time when jurisprudence was growing increasingly distant from the specialization of hadīth criticism, the institution of the canon also began playing an important role as an authoritative reference for jurists who lacked the expertise necessary to independently evaluate hadīths. Finally, the Ṣahīhayn canon was not simply a conventional tool for authorizing Prophetic reports. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim also became the exemplum that could shape the science of hadīth collection and criticism itself. Therefore, as institutions such as the madrasa formed, schools of law solidified and the field of legal theory fully matured, the Ṣahīhayn emerged as powerful institutions for jurists searching for conventions of debate or authoritative references, as well as for hadīth scholars struggling to systematize the study of the Prophet's word.

CHAPTER SIX

The nature of the authority that the Sahāhayn canon wielded, however, was far from absolute. The power of the canon was bound intimately to the interactive functions it fulfilled. It was an illusion conjured up as convention in the dialogic space of debate and exposition. Within the closed circles of legal or theological schools, however, scholars had no compunction about rejecting al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's hadīths.

1. The Need for a Common Measure of Authenticity: The Ṣaḥīḥayn in Scholarly Debate

Traditions of the Prophet were prima facie compelling for Muslim scholars. Certainly among their own colleagues, the jurists of a particular legal school felt no pressure to provide rigorous chains of transmission for hadīths used in elaborating their common body of law. In such circumstances, it was not necessary to go beyond simple attributions of Prophetic authority. The issue of a hadīth's authenticity arose only when opinions clashed, when competing parties challenged the reliability of one another's evidence.

The Baghdad Shāfi'ī Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī (d. 476/1083) emphasized this need for a common measure of authenticity in his manual on juridical debate, the Kītāb al-ma'ūna fī al-jadal. Engaging his Ḥanafī counterparts proved an alluring interest for al-Shīrāzī, and he authored two other works on issues of disagreement between the two schools.¹ In the Kītāb al-ma'ūna, al-Shīrāzī addresses the possibility of a situation in which a Shāfi'ī scholar faces demands to produce an isnād for a hadīth he has adduced as evidence. If an opponent demands that one provide a chain of transmission, one should simply refer him to "a relied-upon book (kitāb mu'tamad)." The difficulty in providing or rebutting evidence only arises when one's own hadīth is not found in "the sunan."²

210

¹ Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī, Kitāb al-ma'ūna fī al-jadal, ed. 'Abd al-Majīd Turkī (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1408/1988), 55 (editor's introduction). These two works are al-Nukat fī al-masā'il al-mukhtalaf fīhā bayn al-imāmayn Abī Hanīfa wa al-Shāfi'ī and Tadhkirat al-mas'ūlīn fī al-khilāf bayn al-Hanafī wa al-Shāfi'ī.

It was this need for a common measure of authenticity in the context of debate or exposition that the Sahāhayn canon so effectively fulfilled. Indeed, al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works had acquired a powerful air of legal compulsion by al-Shīrāzī's time. As Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī had declared, to rule against a hadīth found in the Sahāhayn without some convincing excuse was to oppose the consensus of the Muslim community. Writing some sixty years after al-Isfarāyīnī's death, al-Ghazālī emphasized how widespread the notion that the contents of the two books were legally compelling had become. In his al-Mankhūl min ta'līqāt al-uṣūl, a work on legal theory directed against Ḥanafī opponents of the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī school, al-Ghazālī states casually:

We know that if a mufti, if a question proves too difficult for him and he looks through one of the Sahihayn, comes across a hadith that addresses his aim, it is not permitted for him to turn away from it, and he is obligated to rely on it (al-tawil). He who permits [turning away from the hadith] has broken with the consensus [of the umma] (kharaqa al-ijmā^c).³

That al-Ghazālī does not feel obliged to prove this claim, but rather employs it axiomatically to argue a separate point, illustrates how compelling an institution the Sahīhayn had become by the late fifth/ eleventh century. It was thus in debates or polemical writings that the Sahīhayn canon functioned most clearly as a vehicle by which a scholar could wield the authoritative consensus of the community against his opponent.

Takhrīj: Applying the Measure of Authenticity

The Saḥāḥayn canon thus found its most salient application in the takhrīj of ḥadīths, or citing the various collections in which a report appears. In theory, a scholar seeking to provide such validating references for his ḥadīths could cite any ḥadīth collection he wished. The attempt to prove the reliability of a report, however, hinged inevitably on the quality of the collections to which he referred. For this reason, takhrij generally involved the products of the sahih movement, especially the Six Books and later the Sahihs of Ibn Khuzayma, Ibn Hibbān and the Mustadrak of al-Hākim. As we shall see, referring to the Sahihayn canon differed qualitatively from citing these other respected collections. Not only did al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works alone enjoy the claim of the community's consensus on the authenticity of their contents, they also better accorded with the rules of Sunni hadīth criticism as they coalesced in the mid-fifth/eleventh century and beyond.

² Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī, Kitāb al-ma'ūna fī al-jadal, 160.

³ Al-Ghazālī, al-Mankhūl, 269. For the importance of consensus in the formation and maintenance of orthodoxy in Islam, and the equation of breaking it with disobeying the Prophet, see Devin Stewart, Islamic Legal Orthodoxy (Salt Lake City: University of Utah Press, 1998), 48–53.

CHAPTER SIX

Takhrīj using al-Bukhārī and Muslim, however, did not merely serve as a stamp of approval for the relatively limited quantity of material featured in their collections. Taking advantage of the differing narrations or multiform permutations of a single Prophetic tradition, scholars like the Shāfiʿī Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī (d. 458/1066) were able to extend the measure of authenticity to material that differed significantly from the actual contents of the Ṣahīḥayn. Later scholars such as al-ʿIrāqī, Ibn Ḥajar and al-Sakhāwī thus took al-Bayhaqī and others to task for telling their readers that a ḥadīth appears in the Ṣahīḥayn when in fact al-Bukhārī or Muslim included only the basic isnād (aṣl al-isnād) or general text of the report.⁴

More importantly, the critical standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, however a scholar might choose to define them, continued as a stamp of legitimacy that could extend the consensus on the Ṣaḥāḥayn to new bodies of ḥadīth. In his treatise on Sufism, entitled Ṣafiwat al-taṣawwuf (The Essence of Sufism), Muḥammad b. Ṭāhir al-Maqdisī (d. 507/1113) proudly states that he will not use any poorly attested (gharīb) ḥadīths in arguments against opponents. Rather, he will rely only on those found in the Ṣaḥāḥayn, which "the umma of Muslims has accepted with consensus, as well as that which meets [al-Bukhārī's and Muslim]'s requirements (sharṭihimā) but that they did not include."⁵ Here the dual power of the Ṣaḥāḥayn canon is clear in the authority of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's texts themselves and in their capacity as a kanòn by which their authority could be extended to outside ḥadīths.

⁴ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāh; 81; al-Sakhāwī, Fath al-mughīth, 1:60-1.

⁵ Al-Maqdisī, Ṣafwat al-taṣawwuf, ed. Ghādah al-Muqaddam 'Adrah (Beirut: Dār al-Muntakhab al-'Arabī, 1995), 133.

To the present day, the "requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim" have retained this function as a vehicle in which the authorizing consensus of the community can be deposited for later application. In the perennial debate over seeking the intercession of dead saints (tawassul), the modern scholar Yūsuf Hāshim al-Rifāʿī defends this practice against detractors by invoking a ḥadīth in which the caliph 'Uthmān tells a man seeking aid to call upon the late Prophet for assistance in gaining God's favor. Al-Rifāʿī avers that this ḥadīth meets the criteria of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, "so there remains nothing one could criticize or denounce in the authenticity of the ḥadīth."⁶

The array of sources that could be invoked in takhrīj led hadīth scholars to contemplate a system of ranking the various respected hadīth collections. As we have seen above, al-Hākim had pioneered this by associating the Sahīhayn and their requirements with the highest level of authentic hadīths. In his Shurīt al-a'imma al-khamsa, al-Hāzimī (d. 584/1188–9) uses the students of the early hadīth transmitter al-Zuhrī (d. 124/743) as a template for ranking the critical stringency of al-Bukhārī, Muslim, Abū Dāwūd, al-Tirmidhī and al-Nasā'ī. Al-Bukhārī drew only from the top level, which consisted of scholars like Mālik, while Muslim also relied on the second tier. Abū Dāwūd and al-Nasā'ī resorted to the third level, while al-Tirmidhī plumbed the depths of the fourth.⁷

Since debate often pitted al-Bukhārī and Muslim or one of these two scholars' critical requirements against one another, there gradually developed a more detailed ranking strictly for the Ṣaḥīḥayn. Al-Mayyānishī (d. 583/1187) concluded that the highest level of reliability belongs to ḥadīths on which both al-Bukhārī and Muslim agreed. The second level consists of reports that only one of them included. The third level features reports that meet their requirements but do not appear in the Ṣaḥīḥayn, and the lowest level consists of ḥadīths that fail to meet those conditions but nonetheless possess good isnāds.⁸ Ibn al-Jawzī followed al-Mayyānishī, adding several lower levels of ḥadīths such as forged reports.⁹ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ developed the final form of this ranking system, which consisted of ḥadīths:

⁶ Yūsuf al-Sayyid Hāshim al-Rifā'ī, Adillat ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a (Cairo: Maţba'at al-Sa'āda, 1405/1985), 96.

⁷ Al-Hāzimī, Shurūt al-a'imma al-khamsa, 43-4.

⁸ Al-Mayyānishī, 262-3.

⁹ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Mawdūʿāt, 1:32-5.

- 1) Agreed on by al-Bukhārī and Muslim
- 2) Only included in al-Bukhārī
- 3) Only included in Muslim
- 4) Meeting the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim
- 5) Meeting only the requirements of al-Bukhārī
- 6) Meeting only the requirements of Muslim
- 7) Hadīths that are *sahī*h but do not meet al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's requirements¹⁰

These rankings were not simply exercises in empty contemplation. If we understand these evaluations as judgments about the functional value of hadīth collections, we must appreciate that they arose as responses to pressing questions within the scholarly community. As Monroe Beardsley states in his discussion of instrumentalism in aesthetics, "Statements of value are to be regarded as proposed solutions to problems of value, that is, situations in which choices have to be made."¹¹ Scholars faced situations in which they had to choose between competing authentic hadīths. As Ibn al-Wazīr notes incisively in his comparison between the critical methods of Muslim and Abū Dāwūd, "Know that the purpose of this discussion is to demonstrate that the hadīths of Muslim are preferable to those of Abū Dāwūd in the case of competition (taʿārud) between them....^{*12}

Indeed, these comprehensive rankings emerged in the wake of seminal attempts to systematize the Sunni study of hadīth. Although scholars such as Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī (d. 349/960) and al-Ismā'īlī (d. 371/981–2) had been evaluating collections such as the Ṣaḥīḥayn from a relatively early date, concerted efforts to rank the various products of the ṣaḥīḥ movement seem to have started suddenly in the early and mid-sixth/twelfth century.¹³ This followed works like al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī's

214

¹⁰ Ibn al-Şalāh, Muqaddima, 169. This ranking has been followed by almost all later scholars, some of whom have discussed the levels in more detail; see Abū al-Fayd Muhammad al-Hanafī al-Fasīh al-Harawī (d. 837/1434), Jawāhir al-usūl fī ʿilm ḥadīth al-Rasūl, ed. Abū al-Maʿālī Aṭhar al-Mubārakfūrī (Medina: al-Maktaba al-ʿIlmiyya, [1973?]), 19; Ibn Ḥajar, al-Nukat ʿalā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 107; Mullā Khāṭir, Makānat al-Ṣahāḥaŋa, 98–102.

¹¹ Monroe C. Beardsley, Aesthetics: The Philosophy of Criticism (New York: Harcourt, Brace and World, 1958), 543.

¹² Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīh al-anzār, 81.

¹³ Ibn Hazm (d. 456/1064) seems to have been an exception. Al-Dhahabī reports that he ranked the best hadīth collections as the Sahīhayn, the Muntaqā of Ibn al-Sakan, the Muntaqā of Ibn al-Jārūd, the Muntaqā of Qāsim b. Asbagh, then the Sunans of Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī and then thirty other books; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-hufījāz, 3:231.

al-Kifāya fī 'ilm al-riwāya (The Sufficient Work on the Science of Transmission), which were attempts to authoritatively recognize choices that Sunni ḥadīth scholars, jurists and legal theorists had made about the transmission, evaluation and usage of ḥadīths. Scholars like al-Ḥāzimī found themselves forced to see where the methods of al-Bukhārī and Muslim fit within the shared rules of ḥadīth study articulated in the writings of systematizers like al-Ḥākim, al-Khaṭīb and Ibn 'Abd al-Barr (d. 463/1070).

Ranking al-Bukhārī's critical stringency above that of Muslim, for example, acknowledged significant and practical principles that had emerged as predominant among Sunni hadīth critics. On the issue of when one could accept the vague phrase "from/on the authority of ('an)" in an isnād as not masking a break in transmission, it was the school of thought associated with al-Bukhārī and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī that became the mainstream stance. These two masters had required proof that the transmitter employing "from/on the authority of" had actually met at least once the person from whom he claimed to narrate. Muslim, on the other hand, had only required that they be contemporaries with a possibility of having met one another.¹⁴ In his al-Kifāya, al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī declares that the community of hadīth scholars had come to consensus that requiring at least one meeting was correct. When Ibn 'Abd al-Barr sought to apply the criteria of the sahih movement to Mālik's Muwatta', he therefore turned to al-Bukhārī's requirements as the prevailing rule. Most major hadīth scholars or critics since then, such as Ibn al-Salāh (d. 643/1245), have followed Ibn 'Abd al-Barr's and al-Khatīb's formulations of the rules governing the use of "from/on the authority of ('an)."¹⁵ Ranking Muslim slightly below al-Bukhārī in

¹⁴ See above Chapter 3, section on Muslim's Methodology in his Sahīh.

¹⁵ For the majority (al-Bukhārī's stance), see Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Muhammad al-Qābisī, Muwaţţa' al-imām Mālik, ed. Muhammad b. 'Alawī b. 'Abbās al-Mālikī (Abu Dhabi: al-Majma' al-Thaqafī, 1425/2004), 38 (I have interpreted al-Qābisī's phrase 'idrāk bayyin' as 'proof of direct transmission;' this could also mean 'clear contemporaneousness); Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Tamhīd, 1:12; al-Khatīb, al-Kīţāya, 2:229; Abū al-Husayn b. al-Qatţān (d. 628/1231), al-Iqnā' fī masā'il al-ijmā', ed. Husayn b. Fawzī al-Ṣaʿīdī, 2 vols. (Cairo: al-Fārūq al-Hadīthiyya li'l-Ţibā' a wa al-Nashr, 1424/2004), 1:66-7; idem, Bayān al-wahm wa al-īhām, 3:287; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqadima, 220; Ibn Rushayd, al-Sanan al-abyan, 32; al-Dhahabī, al-Mūqiza, 45-6; Khalīl b. Kaykaldī al-ʿAlāī (d. 761/1359), Jāmi' al-taḥṣīl fī aḥkām al-marāsīl, ed. Hamdī 'Abd al-Majīd al-Salāfi (Baghdad: al-Dār al-ʿArabiya li'l-Ţibā'a, 1398/1978), 134 fī; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bāʿith al-ḥathīth, 44-5; al-Bulqīnī, Mahāsin al-iṣțilāḥ, 224-5; Ibn Rajab, Sharḥ 'Ilal al-Tīrmidhī, 1:360-5; al-Tīrāqī, al-Tabṣira wa al-tadhkira, ed. Muḥammad b. al-Ḥusayn al-ʿIrāqī al-Husaynī (Fez: al-Maṭba'a al-Jadītā, 1353/[1935]), 1:162; al-Sakhāwī, Fatḥ al-mugħīth, 1:202-13; al-Ṣarānī, Tawdāħ al-afkārī, 1:299. Al-Nawawī seems to favor Muslim's stance in his Tagrīb, but states that critical stringency thus amounted to tailoring the canon to the contours of convention among hadīth scholars.

The superiority of the Sahīhavn over other respected hadīth collections used for takhrij also had palpable implications in scholarly debate. This shines forth clearly in a seventh/thirteenth century debate that raged between the towering Shāfi'ī hadīth scholar Ibn al-Salāh and his contemporary al-Izz b. Abd al-Salām (d. 660/1261-2)¹⁶ over the permissibility of a type of supererogatory prayer known as salāt al-raghā'ib. The evidence for this type of prayer hinged on a hadith adduced by al-Ghazālī in his Ihyā' 'ulūm al-dīn (The Revival of the Religious Sciences). Although both Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ and Ibn 'Abd al-Salām agreed that this report was weak, the former felt that people should still be allowed to perform the prayer, while Ibn 'Abd al-Salām argued that "paving the way for lying about the Messenger of God is not permitted (altasabbub ilā al-kadhib 'alā Rasūl Allāh lā yajūz)."¹⁷ In the course of letters these two scholars wrote to one another publicly debating the issue, Ibn al-Şalāh defended his point of view by arguing that "the hadīth has sahīh narrations," citing a hadīth from Ibn Mājah's Sunan as evidence.¹⁸ Ibn 'Abd al-Salām, however, refuted him by pointing out that one of the transmitters in Ibn Mājah's isnād was a known liar (i.e., Ya'qūb b. al-Walīd al-Madīnī).¹⁹

Although by the time of al-Maqdisī in the early sixth/twelfth century many scholars in the Islamic heartlands considered Ibn Mājah's Sunan to be part of the well-respected "Six Book" hadīth canon, the work al-Bukhārī's is correct in his Sharh of Muslim; al-Nawawī, al-Taqrīb, 10; idem, Sharh Ṣahīh Muslim, 1:145. Ibn Daqīq effectively favors Muslim's stance; Ibn Daqīq, al-Iqtirāh, 207. Ibn Jamā'a favors Muslim's stance; Badr al-Dīn Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm Ibn Jamā'a, Manhal al-rāwī fī 'ulūm al-hadīth al-nabawī, ed. Muḥammad al-Sayyid Nūḥ (Mansoura, Egypt: Dār al-Wafā', 1402/1981), 175. As does the Hanafī al-Faṣīḥ al-Harawī, Jawāhir al-usūl, 29. The later Hanafī Mullā 'Alī Qārī also favors Muslim's school; Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Sharḥ Musnad Abī Hanīfa, ed. Khalīl Muḥyī al-Dīn Malīs (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, [n.d.]), 10. Al-Hākim does not address the issue of requiring a meeting; al-Hākim, Ma'rifat' ulūm al-ḥadīth, 43–4. For more modern analyses of this debate, see al-Laknawī, Zafar al-amānī, 235–40; Khaldūn al-Aḥdab, Asbāb ikhtilāf al-muḥaddithīn, 2 vols. (Jeddah: Dār Kunūz al-ʿIlm, 1422/2001), 1:179–96; al-Sharīf Hātim al-ʿAwnī, Ijmāʿ al-muḥaddithīn.

¹⁶ See al-Şafadī, al-Wāfī bi'l-wafayāt, vol. 18, ed. Ayman Fu'ād Sayyid (Wiesbaden and Beirut: Steiner Verlag, 1408/1988), 18:520–2.

¹⁷ Al-Albānī and Muhammad Zāhir al-Shāwīsh, eds., Musājala 'ilmiyya bayn al-imāmayn al-jalīlayn al-Izz Ibn 'Abd al-Salām wa Ibn al-Şalāh (Damascus: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, [1960]), 5.

¹⁸ Al-Albānī et al., Musājala ilmiyya, 17.

¹⁹ Al-Albānī et al., Musājala ilmiyya, 32.

could not deliver the decisive authority of the Sahāhayn. A rigorous critic like al-Dāraquṭnī had disapproved of only two hundred and seventeen narrations from al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's books and only two of their narrators. Al-Dhahabī, however, counted no less than one thousand weak narrations from the approximately 4,341 hadīths in Ibn Mājah's Sunan.²⁰ Ibn 'Abd al-Salām was thus on much steadier ground when he cited a hadīth from Sahāh Muslim to support his position.²¹ Given the possible implications of choosing one collection over another for takhrīj in a debate, it is not surprising that scholars in Baghdad asked al-Maqdisī to write a book explaining the differing criteria of the Six Books.²²

The Origins of Takhrij Among the Students of al-Hakim al-Naysabūrī

In light of al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī's leading role in the canonization of the Ṣahīhayn, it seems natural that we find the first concerted application of this new measure of authenticity in the work of his students. The actual earliest known use of al-Bukhārī and Muslim for the takhrīj of ḥadīths, however, occurs in a small ḥadīth collection compiled by a prominent member of the Ṣahīḥayn Network who was both al-Ḥākim's teacher and senior colleague: al-Dāraqutnī.²³ Another member of the ²⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 13:279. For another instance in which the Shāfi'ī Tāj al-Dīn al-Subkī confidently states that a hadīth from Ibn Mājah is inauthentic, see his Tabaqāt, 4:13 (biography of al-Bayhaqī); also, Abū al-Fayd Ahmad al-Ghumārī (d. 1960), al-Mughīr 'alā ahādīth al-Ţāmi' al-saghīr (Beirut: Dār al-Rā'id al-ʿArabī, 1402/1982), 89–90.

²¹ Al-Albānī et al., Musājala ʿilmiyya, 8.

²² Al-Maqdisī, Shurūt al-a'imma al-sitta, 10.

²³ Al-Dāraqutnī, Kitāb fihi arba'ūn hadīth^{an} min musnad Burayda b. 'Abdallāh b. Abī Burda 'an nddihi 'an Abī Mūsā al-Asharī, ed. Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Karīm b. 'Ubayd (Mecca: Ma'had al-Buhūth al-Ilmiyya, 1420/[2000]). I have found one earlier occurrence of $takhr\bar{y}$, but I believe it to be a later addition to the text. In his work on the differences of opinions amongst jurists, Ibn al-Mundhir (d. 318/930-1) cites a hadīth and then says "akhrajahu al-Bukhārī wa Muslim." This is probably a later addition, since in the early fourth/tenth century people did not generally refer to al-Bukhārī as such (if they referred to him at all), calling him Muhammad b. Ismā'īl or Abū 'Abdallāh. Using 'al-Bukhārī' as shorthand was a result of the mustakhraj period, and no *mustakhraj*s of al-Bukhārī had been produced during Ibn al-Mundhir's time; Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm Ibn al-Mundhir, al-Ishrāf 'alā madhhab ahl al-'ilm, ed. Muhammad Sa'īd Mubayyad (Idilb, Syria and Doha, Qatar: Maktabat al-Ghazālī and Maktabat Dār al-Fath, 1415/1994), 96. The early Hanafi hadīth scholar Abū Ja'far al-Ţahāwī (d. 321/933) also mentions that al-Bukhārī narrated a hadīth. This hadīth, however, does not appear in the Sahīh, so al-Ţaḥāwī was probably referring to al-Bukhārī's Tārīkh al-kabīr, which he cited several times in his works; Abū Ja'far Ahmad al-Ţahāwī, Mushkil al-āthār, 25 vols. (Hyderabad:

Baghdad knot followed closely on al-Dāraqutnī's heels. At several points in his Sharh uṣūl i 'tiqād ahl al-sunna, Hibatallāh al-Lālakā'ī (d. 418/1027–8) adduces hadīths as evidence and then supports them by stating that al-Bukhārī and/or Muslim included them (akhrajahu) in their *Ṣaḥī*µs.²⁴

The takhrāj format was a natural outgrowth of the mustakhraj techniques of al-Dāraqutnī's contemporaries and students such as al-Jawzaqī (d. 388/998) and al-Barqānī (d. 425/1033–4). Like the mustakhraj, takhrāj functioned to display the quality of a scholar's hadīths. Instead of following the format of other mustakhraj authors like Abū 'Awāna or Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī, who simply replicated the template collection with their own isnāds, al-Jawzaqī's and al-Barqānī's joint Mustakhrajs of the Ṣahāḥayn list their authors' narration of a ḥadīth and then note that al-Bukhārī, Muslim or both "included it (akhrajahu)."²⁵ Takhrāj simply involved using this tactic when composing other books.

The use of al-Bukhārī and Muslim to consistently and confidently affirm the authenticity of hadīths or the reliability of transmitters, however, can be traced to two of al-Hākim's students: Abū Ya'lā Khalīl b. 'Abdallāh al-Khalīlī (d. 446/1054) and Abū Bakr Ahmad b. al-Husayn al-Bayhaqī (d. 458/1066). Al-Khalīlī employed the Ṣahīḥayn as a tool for establishing the reliability of transmitters in his short but valuable biographical dictionary of ḥadīth scholars, al-Irshād fī ma'rifat 'ulamā' al-ḥadīth (Guidance for Knowing the Scholars of Ḥadīth). Al-Khalīlī hailed from Qazvīn, where he worked for a time as a judge, but studied extensively with al-Hākim in Naysābūr. From among the other members of the Ṣahīḥayn Network, he only studied with al-Ghiţrīfī.²⁶ His link to the Jurjān cult of al-Bukhārī might explain his favoring al-Bukhārī over Muslim as a source for citation. His admiration for al-Bukhārī is clear, for he calls him "the imām agreed on by all without contest."²⁷ Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-'Uthmāniyya, [1968]), 1:278–9. For this citation, I am indebted to the extremely useful study by 'Abd al-Majīd Maḥmūd, Abū j̃a'far al-Taḥāwī wa atharuhu fī al-ḥadīth (Cairo: al-Maktaba al-'Arabiyya, 1395/1975), 119, 228–9.

²⁴ Al-Lālakā'ī, Sharh uşūl i'tiqād ahl al-sunna, 1:108 (for al-Bukhārī), 1:87, 4:876 (for al-Bukhārī and Muslim), 1:85 (for Muslim). On one occasion "al-Bukhārī included it..." is added in the margin by a later copyist. That this addition is noticable bolsters the reliability of the remaining instances as parts of the author's original work.

²⁵ See al-Barqānī, al-Juz'al-awwal min al-takhrīj li-şahīh al-hadīth; Abū Bakr Muhammad b. 'Abdallāh al-Jawzaqī, al-Jam' bayn al-Ṣahīhayn, MS 118 Awqāf, Khizāna al-ʿĀmma Library, Rabat.

²⁶ Al-Rāfi'ī, al-Tadwin fi akhbār Qazwin, 2:501–4; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:214; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 30:120–1; idem, Siyar, 17:666–8.

²⁷ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 377.

Al-Khalīlī introduces at least nineteen men as transmitters al-Bukhārī included in his Ṣahīħ. He cites another eighteen as transmitters from both the Ṣahīħayn. He relies on Muslim's Ṣahīħ independently only twice, however, and mentions no other works as a means of takhīŋ.

Using al-Bukhārī and Muslim as a measure of authenticity for hadīths began in earnest with Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, who was wellknown as one of al-Hākim's most senior students. When later scholars such as Ibn al-Jawzī and Ibn al-Ṣalāh cited al-Hākim's opinions or his works, it was most frequently through a chain of transmission from al-Bayhaqī. Al-Hākim provided one of al-Bayhaqī's primary reservoirs of hadīths, since, according to al-Dhahabī, he did not have the books of al-Tirmidhī, Ibn Mājah or al-Nasā'ī at his disposal. He did, however, possess a camel load of ḥadīth books from al-Hākim. In addition to al-Hākim, he also studied extensively with Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī, al-Barqānī and Ibn Fūrak, who served as another major source of al-Bayhaqī's ḥadīths.²⁸

Al-Bayhaqī was an amazingly prolific scholar, who, according to al-Dhahabī, was capable of founding his own madhhab had he so wished. Instead, al-Bayhaqī authored an oeuvre that became such a bastion of the Shāfi'ī school that Imām al-Ḥaramayn al-Juwaynī considered al-Bayhaqī to be the only person to whom al-Shāfi'ī was indebted. Al-Bayhaqī organized al-Shāfi'ī's statements and proof texts in the massive Ma'rifat al-sunan wa al-āthār and then compiled his al-Sunan al-kubrā, a huge ḥadīth collection backing up every detail of Shāfi'ī substantive law with Prophetic traditions as well as opinions from the Companions. Al-Bayhaqī was sought out as an expert on Shāfi'ī fiqh and al-Muzanī's Mukhtaşar.²⁹ Both later Shāfi'ī/Ash'arīs and Ḥanbalī/ über-Sunnis respected and relied on his work. The staunch Ash'arī Ibn 'Asākir heard his entire oeuvre from his students, and the Ḥanbalī Khwāje 'Abdallāh had *ijāza*s from him.³⁰

Al-Bayhaqī's output was representative of the new Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī orthodoxy. Works such as his al-Madkhal ilā al-Sunan al-kubrā (Introduction to the Great Sunan) and the Sunan itself champion the Shāfi'ī transmission-based legal methodology and the school's body of substantive law. In works like his Khilāfiyyāt (The Disagreements), al-Bayhaqī defends the school's positions against its Hanafī opponents. He affirms the transmission-based trust in the revealed text of the sunna for understanding dogma, while simultaneously validating Ash'arī efforts to interpret God and His attributes rationally. Discussing the hugely divisive controversy over the wording (lafz) of the Qur'ān, for example, he states simply that all transmission-based scholars believe that the Qur'ān is the uncreated word of God. While some scholars might prefer not to discuss the issue, others like al-Bukhārī (and al-Bayhaqī himself) have chosen to distinguish between the physical manifestation of the Qur'ān and the text itself. Nonetheless, all belong to the same unified school.³¹

²⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 18:165.

²⁹ 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 127-8.

³⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 30:438–41; idem, Siyar, 18:163–70.

We can clearly appreciate the manner in which al-Bayhaqī employed the Sahīhayn as a measure of authenticity in a sample of four works intended to affirm his Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī position. Stylistically, his use of the phrase "al-Bukhārī and/or Muslim included it" after a hadīth reflects the works of his teacher al-Bargānī and also that of al-Lālakā'ī. Beginning with the first hadīth in his Kitāb al-Asmā' wa al-sifāt, a treatise on God's names and attributes, and thereafter wherever possible, al-Bayhagī uses inclusion in al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections to establish reliability.³² He pursues the same tactic in his Khilāfiyyāt.³³ In a work intended to provide hadīths proving the existence of the bête noire of Muslim rationalists, the punishment of the grave ('adhāb al-gabr), al-Bayhaqī uses the canonical formula "al-Bukhārī and/or Muslim included it (akhrajahu)" for eighty-eight out of the four hundred and thirty (20%) narrations in the book. He only twice mentions other collections such as Abū Dāwūd's Sunan and Ibn Hanbal's Musnad.34 Al-Bayhaqī's al-Sunan al-kubrā represents the most extensive use of the Sahīhayn canon for takhrīj. In a sample of the 1,472 narrations constituting his lengthy chapter on ritual purity (tahāra), al-Bayhaqī refers to inclusion by al-Bukhārī, Muslim or both 23.5% of the time. The only other work he refers to for takhrij, Abū Dāwūd's Sunan, appears only 0.6% of the time (9 instances).

³¹ Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, Kitāb al-asmā' wa al-şifāt, ed. 'Abdallāh b. Muḥammad al-Hāshidī, 2 vols. (Jedda: Maktabat al-Sawādī, 1413/1993), 2:17.

³² Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, Kītāb al-asmā' wa al-sifāt, 1:17-18.

³³ Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, al-Khilāfiŋyāt, ed. Mashhūr b. Hasan Āl-Salmān, 2 vols. (Riyadh: Dār al-Şumay'ī, 1415/1995), 1:48.

³⁴ See Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, Ithbāt 'adhāb al-qabr, ed. Sharaf Mahmūd al-Quḍāt (Amman: Dār al-Furqān, 1403/1983).

Another student and follower of al-Hākim's school of thought, Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī, also provides some of the earliest usages of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon as a measure of authenticity. In his biographical dictionary of Isfahan, Dhikr akhbār Isbahān, he uses the phrase "the ḥadīth is authentic by agreement (al-ḥadīth ṣaḥīḥ muttafaq 'alayhi)" to validate his own narration of a Prophetic ḥadīth.³⁵ Here he follows an earlier member of the Ṣaḥīḥayn Network, Ibn al-Akhram, who had entitled his joint mustakhraj of the Ṣaḥīḥayn "The Ṣaḥīḥ by Agreement (al-Ṣaḥīḥ al-muttafaq 'alayhi)."³⁶ In his landmark biographical dictionary of Sufism and asceticism, Hilyat al-awliyā', Abū Nu'aym also uses al-Bukhārī and Muslim as direct stamps of approval for ḥadīths he includes in the work's entries.³⁷

We know that employing the canon for takhrīj had also begun in Baghdad by the mid-fifth/eleventh century. Abū Nu'aym's student and a main inheritor of the Şahīhayn Network (see Şahīhayn Network Chart), al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, used the Şahīhayn canon dramatically to establish the authenticity of a selection of 173 of his hadīths that he narrated in a hadīth dictation session. He invokes the inclusion of al-Bukhārī, Muslim or both for 57% of his reports. He invokes no other work for takhrīj, and only declares one hadīth to be şahīh that does not appear in one of the Şahīhayn.³⁸ Al-Khatīb reiterates the paramountcy of the Şahīḥayn in his vision of the hadīth sciences when he instructs students that the two works should form the basis of any curriculum in ḥadīth study.³⁹

³⁵ Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī, Tārīkh Işbahān / Dhikr akhbār Işbahān, ed. Sayyid Khusrawī Hasan, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1410/1990), 1:21. We know that Abū Nu'aym used the term 'muttafaq 'alayi' to refer to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's agreement because he uses it in the midst of critiquing several transmitters whom he says al-Bukhārī and Muslim did not use in their Ṣaḥīļs; al-Dhahabī, Mīzān al-i'tidāl, 1:166 (bio of Aḥmad b. Yūsuf al-Manbijī).

³⁶ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:55.

³⁷ See, for examples, Abū Nu'aym al-Işbahānī, Hilyat al-awliyā' wa tabaqāt al-asfiyā', 10 vols. (Cairo: Maktabat al-Khānjī and Matba'at al-Sa'āda, [1351–1357/1932–1938]), 3:205 (al-Bukhārī), 8:261 (Muslim).

³⁸ See al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, al-Fawā'id al-muntakhaba al-şiḥāḥ wa al-gharā'ib, ed. Khalīl b. Muḥammad al-ʿArabī (Giza: Maktabat al-Tawʿiyya al-Islāmiyya, 1415/1995). See p. 206 for the one instance.

³⁹ Al-Khatīb, al-fāmi li-ikhtilāf al-rāwī wa ādāb al-sāmi, 2:185.

CHAPTER SIX

The Historical Application of Takhrij

We have located both the epicenter of the $Sah\bar{h}hayn$ canon and its initial use as a measure of authenticity in the seminal work of al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī and his students from the Shāfi'ī school. We will now examine how and when the canon spread to the Hanbalī, Mālikī, Hanafī and Imāmī Shiite schools. We will focus on the two most salient means in which scholars used the Sahīhayn canon as a common measure of authenticity: polemics, and employing the canon to fortify a school's formative legal or hadīth texts.

a. Polemics and Debate

In the mid-fifth/eleventh century, prominent adherents of the Shāfi'ī, Hanbalī and Mālikī schools all began employing the Sahīhayn canon as a measure of authenticity in polemics and expositions of their schools' doctrines. It was not until the eighth/fourteenth century, however, that the Hanafīs also adopted the canon for this use.

Al-Bayhaqī's categorical reinforcement of the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī catalog stands out as both the earliest and most stunning application of the canon in his school's history. It seems clear, however, that this intensive recourse to the Sahīhayn hinged on al-Bayhaqī's proximity to al-Hākim and the canonization of the two works. Although other Shafi'i jurists of this period did employ the Sahīhavn canon, no one matched the concentrated use found in al-Bayhaqī's or al-Khalīlī's works. Abū al-Hasan al-Māwardī (d. 450/1058), for example, was a contemporary member of the Shāfi'ī school in Baghdad who was also engaged in the process of explicating and establishing Shāfi'ī substantive law. However, he made very limited use of the Sahīhayn canon for takhrīj in his legal reference, al-Hāwī al-kabīr fī figh madhhab al-imām al-Shāfi ī (The Great Compendium of the Shāfi'ī School of Law). On only two occasions in his voluminous explanation of the school's law does he use inclusion in al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's collections to support the authenticity of hadīths that al-Shāfi'ī had invoked as proof texts.40

⁴⁰ See Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Muhammad al-Māwardī, al-Hāwī al-kabīr fi fiqh madhhab al-imām al-Shāfi i, ed. 'Alī Muhammad Mu'awwad and 'Ādil Ahmad 'Abd al-Mawjūd (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1414/1994), 1:140; 17:71.

It is not surprising that one of the earliest employers of the Sahīhayn as a measure of authenticity came from the Hanbalī camp, which cooperated with the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arīs in canonizing the two works. Like his correspondent, Abū Naşr al-Wā'ilī, the great Hanbalī Abū Ya'lā Ibn al-Farrā' (d. 458/1066) was an inveterate opponent of the Ash'arīs and their figurative interpretation of God's attributes. Like al-Bavhaqī, however, he used the canon to bolster the authority of the hadīths he cited as proof texts on such controversial issues. In 456/1064, Ibn al-Farrā' held a session for dictating hadīths to students (mailis imlā') and tackled the perennially divisive issue of seeing God on the Day of Judgment (ru'yat al-Bāri'), rejected by Mu'tazilites and interpreted figuratively by Ash'arīs. He narrated a hadīth in which the Prophet looks at the full moon and then tells his followers, "Indeed you will see your Lord with your own eyes (iyān^{an})." Ibn al-Farrā' adds, "This hadīth is şahīh; al-Bukhārī included it..., and it is as if I heard it from al-Bukhārī."41 Here Ibn al-Farrā' uses both his own proximity in the isnād to al-Bukhārī and the latter's inclusion of the hadith in his Sahih as a means for augmenting its authority. In his treatise on legal theory, al-Udda, Ibn al-Farrā' similarly uses al-Bukhārī's Sahīh to validate a report proving that a five-year-old could effectively hear hadith transmitted.⁴²

Ibn al-Farrā' also utilizes the canon in his work on issues of dogma (usil al-din), the Kitāb al-mu'tamad. The author devotes his attention in this work primarily to his Mu'tazilī and Ash'arī opponents, treating controversial topics such as God's attributes, the punishment of the grave, and the issue of appropriate rule in Islam (imāma). In his subchapter on the existence of magic (sihr), he argues against the Mu'tazila, saying that both the Qur'ān and the hadīth affirm it. He invokes the hadīth in which 'Ā'isha recounts how a Jewish sorcerer once cast a spell on the Prophet, adding that "this is a well-known (mashhūr) hadīth that al-Bukhārī and others from the hadīth scholars (muhaddithīn) have mentioned."⁴³ He also mentions that some hadīths are "included in the ⁴¹ Ibn Abī Yaʿlā, Ṭabaqāt al-ḥanābila, 2:172; Fatḥ # 7435; Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-tawḥīd, bāb 24.

⁴² Ibn al-Farrā³, al-Udda, 3:950. This is the hadīth from the Companion Mahmūd b. Rabī⁶ saying, "Aqaltu min al-Nabī (s) majjat^{an} majjahā fī wajhī wa anā ibn khamas sinīn"; Fath #77; Şahāh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-ʿilm, bāb matā yasihhu samā⁶ al-ṣaghī.

⁴³ Abū Ya'lā Ibn al-Farrā', Kitāb al-mu'tamad fī uşūl al-dīn, ed. Wadī' Zaydān Haddād (Beirut: Dār al-Mashriq, 1974), 168. This specific version of the hadīth "sahara al-nabī (s) yahūdī min al-yahūd...," appears in Ṣahīh Muslim, see Ṣahīh Muslim: kitāb al-salām, bāb

Sahāh," a phrase that generally denotes inclusion in one or both of the Sahāhayn (here it evidently refers to Muslim's work).⁴⁴ Besides al-Bukhārī, he only once mentions another ḥadīth scholar as narrating a report, namely al-Dāraquṭnī; in this case, however, he places no emphasis on the source as a guarantor of authenticity. Ibn al-Farrā''s son, Ibn Abī Ya'lā, also occasionally uses al-Bukhārī and Muslim as a measure of authenticity in his discussion of the differences between Ḥanbalīs and Ash'arīs on issues such as God's attributes.⁴⁵ This use of the canon continues in later Ḥanbalī works such as Ibn 'Aqīl's (d. 513/1119) al-Wādih fī usūl al-fiqh, until the end of the sixth/twelfth century.⁴⁶

Among Hanbalīs, it was the Neo-Hanbalite cadre of Ibn Taymiyya (d. 728/1328) and his student Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyya (d. 751/1350) that exhibited the most cunning and aggressive usage of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon. The two works served as powerful weapons in polemics against Ash'arīs over issues such as God's attributes, the nature of the Qur'ān and invoking the intercession of dead saints. Asserting the literalist position that one should accept the outward meaning of Qur'ānic verses or Prophetic ḥadīths describing God's movements, Ibn al-Qayyim calls the attention of his Ash'arī opponents to al-Bukhārī's narrations of ḥadīths asserting that God is indeed physically above us in the heavens. He exploits al-Bukhārī's position of extreme respect among both Ash'arīs and Ḥanbalī/über-Sunnis to his advantage, sarcastically implying that his opponents would condemn this venerable figure as an anthropomorphist. Ibn al-Qayyim states in a verse of poetry:

And from among you, al-Bukhārī the 'anthropomorphist' has narrated it, Nay, an anthropomorphist who attributes to God a [physical] position above us (mujassim fawqānī).⁴⁷

On the issue of visiting the graves of prophets and seeking their assistance, Ibn al-Qayyim challenges the orthodox tenet that they are al-sihr. A slightly different wording appears in Sahīh al-Bukhārī, see Sahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-tibb, bāb 47 / Fath # 5763.

⁴⁴ Îbn al-Farrā', Kītāb al-mu'tamad, 224; Şahīh Muslim: kitāb al-imāra, bāb al-istikhlāf wa tarkihi. This hadīth goes as follows: 'Abdallāh b. 'Umar ← 'Umar b. al-Khattāb: În atruku fa-qad taraka khayr minnī, rasūl Allāh, wa in astakhlifu fa-qad istakhlafa man huwa khayr minnī, ya'nī Abā Bakr. Ibn al-Farrā''s version inverts Muslim's word order.

⁴⁵ Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Țabaqāt al-ḥanābila, 2:182.

⁴⁶ See, for example, Abū al-Wafā' ʿAlī Ibn ʿAqīl, al-Wādih fi uşūl al-fiqh, ed. George Makdisi (Wiesbaden and Beirut: Steiner Verlag, 1423/2002), 3:191; 4b:200, 436.

⁴⁷ Taqī al-Dīn al-Subkī, al-Sayf al-ṣaqīl, 65.

indeed alive in their graves and able to respond to the invocation of pilgrims.⁴⁸ One of the hadīths that scholars had produced as evidence for this stance describes Moses praying in his grave. Ibn al-Qayyim, however, argues that al-Bukhārī's decision to exclude the hadīth from his Şahīh demonstrates its weakness, as does al-Dāraqutnī's claim that it is actually the opinion of a Companion (hence, $mawq\bar{u}f$).⁴⁹ Not only does Ibn al-Qayyim use al-Bukhārī as a measure of truth to reinforce his position, he also exploits exclusion from the work to undermine his opponent's evidence.

Like others, Mālikīs employed the Sahīhayn canon in debates or expositions of their school's positions. It is little surprise that the first Mālikī to employ the Sahīhayn canon as a measure of authenticity had studied extensively at the hands of a member of the Sahīhavn Network, Abū Dharr al-Harawī. Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī (d. 474/1081) of Cordova traveled east in 426/1035 and studied with al-Harawī for three years in Mecca before moving to the Abbasid capital to study with al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī and others.⁵⁰ With such prolonged exposure to one of the most prominent members of the Sahīhavn Network, al-Bājī confidently employed the canon in his book defending Mālikī usūl, the Ihkām al-fusūl fī ahkām al-usūl. This work is an aggressive exposition of Mālikī legal theory, often targeting Hanafī or über-Sunni opponents. Although al-Bājī makes only a few references to al-Bukhārī or Muslim, or any other hadīth collections for that matter, these references clearly illustrate the function of the Sahīhavn canon in the author's thought.⁵¹ One of al-Bājī's primary concerns in the Ihkām is mounting a defense of analogical reasoning (qivas) against those über-Sunnis who reject any rulings not based directly on revealed text (nass). He lists the various Prophetic reports that his opponents cite as evidence against the use of reason, but rebuts them by stating that these are defective and too unreliable to be compelling. He asks his opponents how they could invoke such feeble hadīths in the face of the reports that he had advanced as evidence, "most of which the two imāms [al-Bukhārī and Muslim] have agreed on including in the Sahāh[ayn]." "This is what the ⁴⁸ For a discussion of Ibn Taymiyya's and Ibn al-Qayyim's argument against visiting graves, and an Ash'arī response, see Taylor, In the Vicinity of the Righteous, 168–94.

⁴⁹ Taqī al-Dīn al-Subkī, al-Sayf al-saqīl, 155.

⁵⁰ D.M. Dunlop, "al-Bādjī, Abū al-Walīd," EI².

⁵¹ For these instances, see Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī, Ihkām al-fuṣūl fī ahkām al-uṣūl; 591, 744.

people have agreed on as authentic," he adds, noting that only one of his opponents' hadīths appears in the Sahīhayn.⁵²

Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī's al-Muntagā, a commentary on the Muwatta', shares many of the same concerns as his usul work. Although it primarily seeks to explain and elaborate on the positive law laid out by Mālik, the author's perspective is consistently both comparative and polemical. He is as eager to prove the correctness of Mālik's school as to explain it. Al-Bājī thus occasionally relies on the Sahīhavn to validate Mālik's legal positions. Defending his stance against Hanafī opponents on the necessity of the taslīm (turning one's head and saying 'peace be upon you' at the end of prayer) for exiting a prayer, al-Bājī states, "The proof of the correctness (sihha) of Mālik's position is [a hadīth] that al-Bukhārī narrated...." He also employs the canon conversely to cast doubt on the authenticity of opposing hadīths. He rejects reports that offer more information on the Prophet's taslim than those found in the Muwatta' by stating, "Al-Bukhārī did not include any of them, and what Muslim included are reports that allow for interpretation (vahtamilu al-ta'wīl)."⁵³

The Hanafī school seems to have been much slower to adopt the Ṣahīhayn canon as a measure of authenticity. Although, as we discussed in Chapter Four, Hanafī scholars played an active role in transmitting al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections during the fifth/eleventh and sixth/twelfth centuries, they did not develop the strong interests in studying or utilizing the two works demonstrated by the Shāfi'ī Ṣahīḥayn Network or later scholars like al-Bayhaqī. The earliest Hanafī scholarship on the works of al-Bukhārī and Muslim appears in the seventh/thirteenth century with the pioneer of Indian Islamic scholarship, al-Hasan b. Muḥammad al-Ṣaghānī (d. 650/1252), who produced a combined edition of the Ṣahīḥayn, a commentary on al-Bukhārī's Ṣahīḥ and a work on his transmitters. The Damascene Ḥanafī Abū al-Ḥafş 'Umar b. Badr al-Mawşilī (d. 622/1225) produced a simplified digest of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, and Muḥammad b. 'Abbād al-Khilāțī (d. 652/1254) devoted a book to Muslim's collection.⁵⁴ It was not until the eighth/fourteenth

⁵² Al-Bājī, Ihkām al-fuşūl fī ahkām al-uşūl, 610.

⁵³ Al-Bājī, al-Muntaqā sharḥ al-Muwatṭā', 7 vols. in 4 ([Cairo]: Dār al-Fikr al-ʿArabī, [1982]), 1:169. For an extensive discussion of the taslīm in early works of law and ḥadīth, see Yasin Dutton, "An Innovation from the Time of the Banī Hāshim: Some Reflections on the Taslīm at the End of the Prayer," Journal of Islamic Studies 16 (2005): 147–8.

⁵⁴ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 3:180. Al-Mawşilī's work is published as century, however, that Hanafīs began using the Ṣaḥīḥayn to validate hadīths. Writing in the Chagataied and Ilkhanid Mongol realms of Iran and Central Asia, 'Alā' al-Dīn 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Aḥmad al-Bukhārī (d. 730/1329–30)⁵⁵ employs them briefly but effectively in his Kashf alasrār (Revealing the Secrets), a commentary on the Hanafī uşūl treatise by Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī b. Muḥammad al-Bazdawī of Samarqand (d. 482/1089). Responding to criticisms that one of the transmitters of a ḥadīth he uses was weak, 'Abd al-'Azīz retorts that al-Bukhārī "is a pillar to be followed in that science [of ḥadīth], the imām of that craft, so his including that [ḥadīth] suffices as proof of its authenticity (siḥḥa)...."⁵⁶ The author thus leaves his readers no doubt about the legitimating power of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ. In general, however, 'Abd al-'Azīz's Kashf al-asrār makes very limited use of the Ṣaḥīḥayn in this manner.

By the time al-Bayhaqī and Ibn al-Farrā' were putting the Sahīhayn canon to use as a measure of authenticity, Imāmī Shiism had taken crucial steps in articulating its doctrine and outlining its sources. In 329/940 the twelfth imām's absence was declared permanent, and leadership in the community fell into the hands of scholars pending the imām's return. The collections that would become the Imāmī ḥadīth canon had all been produced: Muḥammad b. Yaʿqūb al-Kulaynī's (d. 329/940) al-Kāfī, Ibn Bābawayh's (d. 381/991) Man lā yaḥḍuruhu al-faqīh and Muḥammad b. al-Ḥasan al-Ṭūsī's (d. 460/1067) two works, al-Tahdhīb and al-Istibṣār.⁵⁷

In the same period, tensions between Imāmī Shiites and Sunnis rose markedly with the rise of Fāṭimid Ismā'īlī power in Egypt and Syria, the terror wreaked by the Ismā'īlī assassins, and the impending threat of the sect's missionary activities in the central Islamic lands of the Seljuq empire. For the Imāmī Shiite minorities living in the Karkh district of Baghdad or in the great Iranian cities of Rayy and Naysābūr, identification with the Ismā'īlī threat presented a constant danger. Imāmī scholars like Nāṣir al-Dīn Abū al-Rashīd b. 'Abd al-Jalīl al-Jam' bayn al-Ṣaḥīḥayn, ed. Ṣāliḥ Aḥmad al-Shāmī, 2 vols. (Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1416/1995).

⁵⁵ For his biography, see Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 2:428.

⁵⁶ Al-Anṣārī, Fath al-bāqī, 76.

⁵⁷ Stewart, Islamic Legal Orthodoxy, 5. For a discussion of the contents and uses of the canonical Shiite hadīth collections, see Robert Gleave, "Between Hadīth and Fiqh: the 'Canonical' Imāmī Collections of Akhbār," Islamic Law and Society 8, no. 3 (2001): 350–382.

Abī al-Ḥusayn Qazvīnī (d. ca. 560/1165) thus expended great efforts in trying to both defend Imāmī doctrine in the face of Sunni critiques and educate Sunnis on the important differences between their own, Imāmī school and the Ismāʿīlīs.

Imāmī Shiites like Qazvīnī did not identify with Sunni hadīth collections at all, for they considered the Companions on whom collectors like al-Bukhārī had relied most heavily, such as Abū Hurayra, to be brazen liars.⁵⁸ Nonetheless, the authority commanded by the Ṣahīḥayn within the Sunni community provided Qazvīnī with an important tool for defending his school. His Ketāb-e naqd (The Refutation) represents a comprehensive effort to validate Imāmī doctrine and practice in Sunni eyes as well as to educate his readers on the trenchant differences between Imāmī and Ismāʿīlī Shiites. Qazvīnī frequently cites famous Sunni works such as al-Ṭabarī's Tafsīr as proof texts, obliging Sunnis to heed "one of their own imāms."⁵⁹ In response to Sunni accusations that Shiites rely on weak ḥadīths and lies, he says that they are narrated via reporters who are mostly "Sunnis" and "Ḥanafīs" and are to be found in the books of these "two sects (farīqayn)." Qazvīnī adds that the Sunni ḥadīth scholars (aṣḥāb al-ḥadīth) accept many of these reports.⁶⁰

Qazvīnī often refers to the consensus $(ijm\bar{a}^{\circ})$ of the umma and of the hadīth scholars in his arguments for Shiite stances.⁶¹ Responding to Sunni criticisms of Shiite claims that 'Alī was the first person to ever have that name, he invokes as evidence the Ṣahīhayn and other books of the aṣhāb al-hadīth that "are relied upon (keh mo'tamad-ast)." Qazvīnī tells his opponents to "take up the Ṣahīhayn" and find the hadīth that says that 'Alī's name is written on the leg of God's throne and on the doorway to Paradise as the brother of Muḥammad. Since both these structures existed before the creation of the world, 'Alī is doubtless the first person to have been so named.⁶²

 $^{^{58}}$ For a Shiite study of Abū Hurayra, see 'Abd al-Ḥusayn Sharaf al-Dīn al-Mūsawī, Abū Hurayra (Beirut: Dār al-Zahrā', 1397/1977).

⁵⁹ Nāşir al-Dīn 'Abd al-Jalīl Abū al-Husayn Qazvīnī Rāzī (fl. 560/1162), Kitāb-e naqd-e ma'refat beh ba'd-e mathāleb al-navāşeb fī naqd ba'd fadā'eḥ al-ravāfed, ed. Jalāl al-Dīn Hosaynī Ormavī ([Tehran]: Chāp-khāne-ye Sepehr, 1331–1371/[1952]), 392.

⁶⁰ Nāşir al-Dīn Qazvīnī, Ketāb-e naqd, 654-5.

⁶¹ For example, see Nāşir al-Dīn Qazvīnī, Ketāb-e nagd, 557.

⁶² Nāşir al-Dīn Qazvīnī, Ketāb-e naqd, 576–8. Neither of these two hadīths actually appears in the Sahīḥayn or the other Six Books: "I saw on the night I was taken up to the heavens, inscribed on the leg of the throne and the doorway of Paradise, 'The garden of Eden was planted by the hands of Muhammad, the purest of My creation, and I have supported him with 'Alī' (ra'aytu laylat usriya bī ilā al-samā' muthabbat^{an} ʿalā sāq

The Şaḥīḥayn and other respected Sunni ḥadīth collections also provided the later Imāmī theologian of Baghdad, Rādī al-Dīn 'Alī b. Mūsā Ibn Ṭāwūs (d. 664/1266), with authoritative proof texts to use against Sunnis. In his study of Ibn Ṭāwūs's library, Etan Kohlberg states that he possessed copies of the Ṣaḥīḥayn "for polemical pro-Alid traditions included in them...." He also relied on Muḥammad b. Futūḥ al-Ḥumaydī's (d. 488/1095) combination of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections, al-Jam' bayn al-Ṣaḥīḥayn, as a more convenient source.⁶³

There can be no quantitative comparison between al-Bayhaqī's overwhelming employment of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon to validate his ḥadīths and the more limited use of Ibn al-Farrā', al-Māwardī, al-Bājī, 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Bukhārī or Qazvīnī. In general, these scholars employed the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon only sparingly. Unlike al-Bayhaqī and other students of al-Hākim, their work does not overflow with authorizing references to al-Bukhārī and Muslim. As 'Abd al-'Azīz's reverential invocation of al-Bukhārī's authority and al-Bājī's explicit referral to the community's consensus on the Ṣaḥīḥayn demonstrate, however, these scholars were aware of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon's etiology and utility even if they only invoked it occasionally.

b. Bolstering Formative Texts

Although al-Bayhaqī had used the canon to comprehensively buttress Shāfi'ī substantive law in the mid-fifth/eleventh century, the remaining three Sunni madhhabs followed very different paths in their recourse to the Ṣahīhayn to bolster their formative hadīth or legal texts. Their approaches to the canon for this purpose would depend on either the nature of their formative text or their attitude towards the Ṣahīḥayn canon itself.

al-'arsh wa bāb al-janna an ghurisat jannat 'Adn bi-yaday Muḥammad ṣafwatī min khalq ayyadtuhu bi-'Alī)," and "It was written on the doorway to Paradise, 'There is no god but God, Muḥammad is the Messenger of God, and 'Alī is the brother of Muḥammad,' before God created the heavens and the earth by two thousand years (maktūb 'alā bāb al-janna 'lā ilāh illā Allāh Muḥammad rasūl Allāh 'Alī akhū Muḥammad qabla an yakhluqa Allāh alsamāwāt wa al-ard bi-alfay'ām)." Al-Dhahabī includes permutations of both these reports in his work on criticized transmitters and their ḥadīths, Mīzān al-i'tidāl; al-Dhahabī, Mīzān, 1:269, 530.

⁶³ Etan Kohlberg, A Medieval Muslim Scholar at Work (Leiden: Brill, 1992), 324–5.

It was only at the beginning of the seventh/thirteenth century that Hanbalī scholars like Ibn Qudāma (d. 620/1223) started to seriously reinforce the hadīths used in elaborating their school's substantive law by takhrīj through al-Bukhārī, Muslim and other products of the şahīh movement. In his commentary on the Hanbalī formative legal text, al-Khiraqī's Mukhtaṣar, Ibn Qudāma mentions that one of his goals in explicating Ibn Ḥanbal's madhhab is the takhrīj of the ḥadīths al-Khiraqī had used as proof texts. He states that he will cite them "from the books of the imāms from among the scholars of ḥadīth, so that [these reports] might inspire trust in what they indicate, and to distinguish between the authentic and flawed [reports], so that what is well-established can be relied upon and what is unknown can be abandoned."⁶⁴

The task of undertaking takhrij on the school's most prominent hadith collection, Ibn Hanbal's Musnad, daunted scholars for centuries. The sheer inertia of Ibn Hanbal's massive work has thwarted almost every scholarly attempt to systematically evaluate the authenticity of its contents or make the work more accessible. The Musnad, which consists of over forty thousand narrations (thirty thousand excluding repetitions), clearly contains a great deal of material that does not warrant a sahih rating. Discussions over its authenticity have thus generally revolved not around the question of whether the Musnad was totally reliable, but on whether or not its more lackluster narrations ever reached the level of fatal weakness or forgery. Because a systematic analysis would be a titanic feat, claims on this matter were often mere guesswork. Al-Dhahabī attempted to cast the Musnad in a good light by optimistically asserting that there are only a "few (galīl)" hadīths found in the Sahīhayn that do not appear in the Musnad. He could not conceal the questionable status of the rest of the book's contents, however, and added that one should not take the Musnad's contents as proof (hujja) because it has many reports that are too weak and even forged.⁶⁵ Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200) and Zayn al-Dīn al-Trāgī (d. 806/1404) also listed numerous hadīths from the Musnad that they believed were clearly forgeries.

⁶⁴ Ibn Qudāma, al-Mughnī, ed. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Muḥsin al-Turkī and 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Muḥammad al-Ḥalw, 15 vols. (Cairo: Hajr, 1406/1986), 1:5.

⁶⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 11:329 (biography of Ibn Hanbal). Al-Suyūţī (d. 911/1505) asserted that everything in Ibn Hanbal's Musnad was "maqbūl," or strong enough for use at the very least in pious preaching. The collection's weak hadīths, he argues, are close to the acceptable hasan grade; al-Suyūţī, Jamʿal-jawāmiʿal-maʿrūf biʾl-Jāmiʿal-kabīr, 29 vols. ([Cairo]: Majmaʿ al-Buhūth al-Islāmiyya, 1390/1970), 1:3.

It was not until the career of al-Trāqī's student Ibn Hajar (a Shāfi'ī) that a scholar succeeded in performing at least a preliminary takhrīj of the contents of Ibn Hanbal's Musnad. This feat, however, was only subsidiary to Ibn Hajar's primary purpose in the work: rendering the Musnad more accessible to scholars by compiling a huge index (atrāf) of its contents. He did note, however, in which other main hadīth collections Ibn Hanbal's material appears, identifying al-Bukhārī and Muslim, among others, to bolster the authenticity of the Musnad more directly by writing a rebuttal of al-Trāqī's list of nine forged hadīths found in the work, often referring to al-Bukhārī and Muslim to back them up.⁶⁷

In theory, the Sahīhayn canon would have proven extremely useful to Mālikī efforts to bolster their school's formative text, Mālik's Muwatta'. The feat that al-Bayhaqī performed for hadīths supporting the Shāfi'ī/ Ash'arī school, al-Bājī's student Abū 'Umar Yūsuf b. 'Abdallāh Ibn 'Abd al-Barr (d. 463/1070) accomplished for the Muwatta'.⁶⁸ The Cordovan scholar's gargantuan Kitāb al-Tamhīd li-mā fī al-Muwatta' min al-ma'ānī wa al-masānīd, twenty-four printed volumes, constitutes a comprehensive commentary on Mālik's magnum opus. In addition to discussing the legal, doctrinal and ritual implications of the material contained in the Muwatta', Ibn 'Abd al-Barr attempts to establish the text in the language of the sahih movement. Because the Muwatta' predated the exclusive focus on Prophetic hadīths and uninterrupted chains of transmission emphasized by the *sahih*s and sunan books, the work's large number of Successor opinions and incomplete isnāds compromised its strength as a hadīth reference. Ever a fly in the ointment, the Zāhirī maverick Ibn Hazm (d. 456/1064) thus attacked the Mālikī opinion that the Muwatta' was the best hadith book by listing it as thirty-first in his own ranking of thirty-six books. He placed it well below collections ⁶⁶ The wide net Ibn Hajar cast in his attempt at the takhrīj of the Musnad's contents includes: the Şaḥīḥayn, the Sunans of Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī, al-Tirmidhī, Ibn Mājah, al-Dārimī and al-Dāraquṭnī, the Ṣaḥīḥs of Ibn Khuzayma, Ibn Hibbān and Abū 'Awāna, and al-Hākim's Mustadrak; Ibn Hajar, Aṭrāf Musnad Aḥmad ibn Hanbal, al-musammā Iṭrāf al-musnid al-muʿtalī bi-Aṭrāf al-Musnad al-ḥanbalī, ed. Zuhayr b. Nāṣir al-Nāṣir, 10 vols. (Damascus: Dār Ibn Kathīr and Dār al-Kalim al-Tayyib, 1414/1993).

⁶⁷ See, for example, Ibn Hajar, al-Qawl al-musaddad fi al-dhabb 'an al-Musnad li'l-imām Almad, 39.

⁶⁸ Al-Bājī himself produced a larger commentary on the Muwatta' from which he drew his Muntaqā. This larger text dealt with Mālik's isnāds more than the abridgement; Abd al-Rauf, "Hadīth Literature," 280.

containing only Prophetic reports, amid books that mix "the words of the Prophet with those of others."⁶⁹

Oddly, although Ibn 'Abd al-Barr had the Sahīhayn, the Sunans of Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī and other hadīth collections at his disposal, he made little use of them in bolstering Mālik's reports.⁷⁰ In fact, Ibn 'Abd al-Barr rarely resorts to takhrij at all. On only a handful of occasions does he refer to major hadīth collections.⁷¹ Instead, Ibn 'Abd al-Barr relies on his own mastery of the criteria established by "those requiring authentic [hadīths] in their compilations" to rate and reinforce material in the Muwatta'.72 Each narration discussed in the Tamhīd begins with a rating such as muttasil musnad (extending to the Prophet with an uninterrupted isnād) or *musnad sahī*h (extending to the Prophet, authentic). Occasionally Ibn 'Abd al-Barr reiterates the strength of Mālik's hadīths with statements such as "this hadīth is authentic, its authenticity agreed upon by all" or "musnad muttasil according to the people of knowledge."73 In the case of mursal reports (those in which a Successor quotes the Prophet without citing a Companion) and other defective chains of transmission, the author musters sound hadith narrations to support them.

Ibn 'Abd al-Barr's contribution proved formidable. He found complete isnāds for all except four of the hadīths in the Muwatța' that had lacked them. It was not until two centuries later that Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, a Shāfi'ī by allegiance, succeeded in reinforcing the remaining four hadīths. In his Risāla fī waşl al-balāghāt al-arba', Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ argues that al-Bukhārī and Muslim included a ḥadīth conveying the same meaning as Mālik's report, "Innī la-ansā aw unassā li-asunn (indeed I forget or am

⁶⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:231. It is interesting that Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Muhammad al-Qābisī (d. 403/1012), one of the first scholars to take Şahīḥ al-Bukhārī to the Maghrib, compiled a collection of the material in the Muvatța' with complete isnāds in his Kītāb al-mulakhkhaş; it amounted to only 527 ḥadīths. This work has been published as: Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī b. Muhammad al-Qābisī, Muwatța' al-imām Mālik, ed. Muḥammad b. 'Alawī b. 'Abbās al-Mālikī (Abu Dhabi: al-Majma' al-Thaqāfī, 1425/2004); cf. al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustațrafa, 12.

⁷⁰ Ibn 'Abd al-Barr even had a book entitled al-Ajwiba 'alā al-masā'il al-mustaghraba min al-Bukhārī (Answers to Peculiar Questions in al-Bukhārī); Ahmad b. Muhammad b. Abī Bakr al-Qastallānī (d. 923/1517), Irshād al-sārī li-sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, 10 vols. (Beirut: Dār Ṣādir, [1971], reprint of an 1886–8 edition), 1:43.

⁷¹ Ibn 'Abd al-Barr occassionaly notes that a hadīth was included by al-Nasā'ī, Abū Dāwūd, or al-Bukhārī. For examples, see Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Tamhīd, 3:265; 4:194–5, 313; 5:227, 253.

⁷² Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Tamhīd, 1:12.

⁷³ Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Tamhīd, 6:17; 8:11.

caused to forget, so that I create sunna)," and finds narrations from the Six Books for the three other hadīths.⁷⁴ Ibn 'Abd al-Barr's work and the final addition of Ibn al-Ṣalāh elicited so much confidence among Mālikīs that the famous Egyptian commentator on the Muwaiția', Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Bāqī al-Zurqānī (d. 1710) stated unequivocally, "The truth is that the Muwaiția' is şaḥīh with no exceptions."⁷⁵ The twentieth-century Mauritanian scholar of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, Muḥammad Ḥabīb Allāh al-Shinqīțī (d. 1944) exclaimed that there was now "no difference between al-Bukhārī and the Muwaiția'."⁷⁶

Yet why did Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Bājī, and other early commentators on the Muwatta' such as Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī (d. 543/1145) not employ the Sahīhayn canon to systematically validate Mālik's reports?⁷⁷ Al-Bukhārī's Sahīh could certainly have proven invaluable for this task, for Mālik's transmissions in the Muwatta' furnished perhaps the largest single source for al-Bukhārī's work. No fewer than six hundred (35.3%) of the Muwatta"s narrations appear in the Sahīh.⁷⁸ The answer to this conundrum may lie in that very fact: Mālikīs realized that the Sahīhayn were effectively built upon the Muwatta'. To use the Sahīhayn to shore up Mālik's work would thus be circular, tantamount to referring to a reproduction to prove the worth of an original. Indeed, Mālikīs frequently cited early reports of al-Shāfi'ī saying, "There is no book after the book of God most high that is more useful (anfa') than the Muwatta' of Mālik," or of the great Basran hadīth critic 'Abd al-Rahmān b. Mahdī (d. 198/814) saying, "We know of no book in Islam after the book of God most high that is more authentic (asahh) than the Muwatta' of

⁷⁴ Ibn al-Şalāh, Risāla fi waşl al-balāghāt al-arba', ed. 'Abdallāh b. al-Siddīq al-Ghumārī (Casablanca: Dār al-Tibā'a al-Hadīthiyya, 1400/1979), 15; Şahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-şalāt, bāb 31; Muwaţţa': kitāb al-sahw.

⁷⁵ Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Bāqī al-Zurqānī, Sharh Muwatta' al-imām Mālik, 5 vols. ([Cairo]: Matba'at Muştafā al-Bābī al-Halabī, 1381/1961), 1:13. We will see below that this claim exceeded even those made about the Sahīhayn, where some exceptions were made for flawed hadīths. Some earlier figures such as the Hanafī al-Mughultāy (d. 762/1361) brought the Muwatta' to the same level as al-Bukhārī's Sahīh not by praising the former but by denigrating the latter. Al-Mughultāy states that the ta'tīq hadīths in al-Bukhārī's book are far more compromising than Mālik's incomplete isnāds; ibid., 1:12.

⁷⁶ Ibn al-Şalāh, Risāla, 3–4 (editor's introduction).

⁷⁷ In his commentary on the *Muwatta*², Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī frequently uses the Sahīhayn as well as other famous sunans such that of al-Nasā'ī for takhrīj of hadīths he mentions in his comments, but not to back up the hadīths of Mālik himelf; see Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī, Kītāb al-qabas fī sharḥ Muwatta' Mālik b. Anas, ed. Muḥammad 'Abdallāh Walad-Karīm (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1992).

⁷⁸ Fuad Sezgin, Buhârî'nin Kaynakları, 305.

Mālik."⁷⁹ Ibn 'Abd al-Barr sets forth this myriad praise of the Muwatta' in the introduction to his Tamhīd, adding other reports such as 'Abdallāh b. Wahb's (d. 197/813) statement that "whoever has copied (kataba) the Muwatta' of Mālik need write nothing more on what is permissible and forbidden (al-halāl wa al-harām)."80

Among Mālikīs, the Muwatta' was thus the true foundation of the sahih movement on which later masterpieces like the Sahihayn were built. Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī states in the introduction of his commentary on al-Tirmidhī's Jāmi' that al-Bukhārī's Sahīh "is the second basis (așl) in the realm [of hadīth], but the Muwatta' is the first basis (al-asl al-awwal), and on them have been built all others" such as the collections of Muslim and al-Tirmidhī.⁸¹ Al-Qādī 'Iyād thus speaks of the Muwatta' and the Sahīhs of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as "the three mother-books $(al-ummah\bar{a}t al-thal\bar{a}th)$," "the authentic collections of reports $(\bar{a}th\bar{a}r)$ that have been agreed upon as foremost throughout the ages, and that the scholars have accepted in all the rest of the regions (sā'ir al-amsār)." These works are "the usul of every asl... and the principles of the sciences of traditions (mabādi' 'ulūm al-āthār)...."82

Like Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, neither al-Bājī nor Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī's commentaries on the Muwatta' make use of the Sahihayn canon to support the authenticity of Mālik's material. Rather, al-Bājī exudes confidence in the foundational role of the Muwatta' and the unanimity of the community's approval of Mālik's hadīths. He admits, for example, that Mālik's report about 'Abdallāh b. 'Umar's never attending Friday prayer without perfuming and anointing himself with oils lacks a reliable isnād (i.e., in this case it does not extend back to the Prophet). But al-Bājī argues that this is unnecessary, since the umma had acted on this hadīth and "accepted it with consensus (talaqqathu bi'l-qubūl)." The report thus enjoyed a guarantee of authenticity far beyond that provided by a mere sahīh isnād.⁸³

⁷⁹ Ibn Hibbān, Kitāb al-maprūhīn, 1:41-2.

 ⁸⁰ Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Kitāb al-tamhīd, 1:78. For the other quotes praising the Muwatța', see ibid., 1:76–79; cf. al-Qādī 'Iyād, Tartīb al-madārik, 1:191.
 ⁸¹ Abū Bakr b. al-'Arabī, Şaḥīḥ al-Tirmidhī bi-sharḥ al-imām Ibn al-'Arabī al-Mālikī, 13 vols. in 5 (Cairo: al-Matba'a al-Mișriyya bi'l-Azhar, 1350/1931), 1:5.

⁸² Al-Qādī 'Iyād b. Mūsā, Mashāriq al-anwār 'alā sihāh al-āthār, ed. Bal'amshī Ahmad Yagan, 2 vols. ([Rabat]: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa al-Shu'ūn al-Islāmiyya, 1402/1982), 1:27.

⁸³ Al-Bājī, al-Muntaqā, 1:203.

As with their late recourse to the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon in debate and exposition, it was only in Mamluk Cairo of the eighth/fourteenth century that Hanafīs turned to al-Bukhārī and Muslim to bolster their school's formative legal and ḥadīth texts. With the exception of al-Ṣaghānī, al-Mawṣilī and al-Khilāțī in the seventh/thirteenth century, only at this time did Hanafī ḥadīth scholars begin systematically studying and employing the Ṣaḥīḥayn. 'Alī b. 'Uthmān Ibn al-Turkumānī (d. ca. 747/1347), a Hanafī judge in Egypt, was a prominent teacher of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ; even Zayn al-Dīn al-'Irāqī numbered among his students.⁸⁴ Another Hanafī teacher of al-'Irāqī's in Cairo, 'Alā' al-Dīn 'Abdallāh b. Qalīj al-Mughultāy (d. 762/1361), wrote a famous commentary on Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī.⁸⁵ It was Ibn al-Turkumānī's students, however, who first systematically employed the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon to legitimize major Ḥanafī ḥadīth collections.

Muhyī al-Dīn Abū Muhammad 'Abd al-Qādir Ibn Abī al-Wafā' (d. 775/1374) served as a Hanafī muftī in Mamluk Cairo and eventually produced the most comprehensive biographical dictionary of the Hanafī school.⁸⁶ In a personal addendum to this dictionary, Ibn Abī al-Wafa' explains how he was assigned the task of validating Hanafi hadīths using canonical collections. His teacher Ibn al-Turkumānī had been approached by a Mamluk amīr who, like most of the Turkish military elite, subscribed to the Hanafi madhhab.⁸⁷ This amīr, who evidently enjoyed debating issues of religious law with scholars from an opposing school (probably the dominant Shāfi'ī madhhab), consistently stumbled before his adversaries' demands for his hadith sources. The amir would reply, "We have the book of [Abū Ja'far] al-Tahāwī (d. 321/933)," but complained to Ibn al-Turkumānī that "if we mention a hadīth from it to our opponents they say to us, 'We will not listen to anything except what is in al-Bukhārī and Muslim....'" Ibn al-Turkumānī replied to the amīr, "Most of the hadīths in al-Ţahāwī are [also] in al-Bukhārī and Muslim or the Sunans [of Abū Dāwūd, al-Tirmidhī, al-Nasā'ī and Ibn Mājah], and other books of the hadīth masters (huffāz)...." The amīr thus asked him to find citations for all of al-Tahāwī's material based ⁸⁴ Ibn Fahd, Lahz al-lihāz, 91, 93–4.

⁸⁵ Ibn Fahd, Lahz al-lihāz, 87.

⁸⁶ Ibn Fahd, Lahz al-lihāz, 105.

⁸⁷ Ulrich Haarmann, "Joseph's law—the careers and activities of Mamluk descendents before the Ottoman conquest of Egypt," in The Mamluks in Egyptian Politics and Society, ed. Thomas Philipp and Ulrich Haarmann (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1998), 78.

on those books. In typical scholarly manner, the judge replied, "I do not have the time for that, but one of my students $(ash\bar{a}b\bar{i})$ can do it." Ibn al-Turkumānī handed the task to his son, Jamāl al-Dīn al-Māridīnī, who then assigned it to a younger student: Ibn Abī al-Wafā'.⁸⁸ Provided with reference books from the amīr's own library, Ibn Abī al-Wafā' proceeded to supplement the contents of al-Taḥāwī's Sharh maʿānī al-āthār with narrations from "well-known ḥadīth books (al-kutub al-mashhūra), namely the Ṣaḥīḥayn, the Four Sunans as well as other musnads, detailing what is authentic, acceptable or weak."⁸⁹

Although Ibn Abī al-Wafā's finished work, al-Hāwī fī bayān āthār al-Tahāwī, occasionally refers to other works, such as Ibn Khuzavma's Sahīh, it is inclusion in the Sahīhayn in particular, or meeting al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards, that furnishes the author's principal means for validating al-Tahāwī's hadīths. Indeed, Ibn Abī al-Wafā' bends the Sahīhayn canon to maximum use. Even when a hadīth appears with a chain of transmission not approved by al-Bukhārī or Muslim, Ibn Abī al-Wafā' asserts that "the basic text (asl) of the hadīth is in the Sahīhayn."90 Conversely, if the text of one of al-Ţaḥāwī's ḥadīths does not appear in the Sahīhayn but its isnād does, he states that "its isnād is an isnād from the Sahīhayn."91 Ibn Abī al-Wafā' proves even more flexible in employing the legitimizing power of the canon: if one narrator in the isnād did not earn a place in al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's works, Ibn Abī al-Wafā' still insists that "the rest of the isnād is men of the Sahīhayn."92 He also makes use of al-Hākim's application of "the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim" in the Mustadrak to authorize reports, sometimes declaring in his own opinion that certain hadiths meet the conditions of the Shaykhayn.93

The task of reinforcing the hadīths cited in one of the Hanafī school's leading legal references, the Hidāya of Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Abū Bakr al-Marghīnānī (d. 593/1196–7), fell to another of Ibn al-Turkumānī's ⁸⁸ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 4:571.

⁸⁹ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Hāwī fi bayān āthār al-Ţaḥāwī, ed. Yūsuf Ahmad, 3 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Imiyya, 1419/1999), 1:24.

⁹⁰ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Hāwī, 1:94.

⁹¹ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Hāwī, 1:50, where it occurs twice.

⁹² Ibn Abī al-Wafā⁵, al-Hāwī, 1:61, 142.

⁹³ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Ḥāwī, 1:49, 64, 75, 85, 120. He notes, for example, that "al-Hākim narrated through him [Fahd b. Sulaymān] in his Mustadrak, so he meets the requirements of the Shaykhayn."

students: 'Abdallāh b. Yūsuf al-Zayla'ī of Cairo (d. 762/1361).⁹⁴ A friend and colleague of the Shāfi'ī Zayn Dīn al-'Irāqī, al-Zayla'ī's Naşb al-rāya fī takhrīj ahādīth al-Hidāya stands out as one of the clearest and most accessible works of ḥadīth literature. The great Indian Ḥanafī ḥadīth scholar of Cairo, Muḥammad Murtaḍā al-Zabīdī (d. 1205/1791), later performed the same service for a selection of ḥadīths on which Ḥanafīs had historically relied for deriving law (aḥkām). In his Kitāb 'uqūd al-jawāhir al-munīfa, he states that he will validate these ḥadīths by showing their narrations in the Six Books.⁹⁵

Why did the Hanafīs begin employing the canon almost three centuries after their Shāfi'ī counterparts? With al-Hākim's Mustadrak and the declarations of his associates from the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī and Hanbalī/über-Sunni camps, the Ṣaḥīḥayn emerged as authoritative texts within the transmission-based community. The Hanafī school, however, constituted the bulk of the reason-based school to which the transmission-based school school to which the transmission-based scholars remained in steadfast opposition. Just as ḥadīth scholars like al-Bukhārī and al-Hākim had condemned Hanafīs for departing from the Prophet's true sunna, so did the Hanafīs like Abū Muṭī Makhūl al-Nasafī (d. 318/930) consider the ahl al-ḥadīth brainless literalists, capable of merely parroting the Prophet's words but not of understanding his message.⁹⁶

This Hanafī contempt for transmission-based scholars tainted the school's view of al-Bukhārī. This comes as no surprise in light of the muhaddith's virulent criticism of Abū Hanīfa in his Kītāb raf^{\sim} al-yadayn and his general criticism of the reason-based school in his Sahīh. In the chapter on the issue of milk-relationships ($rid\bar{a}^{\circ}$) in his mammoth work of Hanafī substantive law, the famous Hanafī jurist and legal theorist al-Sarakhsī (d. ca. 490/1096) produces an amazingly insulting story about al-Bukhārī. He tells how al-Bukhārī upheld the opinion that if two children drink milk from the same ewe they would become milk-siblings, prohibited from ever marrying one another (hurmat al-ridā^{\circ}). When the great muhaddith supposedly visited his native Bukhara and began answering the legal questions of its citizens, the leading Hanafī of the city, Abū Ḥafṣ Aḥmad b. Ḥafṣ (d. 217/832), told him that he was unqualified to give expert legal opinions. Al-Bukhārī ignored him and continued to answer questions. When someone asked about the issue of drinking milk from the same ewe, the people found al-Bukhārī's response so preposterous that they expelled him from the city.

⁹⁴ Ibn Hajar, al-Durar al-kāmina fī a'yān al-mi'a al-thāmina, ed. 'Abd al-Wārith Muḥammad 'Alī (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1418/1997), 2:188–9.

⁹⁵ Muhammad Murtadā al-Zabīdī, Kitāb 'uqūd al-jawāhir al-munīfa, ed. Wahbī Sulaymān Ghāwjī al-Albānī (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1406/1985), 17.

⁹⁶ Marie Bernand, "Le Kitāb al-radd 'alā l-bida' d'Abū Mutī' Makhūl al-Nasafī," Annales Islamologiques 16 (1980): 121–2.

It goes without saving that al-Bukhārī probably did not espouse this opinion and that the story is apocryphal; earlier sources make clear that al-Bukhārī's expulsion from Bukhara came at the $am\bar{n}$'s orders at the end of his life, and at any rate, Abū Hafs died before al-Bukhārī reached full maturity.97 The story, however, provides a comic foil for al-Sarakhsī, who proceeds to explain that if two youths drink the milk of the same animal, in no way do they become milk-siblings. The milk-sibling relationship is analogous to kinship, and just as humans cannot be related to animals, so that relationship cannot be established by an animal's milk.⁹⁸ Over two hundred years later, the Hanafi legal theorist Abū Barakāt 'Abdallāh b. Ahmad al-Nasafī (d. 710/1310) reproduced the same insulting story to prove a fundamental principle in the Hanafī school: "a hadīth scholar who is not a jurist (al-muhaddith ghave al-faqih) errs often." In other words, only specialized jurists are qualified to derive laws from Prophetic traditions.⁹⁹ Ibn Abī al-Wafā' includes the same story about al-Bukhārī in his Hanafī biographical dictionary, al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya.¹⁰⁰

Hanafīs seem to have maintained a skeptical distance from the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon into the eighth/fourteenth century. Yet it was an inescapable feature of the scholarly environment with which they had to come to terms. As his account of how he came to apply the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon to a Ḥanafī ḥadīth collection suggests, Ibn Abī al-Wafā' was responding to outside polemical pressures rather than acting on any reverence for al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's work. In fact, Ibn Abī al-Wafā' reveals a deep cynicism towards the canonical culture surrounding the

⁹⁷ Also, al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥāḥ lacks a chapter on milk-relationships (al-riḍā'). He covers the topic in four subchapters in the book on marriage, but makes no claim about animal's milk; Ibn Ḥajar, Fatḥ al-bārī, 9:174. On al-Bukhārī's expulsion from Bukhara, see above, Chapter 3, n. 63.

⁹⁸ Al-Sarakhsī, Kitāb al-mabsūt, 2nd ed., 30 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, 197–), 30:297; Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 1:166 (biography of Ahmad b. Hafş Abū Hafş al-Kabīr).

⁹⁹ Jamāl al-Dīn Muḥammad al-Qāsimī al-Dimashqī, Hayāt al-Bukhārī, ed. Maḥmūd al-Arnā'ūţ (Beirut: Dār al-Nafā'is, 1412/1992), 48.

¹⁰⁰ See n. 98 above.

two collections. Discussing how Shāfi'īs assert the authenticity of a hadīth that al-Tahāwī had declared weak by arguing that it is included in Muslim's Sahīh, Ibn Abī al-Wafā' states that Shāfi'īs "cannot show off [the hadīth] (yatajawwahūna) to us because it comes from Muslim, for [many] things appear in Muslim, and showing it off does not bolster [their position] in situations of conflicting [narrations] (istidām)." Ibn Abī al-Wafā' then embarks on what may be the lengthiest and most comprehensive existing enumeration of the types of flaws appearing in the Sahīhayn, detailing consistently weak chains of transmission as well as the problematic texts of certain hadīths. Referring to Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī's warning to Muslim upon reading his Sahīh, Ibn Abī al-Wafā' concludes, "God bless Abū Zur'a, for he spoke the truth." In Ibn Abī al-Wafā''s opinion, the Sahīhayn had indeed "made a path for the people of bid'a" and been bent to polemical and partisan purposes.¹⁰¹ A more playful contempt for the canon appeared in the career of a slightly earlier Hanafī hadīth scholar who visited Cairo, Shams al-Dīn Mahmūd b. Abī Bakr al-Kalābādhī al-Bukhārī (d. 700/1300). When this scholar would see a handsome youth, he would say, playing on his own name (al-Bukhārī), "that is sahīh according to the requirements of al-Bukhārī."102

Misuse of the Sahīhayn Canon

The authority that the Ṣaḥīḥayn or the "requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim" carried in debates was very alluring. In the time before standardized texts and easily accessible indices, and long before searchable databases, knowing the exact contents of capacious ḥadīth collections like the Ṣaḥīḥayn proved impossible to all but the most accomplished scholars. Both among the less masterful of the scholarly class and less literate segments of society, it was difficult to limit the legitimizing authority of the Ṣaḥīḥayn to the actual contents of the books. It was tempting to claim that a ḥadīth supporting one's position had met al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's standards.

¹⁰¹ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 4:565-69.

¹⁰² Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 3:455. Invoking religious idiom in homoerotic literature was common; see J.W. Wright Jr., "Masculine Allusion and the Structure of Satire in Early 'Abbāsid Poetry," in Homoeroticism in Classical Arabic Literature, ed. J.W. Wright Jr. and Everett K. Rowson (New York: Columbia University Press, 1997), 10.

Qazvīnī had made a valiant attempt to defend Imāmī beliefs by claiming that certain pro-'Alid reports were included in the Sahīhayn. Unfortunately, the hadīths he cites stating that 'Alī's name is written on the leg of God's throne or above the doorway to Paradise are nowhere to be found in the two collections, nor do they appear in any of the Six Books, as was mentioned above.¹⁰³ This overstepping of the boundaries of the canon was not limited to non-Sunnis who may not have been well-acquainted with Sunni hadīth collections. The prominent Cairene Hanafī Badr al-Dīn Maḥmūd b. 'Ubaydallāh al-Ardabīlī (d. 875/1471) approached the Shāfi'ī hadīth scholar Abū 'Abdallāh Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Sakhāwī (d. 902/1497) with a list of hadīths the status and citations of which he was unsure. In the majority of al-Sakhāwī's responses in his al-Ajwiba al-'aliyya 'an al-as'ila al-Dimyātiyya, the scholar replies that the hadīths have been falsely ascribed to some hadīth collection or critic. Seven hadīths had been falsely cited from Sahīh al-Bukhārī, eight from Sahīh Muslim and three from al-Tirmidhī's 7āmi⁽¹⁰⁴

2. The Need for an Authoritative Reference: The Ṣaḥīḥayn and Non-Hadīth Specialists

The Sahīhayn met a second important need exhibited by the Sunni community in the mid-fifth/eleventh century: that of a common authoritative hadīth reference for non-specialists. This need stemmed from an increasing division of labor between jurists and hadīth scholars in the mid-fifth/eleventh century. With the establishment of madrasa in cities like Baghdad, Naysābūr and Merv in this period, a space had been created that primarily emphasized the study of law (fiqh) as opposed to the pietistic or scholarly transmission of hadīths.¹⁰⁵ Unlike the transmission-based scholars of al-Bukhārī's time, who had compiled their *muṣannaf*s as expressions of their own legal thought, many of the mid-fifth/eleventh century denizens of the madrasas lacked expertise in hadīth criticism. Although Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī had been sought out as a hadīth scholar, legal theorist and theologian alike, two generations later Shāfi'ī scholars like al-Shīrāzī and al-Juwaynī were focusing more narrowly on elaborating substantive law, theology and legal theory. As al-Bayhaqī (d. 458/1066) noted in his letters, the breed of jurists who were also masters of hadīth criticism had all but died out.¹⁰⁶ Legal scholars needed to turn to established ḥadīth collections with widely respected standards in order to validate their legal stances or ḥadīths.

¹⁰³ See n. 62.

¹⁰⁴ Shams al-Dīn Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Sakhāwī, al-Ajwiba al-'aliyya 'an al-as'ila al-Dimyāţiyya, ed. Mish'al b. Bānī al-Mutayrī (Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 1420/1999), al-Bukhārī: 81, 87, 101, 149, 112, 131, 145; Muslim: 99, 110, 139, 134, 143, 145, 151; al-Tirmidhī: 76, 108, 131. The authority of the Sahāhayn canon continues to be misapplied in the modern period as well. The Moroccan ḥadīth scholar 'Abdallāh b. al-Ṣiddīq al-Ghumārī (d. 1993) criticized Aḥmad al-Bāqūrī, who had previously been a high-ranking member of the Muslim Brotherhood before being co-opted by the Egyptian government, for incorrectly attributing a ḥadīth to al-Bukhārī. Al-Bāqūrī had tried to defend the practice of mixed-gender dinner gatherings by claiming that al-Bukhārī's '$ahāħ included a ḥadīth in which the Prophet refused a dinner invitation because his wife 'Ā'isha was not invited. Al-Ghumārī objects that no such ḥadīth exists in the Ṣahāħ or any other collection; 'Abdallāh b. al-Ṣiddīq al-Ghumārī, al-Khawāħir al-dīniyya, 2 vols. in 1 (Cairo: Maktabat al-Qāhira, 1425/2004), 1:33.

The role of the Ṣaḥīḥayn as an authoritative reference was embryonic in al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī's work, where he proffered the Ṣaḥīḥayn as a protective canopy for authentic Prophetic reports.¹⁰⁷ In his lengthy treatise on uṣūl, the Sharḥ al-luma', al-Shīrāzī builds on this theme in an attempt to meet the jurists' needs. He explains that Shāfi'ī jurists accept ḥadīths from "senior ḥadīth scholars (kibār aṣḥāb al-ḥadīth)" without research or question. Just as a judge trusts a witness once he has proven his reliability, so too jurists can trust the authenticity of these critics' material. Al-Shīrāzī mentions al-Bukhārī, Muslim, Abū Dāwūd and Yaḥyā b. Ma'īn as examples, as well as major jurists who had also mastered ḥadīth, such as Mālik and Ibn Ḥanbal.¹⁰⁸

The articulation of this need for authoritative references and the suitability of the Sahāhayn to meet it appear most clearly in discussions on the office of muftā (jurisconsult, a term often conflated with mujtahid), the legal expert from whom the population sought rulings. In his description of the necessary qualifications for a muftā, al-Shīrāzī states that he must possess a command of the four sources of Islamic jurisprudence: the Qurʾān, the Prophet's sunna, consensus and analogical reasoning (qiyās). In terms of the sunna, the muftā must know which hadīths to ¹⁰⁵ George Makdisi, "Muslim Institutions of Learning in Eleventh-Century Baghdad," Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 24, no. 1 (1961): 10–11; idem, "Hanbalite Islam," in Studies on Islam, ed. and trans. Merlin L. Swartz (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1981), 230.

¹⁰⁶ See al-Subkī, Tabaqāt al-shāfi iyya, 5:82.

¹⁰⁷ Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, Ma rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 75.

¹⁰⁸ Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī, Sharh al-luma', 2:634.

accept and which to reject. But al-Shīrāzī exempts the muftī from the requirement of mastering the intricacies of isnād or hadīth criticism, for "if we made knowing that [hadīth] by its isnād obligatory for each mujtahid, this would lead to great difficulty, for that requires a lifetime." Instead, a muftī should rely on "the imāms of the aṣhāb al-hadīth" like al-Bukhārī, Muslim, Ibn Ḥanbal, al-Dāraquṭnī and Abū Dāwūd.¹⁰⁹ A contemporary Shāfiʿī in Naysābūr, Abū al-Muzaffar al-Samʿānī, (d. 489/1096), lists "the relied-upon books" for such purposes as the Ṣahīh of al-Bukhārī first and foremost, then that of Muslim, Abū Dāwūd, al-Tirmidhī, al-Nasāʿī, the Mustakhraj of Abū 'Awāna and finally the *Ṣahīh*s of Abū 'Abbās al-Daghūlī and Ibn Ḥibbān.¹¹⁰

Al-Ghazālī concurs, stating that a muftā or mujtahid must rely on critical collections of hadīths that distinguish between authentic and unreliable material.¹¹¹ When working with hadīths that have been accepted as authentic by the umma, one need not scrutinize their chains of transmission (lā hāja bihi ilā al-nazar fī isnādihi). The muftā should thus follow al-Bukhārī and Muslim in the evaluation of narrators, since these two critics only narrated from those whose uprightness ('adāla) they had established. Al-Ghazālī cautions that if one does not defer to these two experts on issues of isnād evaluation, one would have to master that science oneself. He adds, "This is a tall order (tawīl), and is, in our time, with the massive number of intermediaries (wasā it) [in the chains of transmission], very difficult ('asīr)."¹¹²

In his discussion of the requirements for a mufti in the Hanafī school, 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Bukhārī echoes this division of labor and reliance on canonical ḥadīth collections. Like al-Shīrāzī, he requires the mujtahid or muftī to have command of the sunna and know the ḥadīths dealing with legal rulings (ḥadīth al-aḥkām). The jurist, however, need not memorize this material. Rather, he must have at his disposal a vetted copy (aṣl muṣaḥḥaḥ) of one of the aḥkām ḥadīth collections such as al-Bukhārī, Muslim or Abū Dāwūd as a reference.¹¹³

¹⁰⁹ Abū Ishāq al-Shīrāzī, Sharh al-luma', 2:1033-4.

¹¹⁰ Al-Sam'ānī, Qawāți' al-adilla, 2:499–500; cf. al-Juwaynī, al-Burhān, 2:1333.

¹¹¹ Al-Ghazālī, al-Mankhūl, 459.

¹¹² Al-Ghazālī, al-Mustasfā, ed. Muhammad Yūsuf Najm, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Şādir, 1995), 2:200-2.

¹¹³ 'Alā' al-Dīn'Abd al-'Azīz b. Ahmad al-Bukhārī, Kashf al-asrār 'an usūl Fakhr al-Islām al-Bazdawī, 4 vols. in 2 (Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-'Arabī, 1394/1974), 4:15.

Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī expresses the same opinion for the Mālikī school. He states that those who have achieved the expertise necessary to critically examine hadīths can evaluate reports on their own, just as al-Bukhārī and Muslim did. "But he who has not achieved that condition," he adds, "must follow those two [al-Bukhārī and Muslim] for hadīths he claims to be authentic, pausing (tawaqquf) at what they did not include in their Ṣaḥūḥs."¹¹⁴

It is at this point that the split in the hadīth tradition initiated by the sahīh movement again comes into focus. The canonization of the Sahīhayn and their use as measures of authenticity transformed them into institutions of authority in the Muslim community. This institutional role emerged as a counterweight to the focus on the chain of transmission as the sole vehicle for tying Muslim scholars to the hermeneutic authority of the Prophet's words. The consensus of the umma on the Sahīhayn and their subsequent use as a reference in implementing the Prophet's authority meant that books could replace the authoritative source provided by the living isnād. When al-Shīrāzī explains that jurists can replace a direct link to the Prophet and a mastery of evaluating its authenticity with reference books vetted and authorized for that purpose, he obviates the need for an intensive study of *isnād*s.

The diverging paths of the jurists and hadīth scholars becomes evident when we juxtapose al-Shīrāzī's discussion of *muft*īs with that of two of his Shāfi'ī contemporaries more rooted in hadīth study than legal theory or substantive law. In Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī's discussion of the *muft*ī's requirements we find no mention of resorting to reference works. He merely repeats al-Shāfi'ī's original requirement that a *muft*ī himself master the sources of legislation and know which hadīths to accept or reject.¹¹⁵ Al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī also repeats these fundamental requirements, stating that "a muftī will not be able to [meet these requirements] unless he has been excessive (akthara) in writing the reports of the early generations and hearing hadīths." The chasm separating him from al-Shīrāzī widens further when al-Khatīb recounts, rhetorically no doubt, how Ibn Ḥanbal required someone to know at least five hundred thousand ḥadīths before he could act as a *muft*ī.¹¹⁶

¹¹⁴ Al-Bājī, Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Bājī wa kitābuhu al-Ta'tīl wa al-tajrīh, 1:310.

¹¹⁵ Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī, al-Madkhal ilā al-Sunan al-kubrā, ed. Muḥammad Diyā' al-Raḥmān al-A'ẓamī, 2nd ed., 2 vols. (Riyadh: Adwā' al-Salaf, 1420/[1999–2000]), 1:169.

¹¹⁶ Al-Khatīb, Kītāb al-faqīh wa al-mutafaqqih, 2:330, 344-5.

The most dramatic step in proposing the Sahīhayn as institutions of authority to which scholars seeking to evaluate hadīths could turn came almost two centuries later, with the work of Ibn al-Salāh (d. 643/1245). By Ibn al-Salāh's time, Muslims no longer compiled massive collections of hadith with living isnads back to the Prophet, like al-Bayhaqi's Sunan. In a time when the critical rigor of giants like al-Bukhārī seemed to be fading into history, Ibn al-Şalāh pondered how jurists or even hadīth scholars should evaluate previously unrated hadiths they came across in the course of study or debate. He argued that, "If we find some report in a hadīth notebook that seems to have a sahīh isnād but is neither in the Sahīhayn nor indicated as sahīh in a book of the relied-upon, well-known imāms, we do not dare insist that it is authentic (lā natajāsaru 'alā jazm al-hūkm bi-sihhatihi)." Ibn al-Ṣalāh's call rested on his belief that hadīth transmission in his time had deteriorated so much from the rigorous standards of yesteryear that hadith scholars were no longer able to trust their transmissions from earlier sources. Consequently, "knowing the hasan and sahih depended on the imams of hadith having specified this in their well-known, relied-upon works that ... have been preserved against alteration and scribal error (tahrif)." "Most of what is sought out from the isnāds circulating [today]," he concludes, "falls outside this pale."117 Beginning with his follower al-Nawawī, scholars understood Ibn al-Salāh's position as calling for an end to the evaluation of hadīths in favor of a total reliance on sahīh collections.¹¹⁸

This dramatic call to equate all saḥīḥ ḥadīths with the contents of the Ṣaḥīḥayn and other saḥīḥ books embraced the jurists' need for authoritative references at the expense of the hadīth scholars' methodology.¹¹⁹

¹¹⁷ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqaddima, 159-60.

¹¹⁸ Ibn al-Şalāh probably meant that one could no longer declare hadīths transmitted by living isnāds and not found in major collections authentic. As for hadīths found in earlier compilations that included reports of various levels of reliability, such as al-Tabarānī's Muʿjam, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ was probably not arguing against ruling on the authenticity of this material. It was in this sense, however, that Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's comments were understood from the time of his follower al-Nawawī on. Al-Suyūṭī (d. 911/1505) devoted a small treatise to this subject, entitled al-Tanqīḥ fī mas`alat al-tashīḥ, in which he clarified Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's statement but then proceeded to himself declare an end to the authentication of hadīths due to the inability of later scholars to conduct proper `lal criticism. See the edited text of this treatise in Badī' al-Sayyid al-Laḥhām, al-Imām al-ḥāfīz Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūṭī wa juhūduhu fī al-hadīth wa 'ulūmihi (Damascus: Dār Qutayba, 1415/1994), 460–3.

¹¹⁹ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ states that one could also find sahāh hadīths in the books of Abū Dāwūd, al-Tirmidhī, al-Nasāʿī and al-Dāraquṭnī, but that one could not assume that all their contents were authentic, since this was not the criterion of their compilers.

The function of the two books as authoritative institutions therefore emerged as a source of tension between scholars whose chief affiliation was to the study of law and others who focused more on hadīth. Although Ibn al-Ṣalāh was first and foremost a Shāfiʿī hadīth scholar, as his efforts to eliminate the last vestiges of doubt from the Muwația' suggest, his interests lay in strengthening scholarly institutions. His call indeed amounted to declaring the victory of the authoritative institution of the *ṣaḥā*h book over the living isnād. Reacting with predictable tension to Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's argument, almost all later ḥadīth scholars understandably rejected the notion that they were unqualified to independently evaluate ḥadīths; as Zayn al-Dīn al-ʿIrāqī explained, "this was the ḥadīth scholars' job."¹²⁰

What emerged as a consensus among scholars in the wake of Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's provocative claim was a balance between the jurists' needs for authorized institutions housing the Prophet's legacy and the ḥadīth scholars' focus on the living isnād as the link to his authority. The Ṣahīḥayn would serve as the primary reference for non-specialists, while qualified ḥadīth scholars could continue evaluating material they came across. Ibn Ḥajar thus instructs jurists who are browsing through a musnad or sunan work but are not ḥadīth experts to refer to the Ṣahīḥayn to see if a report is authentic or not. If al-Bukhārī or Muslim did not include the report, one should see if some other imām declared it authentic.¹²¹ Other ḥadīth scholars, like al-Nawawī, al-Bulqīnī (d. 805/1402–3) and Ibn al-Wazīr seconded the notion that those who have the expertise must independently evaluate isnāds, but those who do not must rely on the Ṣahīḥayn, their mustakhrajs and ilzāmāt works.¹²²

The role of the Ṣaḥīḥayn as a reference for non-specialists evaluating the reliability of Prophetic reports had profound implications for pietistic literature: if a ḥadīth had earned al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's

Ṣaḥīḥ books, however, such as that of Ibn Khuzayma, could provide this security; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqaddima, 163–4. Al-Suyūtī went far beyond Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, claiming that any hadīth cited from the Ṣaḥīḥayn, the Ṣaḥīḥs of Ibn Khuzayma, Ibn Ḥibbān, the Mustadrak of al-Ḥākim (with the exception of material criticized by scholars like al-Dhahabī), the two *Muntaqā*s of Ibn al-Sakan and Ibn Jārūd, al-Ahādīth al-mukhtāra of Diyā' al-Dīn al-Maqdisī, Mālik's Muwațța' and the mustakhraj works of the Ṣaḥīḥayn is authentic; al-Suyūtī, Jāmʿ al-jawāmiʿ, 1:2.

¹²⁰ Al-'Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāḥ, 27; idem, al-Tabşira wa al-tadhkira, 1:67; al-Nawawī, al-Taqrīb, 6; Ibn Jamāʿa, 130; al-Bulqīnī, 159; al-Harawī, Jawāhir al-uşūl, 21; al-Sakhāwī, Fath al-mughīth, 1:63–4.

¹²¹ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 149.

¹²² Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīh al-anzār, 40; see n. 120.

stamp of approval, one need not provide an isnād when citing it. The Shāfi'ī hadīth scholar Abū Muhammad al-Husayn b. Mas'ūd al-Baghawī (d. 516/1122), dubbed "the Reviver of the Sunna (muhyī alsunna)," demonstrated how the Sahīhayn canon could simplify the use of hadīths in the religious life of regular Muslims. He explains that his most famous work, the pietistic manual Masābīh al-sunna, is culled from the books of the great hadith imāms to help people implement the Prophet's sunna in daily life. The work is small and portable, for a very simple reason: al-Baghawī omits the contents' isnāds. Instead, the author divides the hadīths in each chapter into two sections, "authentic (sihāh)" and "good (hisān)." The authentic section consists only of reports from al-Bukhārī and Muslim, while the less reliable "hisān" hadīths come from the collections of al-Tirmidhī, Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī and other respected compilers. The reader thus relies on the source of the hadīths to know their reliability. Those coming from the Sahīhayn are considered automatically authentic, whereas al-Baghawi states that he will alert the reader to any weaknesses in the hadīths of the "good" section.123

It is clear that in cities like Damascus in the early seventh/thirteenth century, inclusion in the Sahīhayn exercised potent authority among the everyday Muslims al-Baghawī was targeting. Even the laity held the contents of the two works in unique veneration. A common layman, for example, asked Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ for a legal ruling about the ḥadīth "He who repents for a sin is like one without sin (al-tā'ib min al-dhanb ka-man lā dhanb lahu)," inquiring whether or not it was in the Ṣahīḥayn and how it relates to the issue of that person's legal competence.¹²⁴ Of the twenty-one recorded requests that the Shāfi'ī prodigy al-Nawawī (who began his studies in the wake of Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's death and remained firmly within his orbit in ḥadīth study), received from everyday citizens of Damascus asking if a certain ḥadīth was authentic or not, the scholar employs the Ṣahīḥayn in four responses (most are negative).¹²⁵ One questioner even inquires directly if the Ṣahīḥayn or other famous collections include any non-authentic hadīths. Al-Nawawī replies that all the hadīths of al-Bukhārī and Muslim are authentic, while the Sunans of Abū Dāwūd, al-Tirmidhī and al-Nasā'ī include varied levels of weak and sound hadīths.¹²⁶

¹²³ Abū Muḥammad al-Ḥusayn b. Mas'ūd al-Baghawī, Maṣābīḥ al-sunna, 2 vols in 1 vol. (Beirut: Dār al-Qalam, [197–]), 1:2.

¹²⁴ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Fatāwā Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ (Cairo: Maktabat Ibn Taymiyya, [1980]), 19. Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ replies that the ḥadāth was not in al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's collections nor does it have a firm isnād (isnād thabt).

¹²⁵ Al-Nawawī, Fatāwā al-imām al-Nawawī, 177–192. For example, one person asks about whether the hadīth "lā şalāt li-jār al-masjid illā fī al-masjid" is in the Şahīhayn; ibid., 191.

The referential role of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon even facilitated the study of hadīth among aspiring young students. Zayn al-Dīn al-ʿIrāqī produced a manual using the Ṣaḥīḥayn in the same manner as al-Baghawī but designed it for students of hadīth. In the introduction to this book, his Taqrīr al-asānīd fī tartīb al-masānīd, al-ʿIrāqī explains that he has collected a selection of hadīths for his son, since a student of hadīth needs to memorize a number of reports in order to dispense with carrying heavy loads of books. Since in his time chains of transmission had grown too long to have any significant number of one's own living isnāds to the Prophet, al-ʿIrāqī states that he has collected hadīths from the books of early scholars (al-mutaqaddimūn) instead. If the hadīth appears in the Ṣahīḥayn, he states, he provides no isnād, because its authenticity is "agreed on (mutafaq ʿalayhi)." If the report is not found in al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's works, he provides isnāds from other major collections.¹²⁷

3. The Need for an Exemplum: Aristotle's Poetics and the Canon that Sets the Rule

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim were not just used to prove the authenticity of Prophetic reports, but also to authoritatively shape the study of hadīth. Just as the Şahīhayn canon served as a trump card in debates over individual hadīths, so did scholars like al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī and Ibn al-Ṣalāh employ it to elaborate the tenets of hadīth transmission, criticism and its applications in deriving law. As Stanley Fish notes in his discussion of the durability of literary canons, "If Shakespeare is on your side in an argument, the argument is over."¹²⁸ In this sense both Shakespeare's works and the Ṣahīḥayn are canonical in that they are standards that can be employed to set the rules of a genre. They are the kanòn to be imitated, the exemplum in whose ingenious pages lie the methods of mastering a science. Aristotle thus employs Homer's Iliad and Odyssey

¹²⁶ Al-Nawawī, Fatāwā, 177.

¹²⁷ Al-Irāqī, Taqrīb al-asānīd fī tartīb al-masānīd, ed. 'Abd al-Mun'im Ibrāhīm (Riyadh: Maktabat Nizār Mustafā al-Bāz, 1419/1998), 14.

¹²⁸ Fish, 12–15.

in his exposition of the proper components and characteristics of epic poetry. Amid his discussion of how well Homer embodied excellence in this genre, he states, "Homer deserves acclaim for many things, but especially because he alone among [epic] poets is well aware of what he himself should do."¹²⁹ For Aristotle, Homer's conscious mastery of his art provides the ultimate example for appreciating and writing epic. Homer's unparalleled methods themselves act as Aristotle's proof texts. As Fish realizes, a text thus becomes canonical when a community recognizes that it is the thing to which "all workers in the enterprise," or, in Aristotle's case, the genre, "aspire."¹³⁰

Just as Aristotle invoked Homer, prominent architects of the hadīth tradition declared al-Bukhārī and Muslim the exemplum that sets the rule. Ibn Hajar states that "there is no doubt about the preeminence of al-Bukhārī and Muslim over both the people of their own time and those who came after them from among the imāms of that science in terms of knowledge of authentic and flawed hadīths...." If someone opposes their work or their judgment on authenticity, "there is no doubt that [al-Bukhārī and Muslim] supersede all others in this." "Objection," he adds, "is thus fended off from them globally...."¹³¹ Al-Hāzimī describes al-Bukhārī as the best of his time in hadīth collection and criticism, "and in light of the certainty of his station in these matters there is no way to object to him in that subject."¹³² Ibn Taymiyya (d. 728/1328) states that not even Ibn Khuzayma or Ibn Hibbān approach al-Bukhārī's mastery. As the result of his consummate skill, in the vast majority (jumhūr) of instances in which someone criticized material that al-Bukhārī approved, "his [al-Bukhārī's] opinion is more favored than those of his detractors."133 Al-Maqdisī stated that the Sahīhayn had become "proofs for the people of Islam (hujja li-ahl al-islām)." He claims that hadīth scholars since their time have thus focused on commenting on and studying the two books, since it is not possible to add anything more to that science $(san^{\circ}a)$.¹³⁴

¹²⁹ Aristotle, "Poetics," in The Norton Anthology of Theory and Criticism, ed. Vincent B. Leitch (New York: W.W. Norton Co., 2001), 112.

¹³⁰ Fish, 12–15.

¹³¹ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 502.

¹³² Al-Hāzimī, Shurūt al-a'imma al-khamsa, 59.

¹³³ Ibn Taymiyya, Majmū^c al-fatāwā, 1:256.

¹³⁴ Muhammad b. Ţāhir al-Maqdisī, Kītāb al-jam' bayn kitābay Abī Naṣr al-Kalābādhī wa Abī Bakr al-Işbahānī, 2.

One of the most obvious areas in which al-Bukhārī and Muslim impacted the rules of hadith criticism was the definition of 'authentic' reports. Al-Baghawi testified to this when he equated the Sahihavn with authentic hadīths in general. One of the flaws that could undermine the authenticity of a hadīth was "irregularity (shudhūdh)." The definition of 'irregular (shādhdh)' hadīths, according to the consensus of Sunni hadīth scholars by the eighth/fourteenth century, was a report that contradicted a more reliable source, such as a better-attested hadīth or a verse of the Qur'ān.¹³⁵ Some earlier scholars like al-Khalīlī, however, had defined shādhdh much more broadly, and thus more dangerously, as a report whose only flaw is that it is narrated through only one chain of transmission. Here al-Khalīlī had followed his teacher al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, who wrote that shādhdh hadīths are those narrated by a trustworthy (thiga) transmitter but whose text is not corroborated (asl mutāba') from his source.¹³⁶ Later scholars such as Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ and Ibn Hajar fiercely rejected al-Khalīlī's definition because it would compromise prevailing understandings of the definition for authentic hadīths. Ibn al-Ṣalāh uses two hadīths "included in the Sahīhavn" that would fall under al-Khalīlī's definition to prove that his definition was flawed. Ibn Hajar underscores this objection, arguing that not even al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's methodologies could live up to what al-Khalīlī had proposed.¹³⁷ Ibn Hajar offers his final definition for sahih hadiths thus: "a report whose isnād connects to the Prophet via the narration of totally upstanding transmitters in command of what they transmit or, if not totally, supported by others like them, and is not shādhdh or afflicted with a flaw (mu'all)." Significantly, he immediately adds that he has tailored this definition specifically to al-Bukhārī and Muslim. He explains: "I say this because I have considered many of the hadīths of the Sahīhayn and have found that the ruling of sahīh cannot be conferred upon them without this [definition]."¹³⁸

¹³⁵ See al-Nawawī, al-Taqrīb, 12; al-Dhahabī, al-Mūqiza, 42; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bāʿith alhathīth, 48–50; al-Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 88; Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīh al-anzār, 150–4; al-Sakhāwī, Fath al-mughīth, 1:244–8.

¹³⁶ Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 13. Here al-Khalīlī states that, contrary to al-Shāfiʿī's opinion (and that of later orthodoxy), a shādhdh hadīth is not one that disagrees with a more reliable source, but rather what "has only one isnād (laysa lahu illā isnād wāḥid)"; al-Ḥākim, Maʿnʿfat ʿulūm al-ḥadīth, 148.

¹³⁷ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 40. For more on this debate, see Ibn Rajab, Sharḥ Ilal al-Tirmidhī, 1:450–62. Ibn Rajab maintains that al-Bukhārī, Muslim and others like al-Shāfi'ī defined shādhdh and munkar differently than al-Ḥākim and al-Khalīlī.

¹³⁸ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 134.

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim were also frequently invoked as the exemplum that set the rules of selecting acceptable hadīth transmitters. In his Kifāya fī 'ilm al-riwāya, al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī states that the general practice among hadīth scholars is not to accept any criticism of a narrator unless the critic has explained the reasons for his objection. He proves this point by explaining that "this was the practice of the imāms from among the masters of hadīth and critics such as Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī and Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj al-Naysābūrī."¹³⁹ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ follows al-Khaṭīb, invoking Muslim's use of impugned transmitters, such as Suwayd b. Sa'īd, and al-Bukhārī's reliance on 'Ikrima, Ibn 'Abbās's pro-Khārijite client.¹⁴⁰

The Sahihayn canon, however, was a double-edged sword that could be wielded by parties at odds with one another on the proper rules of hadīth criticism. The case of accepting reports from heretics (mubtadi^c) clearly illustrates this. Some early scholars like al-Shāfi'ī generally permitted narrating from them, while more strict critics condemned it. A middle ground formed with scholars like Mālik and Ibn Hanbal who accepted hadīths transmitted from heretics provided they were neither extremists nor proselvtizers.¹⁴¹ The Shāfi'ī legal theorist of Baghdad, Ahmad b. 'Alī Ibn Barhān (d. 518/1124), defended the Shāfi'ī school's stance on the issue. He states that one can accept reports from all heretics except the extremist Shiite group, the Khattābiyya, and Shiites who rejected the first two caliphs (Rāfida).¹⁴² As proof, Ibn Barhān invokes the umma's consensus on the authenticity of the Sahīhayn: al-Bukhārī and Muslim included hadīths narrated from Qadarites like Qatāda b. Di'āma and the Khārijite 'Imrān b. Hittān, so it must be permissible for others to imitate them.¹⁴³

Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, however, employs the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon to espouse what became the more strict mainstream opinion. Like Ibn Barhān, he states that rejecting the narrations of all heretics (mubtadiʿūn) is untenable because al-Bukhārī and Muslim rely on them in both their primary (usul)

¹³⁹ Al-Khatīb, al-Kifāya, 1:338.

¹⁴⁰ Ibn al-Salāh, Muqaddima, 221.

¹⁴¹ For a summary of this, see al-Khatīb, al-Kīfāya, 1:384 ff.; Ibn Rajab, Sharh Tlal al-Tirmidhī, 1:53–56.

¹⁴² For a discussion of the Khatțābiyya, see W. Madelung, "Khatțābiyya," EI^2 . Al-Dhahabī explains that al-Shāfiī had not allowed narration from these groups because they allowed lying; al-Dhahabī, al-Mūqiza, 85.

¹⁴³ Ahmad b. ʿAlī Ibn Barhān, al-Wuṣūl ilā al-uṣūl, ed. ʿAbd al-Ḥamīd ʿAlī Abū Zayd, 2 vols. (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 1404/1984), 2:184–5.

and auxiliary (shawāhid) hadīths. He adds, however, that the Sahīhayn do not include proselytizing heretics, from whom transmission would be forbidden.¹⁴⁴

The Şaḥīḥayn canon did not only serve as an exemplum that could be employed to set the rules of hadīth criticism. The two works could also be referred to in order to elaborate how Prophetic hadīths should be employed in deriving law. In his al-Wuṣūl ilā uṣūl, for example, Ibn Barhān describes the case advanced by some Ḥanafī scholars for the broad acceptance of mursal ḥadīths in deriving law. Arguing against transmission-based scholars who generally considered a mursal ḥadīth to be flawed due to the break in its isnād, these Ḥanafīs had supposedly claimed that the aṣḥāb al-ḥadīth had in fact accepted mursal reports. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim, they argued, had even included many mursal hadīths in their *Ṣaḥīḥ*s.¹⁴⁵ This claim was, of course, highly erroneous. The Ṣaḥūḥayn are certainly not replete with mursal hadīths, and Muslim himself specified that mursal ḥadīths were not acceptable proofs (ḥuija) in the introduction to his collection.¹⁴⁶

The Limits of the Canon's Authority: The Dialogic Power of the Ṣaḥīḥayn

The power of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon stemmed from the assertion that the absolute authenticity of the hadīths they contained would validate one's stance in argument or exposition. Although Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī's statement obliging scholars to rule on issues according to the contents of Ṣahīḥayn had allowed for the possibility of interpreting a hadīth in a manner that could neutralize its legal import, this did not obscure the thrust of his declaration: ruling against a hadīth from the two books was tantamount to breaking consensus. Abū Naṣr al-Wā'ilī and al-Juwaynī reinforced this claim by affirming the absolute authenticity of the two collections. Al-Ghazālī's remark that a jurist must rule according to the Ṣahīḥayn or break with $ijm\bar{a}$ merely represented the crystallization of this edifice of authority built around the Ṣahīḥayn in the first half of the fifth/eleventh century.

¹⁴⁴ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqaddima, 299–300.

¹⁴⁵ Ibn Barhān, al-Wuşūl ilā al-uşūl, 2:179.

¹⁴⁶ Muslim, Sahāh, 1:24. This claim is so ludicrous that it is difficult to believe that any educated Hanafī would make it. It may be that Ibn Barhān was unwittingly engaging in a 'straw man' argument.

The power of the canon, however, was a facade that could only intimidate or convince those confronted with it from outside. It was an illusion conjured and maintained in the relative space between adversaries in the arena of debate, or between author and intended reader in expository writing. An individual Hanafi jurist or Ash'arī theologian felt no compunction about ignoring or rejecting a hadīth from al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's books if it clashed with his own position. As the great Hanafī legal theorist Abū al-Hasan al-Karkhī (d. 340/952) proclaimed, his default position (asl) is that any Qur'anic verse or hadith that "contradicts the stance of our school (ashabina) is assumed to have been either abrogated or set aside in favor of another (tuhmalu 'alā al-naskh aw 'alā al-tarjāh)."147 Such policies led the Damascene scholar Ţāhir al-Jazā'irī (d. 1920) to note incisively, "The jurists interpret away (vu'awwilūn) any hadīth that disagrees with their madhhab, or oppose it with another hadīth even if it is not well-known, even if that [first] hadīth is found in the Sahīhayn."148

In general, it was not uncommon for Muslim scholars engaged in debate to insist on a rule in one context, then invert it in order to defend their school's stance in another. Ibn al-Jawzī, for example, adhered to the Hanbalī school that had led the campaign for the admission of $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths in elaborating dogma as well as law. When responding to the Shiite claim that 'Ā'isha was guilty of unbelief (kufr) for fighting 'Alī, however, Ibn al-Jawzī changed positions. He argued that the hadīth cited by Shiites as evidence for this, "You will fight him (i.e., 'Alī) and you will be wrong (satuqātilīnahu wa anti zālima)," "is all by reports of limited attestation ($\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$)," and "is thus not epistemologically certain by this means (lā yuqta'u bi-mithlihi)."¹⁴⁹

Treatises on the legal theory reveal the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon's limited existence in relative space. In general, uṣūl books from both the Ḥanafīs and the 'Majority' (al-jumhūr) school espoused by Shāfi'īs, Mālikīs and most Ḥanbalīs offer nothing but silence about the place of the Ṣaḥīḥayn in Islamic epistemology. Even al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, a Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī ḥadīth scholar who was very aware of the rhetorical power of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon, reserves no place for it in his Kītāb al-faqīh wa al-mutafaqqih (Book of the Jurist and Law Student), a work designed to familiarize hadīth scholars with $us\bar{u}l$ al-fiqh. Although he notes that $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīths agreed upon by the umma yield certainty (ilm), he dismissingly relegates "the sunan and the sahīh books (sihāh)" to the category of reports that convey only probability (zann).¹⁵⁰

¹⁴⁷ Al-Karkhī, al-Uşūl allatī 'alayhā madār furū' al-hanafiyya, 84–5.

¹⁴⁸ Al-Jazā'irī, Taujīh al-nazar ilā uşūl al-athar, 1:320. Khalīl Mullā Khāțir agrees; Mullā Khāțir, Makānat al-Ṣaḥīḥayn, 154.

¹⁴⁹ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 15:296.

One of the few instances in which the epistemological standing of the Sahīhayn is mentioned at all in an usūl work is a denial of any special status. Discussing the well-established fact that āhād hadīths yield only probability, the Shāfi'ī legal theorist Ibn Barhān (d. 518/1124) rejects the opinion of "some ashāb al-hadīth" who say that the authenticity of what is narrated in the Sahīhayn is absolutely certain (maqtū 'bi-sihhatihi).¹⁵¹ He explains that al-Bukhārī and Muslim were not infallible (ma'sūm 'an al-khata'), since hadīth scholars have criticized their work and found errors (awhām). If their works were epistemologically certain, this would be impossible. Ibn Barhan further rejects any exceptional status for the Sahihayn by arguing that the only evidence supporting this claim, the acceptance of their hadīths by consensus, does not prove their absolute authenticity. The Muslim community accepted the two books because they felt that their contents were legally compelling; but not all that is legally compelling is absolutely authentic.¹⁵² Although Ibn Barhān attributes this opinion to more extreme transmission-based scholars, he is in effect demolishing the argument made by his fellow Shāfi'ī/Ash'arīs Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāvīnī and al-Juwaynī. The irony of this situation lies, of course, in Ibn Barhān's above-mentioned claim about narrating from heretics, where he invokes the umma's agreement on the Sahīhayn to prove his point. The power of the canon thus appears only in the dialogic space of debate and exposition. Even within the scope of one book like Ibn Barhān's al-Wuşūl, a scholar can wield the canon's authority against opponents in one instance and then circumscribe it in other, less combative settings.

Although ignored or contested in uşūl works, the source and degree of the Şaḥūḥayn canon's authority as originally declared by Abū Isḥāq al-Isfarāyīnī was finally properly acknowledged by Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ in the seventh/thirteenth century. In several of his ḥadīth works, he states that the authenticity of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's ḥadīths "is absolutely certain, and epistemologically certain discursive knowledge

¹⁵⁰ Al-Khatīb, Kītāb al-faqīh wa al-mutafaqqih, 1:278.

¹⁵¹ Ibn Barhān, al-Wuşūl ilā al-uşūl, 2:172–3.

¹⁵² Ibn Barhān, al-Wuşūl ilā al-uşul, 2:174.

('ilm yaqīnī nazarī) occurs with [them]."¹⁵³ He exempts from this claim, however, that "small amount of material (aḥruf yasīra)" criticized by major scholars like al-Dāraqutnī, since one could not claim consensus on its authenticity.¹⁵⁴

Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's claim proved a tempting foil for later hadīth scholars, who have devoted a great deal of energy to arguing for or against its validity. Those who have supported the notion that the contents of the Ṣaḥāḥayn yield certain discursive knowledge include prominent figures such as Ibn Taymiyya, Ibn Kathīr, al-Trāqī, al-Bulqīnī, and the major formulators of the late Sunni tradition: Ibn Ḥajar al-ʿAsqalānī, al-Sakhāwī, Zakariyyā al-Anṣārī (d. 926/1520) and Ibn Ḥajar al-Haythamī (d. 974/1597).¹⁵⁵ More recently, modern scholars such as Khalīl Mullā Khāțir have joined these ranks. Those who have disagreed with his claim have been far fewer in number: Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's virtual disciple, al-Nawawī, his opponent al-ʿIzz b. ʿAbd al-Salām, Badr al-Dīn Ibn Jamāʿa (d. 733/1333), and the Salafī maverick Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl al-Amīr al-Ṣanʿānī (d. 1768).¹⁵⁶

Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's claim, however, has done little to earn the Ṣahāḥayn any special absolute status in Sunni epistemology. Although this discussion has attracted the attention of generations of ḥadīth scholars, it has not spread beyond the limited genre of the technical study of ¹⁵³ Ibn al-Şalāh went through several phases in his opinion on this issue. He states in his Muqaddima that he had originally believed that the hadīths of the Şahīhayn, like all āhād reports, yield only probability (zann). Later he realized that the infallible consensus of the umma on the two works meant that what seemed like probability was in fact certainty. In this work and in his Şiyānat Ṣahīh Muslim, Ibn al-Ṣalāh asserts this for the contents of both al-Bukhārī and Muslim, not just the hadīths that they both agreed on. His follower, al-Nawawī, tells us that in another (earlier?) work (juz') Ibn al-Ṣalāh stated that the truthfulness of what al-Bukhārī and Muslim both included is absolutely guranteed. Ibn Ḥajar quotes this from Ibn al-Ṣalāh's lost sharḥ of Muslim; al-Nawawī, Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 1:128; Ibn Ḥajar, al-Nukat ʿalā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 112; see n. 154 below.

¹⁵⁴ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Siyānat Ṣahīḥ Muslim, 85; idem, Muqaddima, 170-1.

¹⁵⁵ Ibn Taymiyya, Majmū fatāwā; 1:25; 618:20; idem, 'Ilm al-hadīth, ed. Mūsā Muḥammad 'Alī ([Cairo]: Dār al-Kutub al-Islāmiyya, 1404/1984), 100; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bā ʿth al-hathīth, 30; al-Bulqīnī, 172; Ibn Ḥajar, Nuzhat al-nazar, 29 (Ibn Ḥajar adds another qualification to this claim, namely that it only applies to what is in the Ṣahīḥaym but does not contradict their other contents);al-Sakhāwī, Fatḥ al-mughīth, 1:74 (he follows Ibn Ḥajar); al-Anṣārī, Fatḥ al-bāqī, 83–4 (he also follows Ibn Ḥajar); Aḥmad b. Muḥammad Ibn Ḥajar al-Haythamī, al-Fatāwā al-ḥadīthiyya, 2nd ed. (Cairo: Maṭbaʿat Muṣṭafā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1390/1970), 92.

¹⁵⁶ Al-Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 38; al-Nawawī, al-Taqrīb, 6; Ibn Jamā'a, 128–9; al-Şan'ānī, Thamarāt al-nazar fī 'ilm al-athar, ed. Rā'id b. Şabrī b. Abī 'Alafa (Riyadh: Dār al-ʿĀṣima, 1417/1996), 131, 137.

hadīth science (muṣṭalaḥāt al-ḥadīth). Uṣūl texts, treatises on madhhab law, theology or ḥadīth-based legal derivation (what is referred to as fiqh alsunna) rarely go beyond the established references to āhād or mutawātir as epistemological classes for reports. The general inconsequence of the discussion surrounding Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's statement is further revealed by the argument of his opponents. Far from constituting any massive assault on the canon, al-Nawawī's rebuttal of Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ actually affirms the canonical role of the Ṣahīḥayn. Like Ibn Barhān, al-Nawawī (who is followed by Ibn Jamā'a) only rejects the notion that the community's collective acceptance of the Ṣahīḥayn renders their contents epistemologically certain. The fact of this consensus on the two works stands uncontested, as does their compelling power in debate. Al-Nawawī affirms this; the special status of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections resides in the fact that their contents have been lifted above the need for critical examination.¹⁵⁷

The undeniable proof of the relative nature of the canon's authority, however, lies in the willingness of legal or theological schools to unhesitatingly ignore or criticize a hadīth from the Sahīhayn if it counters their positions. When this stems from a disagreement over the interpretation of a hadith, it entails no transgression of the canon's authority. The Hanafis al-Sarakhsi and al-Nasafi had, after all, asserted that muhaddiths were not qualified to appreciate the true legal implications of their hadīths. On the question of tasriya, or tying the udders of a milk-animal-for-sale in order to temporarily increase its milk and attract buyers, Hanafis rejected explicit reports from al-Bukhārī's Sahīh discouraging the practice. While both al-Bukhārī and the Shāfi'ī school followed a hadīth that granted a buyer deceived by such a scheme the right to a refund and an amount of dates in compensation, Hanafis held that the original sale was valid. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Bukhārī explicitly states that this hadith is authentic and found in the Sahihayn. Yet it contradicts juridical reasoning based on the Qur'an and sunna and thus cannot be acted on. According to Hanafi jurisprudence, the Qur'an and juridical reasoning dictated that a transaction only requires the health or good quality of the item sold (salāmat al-mabī^{\circ}). A paucity of milk does not compromise this.¹⁵⁸

¹⁵⁷ Al-Nawawī, Sharh Sahīh Muslim, 1:128.

¹⁵⁸ A sizable minority opinion within the Hanafī school, following the work of Ibn Abān, requires a narrator to have sufficient legal mastery of the material he transmits in order for his hadīth to supersede qiyās. Abū Hurayra, who is the Companion who

The Mālikī Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī also asserted the jurists' right to disagree with the legal implications of hadīths from the Ṣaḥīḥayn or their authors' legal assumptions. He states that "al-Bukhārī is deferred to in the science of hadīth, but not in jurisprudence (ʿilm al-fiqh)....' Al-Bājī then refers to some of al-Bukhārī's chapter titles to show how he did not derive the correct rulings from his hadīths and that he might even have sometimes hunted for proof texts to support his own legal opinions.¹⁵⁹

Not all rejections of hadīths from the Sahīhavn, however, stemmed from differences in interpretation. Adherents of legal and theological schools sometimes actually criticized their authenticity. The Hanafi school, for example, rejected material from both Sahīhs if their narrations proved too problematic. Hadīths dealing with the issue of the Prophet's prayer in the event of an eclipse (hadīth al-kusūf), for example, proved exceptionally difficult to reconcile with one another. When an eclipse surprised the Muslim community, the Prophet left his house and convened a public prayer. The hadīths detailing his prayer, however, disagree on the number of times the Prophet bowed $(ruk\bar{u})$. The Hanafī hadīth scholar al-Zayla'ī attempts to navigate the impossibly confused web of conflicting matns for these hadīths in his Nash al-rāya, where he presents the contradictory reports from within the Sahīhavn and the other Six Books. The most reliable version according to al-Zayla'i is that narrated by 'Ā'isha describing only one bow, while the others have two, three, four or five bows.¹⁶⁰ As a result, the Indian Hanafi Muhammad 'Abd al-Hayy al-Laknawī (d. 1886-7) concludes that his transmits this hadīth, is not considered so qualified. See, for example, al-Shāshī, Uşūl al-Shāshī, 272; 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Ahmad al-Bukhārī, Kashf al-asrār, 2:381. For discussions of taṣriya, see Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 4:458–60; al-Laknawī, Zafar al-amānī, 66. For this hadīth, known as hadīth al-muşarrāt; see Fath # 2148; Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-buyū', bāb al-nahy li'l-bā'i' an lā yuḥaffila al-ibil.

¹⁵⁹ Nāşir al-Dīn Ahmad b. Muḥammad b. al-Munayyir al-Mālikī, al-Mutawārī ʿalā abwāb al-Bukhārī, ed. ʿAlī Ḥasan ʿAlī ʿAbd al-Hamīd (Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1411/1990), 36. See also, al-Kirmānī, Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, 1:5 for the author's opinion.

¹⁶⁰ Al-Zayla'ī, Naşb al-rāya, 2:225–31. 'Ā'isha's narration can be found in Fath # 1058, Şahīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-kusūf, bāb lā tankasifu al-shams li-mawt aḥad. For a brief sample of the conflicting narrations of this tradition, see: Şaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-kusūf, bāb tūl al-sujūd fī al-kusūf, bāb al-şalāt fī kusūf al-qamar, bāb al-rak'a al-ūlā fī al-kusūf a'wal; Şaḥīḥ Muslim: kitāb al-kusūf, bāb salāt al-kusūf, bāb mā 'urida ṣalā al-Nabī (s) min amr aljanna wa al-nār, bāb dhikr al-nidā' bi-şalāt al-kusūf ṣalāt jāmi'a; Sunan Abī Dāveūd: kitāb al-istisqā', bāb man qāla arba' raka'āt.

school had abandoned the Ṣaḥīḥayn's ḥadīths on this issue, since they had "become grossly problematic (idtaraba idtirāban fāhishan)."¹⁶¹

Perhaps the most starkly partisan criticism of a hadīth in the Sahīhayn, however, occurs at the hands of the Shāfi'ī school that had played such an important role in canonizing the two works. Muslim includes a narration by the Companion Anas b. Mālik in which he states that he had prayed behind the Prophet and the first three Caliphs but had heard none of them say the basmala out loud. Shafi'is from the time of al-Dāraqutnī and al-Bayhaqī criticized this narration from Sahīh Muslim, which explicitly contradicted the madhhab's stance on the basmala. After a lengthy chapter in his al-Sunan al-kubrā featuring hadīths showing that one should say the basmala aloud during prayer, al-Bayhaqī has a chapter on hadīths arguing the opposite. For each tradition (cluster of narrations) opposing his school's stance, he finds some problem undermining its reliability. Al-Bayhaqī notes that the hadīth of Anas (narrated via al-Awzā'ī ← Qatāda b. Di'āma) is featured in Sahīh Muslim, and he mentions that this and several other narrations through Qatāda all have sections specifically saying that "I did not hear any of them say Bismillah al-Rahman al-Rahim ... " or "and they did not say [it] ... out loud." Al-Bayhaqī rebuts these narrations, however, by arguing that others had narrated this hadīth from Shu'ba ← Qatāda ← Anas without the explicit negation of the basmala. Relying on al-Dāraqutnī's opinion, al-Bayhaqī favors this latter version of the hadīth, which al-Bukhārī includes in his Sahīh.¹⁶²

Oddly, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ literally uses Muslim's narration through Anas as a textbook example of a flaw (illa) occurring in the text of a ḥadīth, an example that became enshrined in the pedagogical Alfyya poem that al-Irāqī composed for ḥadīth students based on Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's Muqaddima. Following the takhrīj ranking system, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ favored the version of the ḥadīth agreed upon by both al-Bukhārī and Muslim, without

¹⁶¹ Al-Laknawī, Zafar al-amānī, 400; al-Qanūbī, al-Sayf al-hādd, 111. The Ḥanafīs stuck with the "default in prayer (al-aṣl fī al-ṣalāt)" namely that $ruk\bar{u}$ 'occurs only once (al-tawahhud fī al-rukū').

¹⁶² Al-Bayhaqī, al-Sunan al-kubrā, 2:73–76, kitāb al-salāt / bāb man gāla lā yajharu bihā; Şahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-salāt / bāb 240 / hadith #1; al-Bayhaqī, Ma'rifat al-sunan wa al-āthār, 1:524; al-Dāraquṭnī, Sunan al-Dāraquṭnī, ed. 'Abdallāh Hāshim al-Madanī, 4 vols. in 2 (Cairo: Dār al-Maḥāsin li'l-Ṭibā'a, 1386/1966), 1:316. Al-Dāraquṭnī does not note that any of these narrations appear in Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, nor does he include this criticism in his Kītāb al-tatabbu'.

Anas's addition of "not one of them said [the basmala] out loud." He further undermines Anas's narration by citing one Sa'īd b. Yazīd asking Anas about the basmala, to which Anas replies, "indeed you have asked me about something on which I have memorized no [hadīths], nor has anyone before you asked."¹⁶³ Later, prominent Shāfi'īs such as al-'Irāqī, Ibn Ḥajar and al-Anṣārī followed Ibn al-Ṣalāh's argument.¹⁶⁴

Scholars like Ibn Hajar could not conceal the clear partisan motivations for criticizing Muslim's report and noted that opinions on its authenticity break down along madhhab lines between those who affirm saying the basmala out loud and those, like the Hanafis, who do not. As a Shāfi'ī, Ibn Hajar ultimately sided with Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's criticism of Muslim. Consequently, his Hanafī nemesis in Cairo, Badr al-Dīn al-'Aynī (d. 855/1451), mocked him for rejecting a perfectly valid narration he otherwise would have considered authentic.¹⁶⁵

Leading Ash'arī theologians such as al-Bāqillānī, al-Juwaynī and al-Ghazālī also severely criticized a ḥadīth appearing in both the Ṣaḥīḥayn in which the Prophet prays for the forgiveness of the most flamboyant hypocrite (munāfiq) in Medina, the Khazraj leader Abdallāh b. Ubayy.¹⁶⁶ Ibn 'Umar narrates that when the Prophet went to pray over the deceased 'Abdallāh's grave, 'Umar b. al-Khaṭṭāb objected. He reminded the Prophet that God had forbidden Muslims from praying for the forgiveness of hypocrites, referring to the Qur'ānic verse, "Pray for their forgiveness or do not pray, even if you pray seventy times God will not forgive them (Qur'ān: 9:80)."¹⁶⁷ The Prophet replies that in the verse God had "given [him] a choice (khayyaranī Allāh)," and that he "will exceed seventy [times]."

¹⁶³ Ibn al-Şalāh, Muqaddima, 261. Al-Trāqī remarks how bizarre it is for Ibn al-Şalāh to use a ḥadīth from Muslim as an example of a flawed narration after asserting that everything in the Ṣahīthayn is absolutely certain. He justifiably explains this, however, by adding that Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ had exempted from this claim material that had been criticized by great critics like al-Dāraquṭnī; al-Trāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāḥ, 98.

¹⁶⁴ Al-Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 98, 100; Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 2:289–91; al-Anṣārī, Fath al-bāqī, 198–200; cf. Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, al-Tamhīd, 2:228–31.

¹⁶⁵ Ibn Hajar, Intiqād al-i'tirād fī al-radd 'alā al-'Aynī fī sharh al-Bukhārī, ed. Hamdī b. 'Abd al-Majīd al-Salafī and Subhī b. Jāsim al-Sāmarrā'ī, 2 vols. (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 1413/1993), 1:369. For a discussion of Ibn Hajar's astonishingly 'academic' rivalry with al-'Aynī, see Anne F. Broadbridge, ''Academic Rivalry and the Patronage System in Fifteenth-Century Egypt: al-'Aynī, al-Maqrīzī and Ibn Hajar al-'Asqalānī," Mamlūk Studies Review 3 (1999): 85–108.

¹⁶⁶ See Şahāh al-Bukhārī: kitāb tafsīr, sūra 9, bāb 13; Şahāh Muslim: kitāb al-tafsīr/sūrat al-Tawba/Bāb 13.

¹⁶⁷ "Istaghfir lahum aw lā tastaghfir lahum, in tastaghfir lahum sab ina marrat^{an} fa-lan yaghfira Allāhu lahum."

This hadīth caused a great uproar amongst Ash'arī theologians and legal theorists, because it implied that the Prophet felt that he could circumvent the command implicit in the verse, namely not to pray for hypocrites. Ibn Hajar explains that a number of prominent scholars had therefore attacked the authenticity of the hadīth despite its widespread narrations and the Shaykhayn's agreement on it. He quotes Nāṣir al-Dīn Ahmad Ibn al-Munayyir (d. 683/1284), who states that Abū Bakr al-Bāqillānī said, "It is not possible to accept the hadīth or that the Prophet said it." In his Taqrīb, al-Bāqillānī supposedly said that "this hadīth is one of the āhād reports whose soundness (thubūtuhā) is not known."¹⁶⁸ Al-Juwaynī says in his Burhān that "the ahl al-hadīth have not deemed this sound."¹⁶⁹ Al-Ghazālī agrees in his Mustasfā, asserting that "this is an āhād report (khabar wāḥid) that cannot be used to establish proof (hujja) for the implications of speech (fī ithbāt al-lugha); besides, it is more probably (zahara) not şaḥīḥ."¹⁷⁰

Ironically, al-Ghazālī's objection to this hadīth demonstrates the paradox of the Sahihayn canon and its restriction to relative space. Although he undeniably questions the authenticity of this hadīth in his Mustasfā, earlier in his Mankhūl he had defended it. There he insists that the Prophet's actions in the hadith neither compromised the truth of the Qur'anic verse nor the reliability of the report. God had given him the choice to ask for forgiveness or not.¹⁷¹ Al-Ghazālī wrote his Mustasfā many years after the Mankhūl, and it is possible that he simply changed his opinion on the hadīth. Context, however, provides a more convincing explanation. The Mankhūl is generally a polemical work directed at the Hanafī school. In it, the hadīth about the Prophet praying for 'Abdallāh's forgiveness plays a role in the author's defense of the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī notion of "mafhūm al-kalām," or methods for deriving the indirect legal implications of a divine injunction. Specifically, al-Ghazālī is defending this notion against Hanafi critics who reject the authenticity of the hadīth and thus its applicability as evidence for mafhūm al-kalām, a type of proof considered invalid among Hanafis.¹⁷² In his Mustasfā, a

¹⁶⁸ I was unable to find the statement quoted by Ibn Hajar in al-Bāqillānī's Kitāb al-tamhīd or the 1413/1993 Mu'assasat al-Risāla edition of his al-Taqrīb wa al-irshād; Ibn Hajar, Fatḥ al-bārī, 8:430–1.

¹⁶⁹ Al-Juwaynī, al-Burhān, 1:458.

¹⁷⁰ Al-Ghazālī, al-Mustasfā, 2:87. For my rendering of mafhūm and lugha, see Bernard Weiss, The Search for God's Law, 117; Hallaq, A History of Islamic Legal Theories, 58.

¹⁷¹ Al-Ghazālī, al-Mankhūl, 212.

 $^{^{172}}$ For a discussion of a Hanafī perspective on one of the dimensions of mafhūm al-kalām, dalīl al-khitāb (i.e., the indirect implication from an injunction, so that if the pedagogical tool written many years later after al-Ghazālī had sworn off debate and returned to teaching at the Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarī-dominated Naysābūr Niẓāmiyya, he could comfortably question material that seemed to contradict the tenets of Ashʿarī theory.¹⁷³ As a young firebrand polemicist in Baghdad, however, the writer of the Mankhūl had to defend his Shāfiʿī school against its Ḥanafī opponents.¹⁷⁴

Conclusion

In the mid-fifth/eleventh century, the Sahīhayn canon stood ready to fulfill important functions for Muslim scholars in cities like Baghdad and Naysābūr. Studied extensively by the Sahīhayn Network, focused by al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī into a measure of authenticity and authorized by scholars like Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī, Abū Naşr al-Wā'ilī and al-Juwaynī, the Sahīhayn provided an important convention for scholarly debate and exposition. In a time when the legal discourse of the madrasa was drifting farther and farther from the specialized study of hadīth, the two works became the most authoritative hadīth references for jurists more narrowly focused on law. Whether used in polemics or to buttress the proof texts relied on by a particular school in the language of a common convention, the Sahīhayn served as the measure of authenticity for prominent Shāfi'īs, Hanbalīs and Mālikīs from the mid-fifth/eleventh century on. In the eighth/fourteenth century even the hadith-wary Hanafi school found itself grudgingly forced to adopt the common measure of authenticity. The canon's authority, however, was not absolute. It was a collaborative illusion summoned to provide common ground among rivals. Alone, within a particular legal or theological school, the authoritative edifice of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's hadīths collapsed before interpretive differences or partisan agendas.

260

Prophet says pay tithe on a certain kind of sheep one need not pay it on others), see Marie Bernand, "Hanafī Uṣūl al-fiqh through a Manuscript of al-Ğaşşāş," 628; Aḥmad b. 'Alī Ibn al-Saʿātī (d. 694/1294–5), Nihāyat al-wuṣūl ilā 'ilm al-uṣūl, ed. Saʿd b. Gharīr b. Mahdī al-Sulamī, 2 vols. (Mecca: Jāmiʿat Umm al-Qurā, 1418–19/1997–99), 2:560 ff.

¹⁷³ For al-Ghazālī's oath never to engage in debate again, see J. Brown, "The Last Days of al-Ghazzālī," 95.

¹⁷⁴ 'Abbās Eqbāl, ed., Makātīb-e fārsī-ye Ghazzālī beh nām-e fadā'el al-anām min rasā'el hojjet al-eslām (Tehran: Ketābforūshī-ye Ibn Sīnā, 1333/[1954]), 12; George F. Hourani, "A Revised Chronology of Ghazali's Writings," Journal of the American Oriental Society 104, no. 2 (1984): 290–1, 301.

The vaunted station of the two books, however, was not simply due to the declarations of scholars like al-Isfarāyīnī or al-Wā'ilī. Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works consistently bested other respected collections used for takhrij by meeting the highest levels of excellence established by the Sunni hadīth tradition as it reached its full maturity between the fifth/eleventh and seventh/thirteenth centuries. Implicit in this success, however, lay the potential for serious tension surrounding the place and role of the Sahīhayn canon. Although scholars attempting to systematize the Sunni study of hadīth like al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī and Ibn al-Salāh often employed the Sahīhayn as the exemplum that set the rule, the Sunni hadith tradition operated according to rules external to the two books. As exemplified by the reaction to Ibn al-Salāh's attempt to replace the living isnād with the Sahīhayn, here lay the seeds of tension between the continuing practice of hadith critics and the institution of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. If the canon was to maintain its air of compelling authority in the arena of discourse, a canonical culture would have to be forged to extend the two books the charity required to reconcile this tension.

CHAPTER SEVEN

THE PRINCIPLE OF CHARITY AND THE CREATION OF CANONICAL CULTURE

Introduction

By the end of the fifth/eleventh century, the Sahīhayn had become synonymous with authenticity in Sunni discussions of the Prophet's legacy as well as an exemplum of excellence in hadīth scholarship. The institution of the canon, however, faced potent challenges from two different fronts. First, the pre-canonical past of the two works was fraught with fissures. The initial negative reactions to the sahīh movement, al-Bukhārī's checkered career and the fact that Naysābūr scholars had ranked Muslim's collection above that of al-Bukhārī all threatened the stability of the canon. Second, there existed inconsistencies between al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's work on the one hand and the conventions of hadīth criticism on the other. In the post-canonical world, these inconsistencies created a tension between the institution of the canon and the Sunni hadīth tradition as it matured fully in the early seventh/thirteenth century.

To protect and maintain the canonicity of the Sahīhayn would require reconciling the canonical vision of the two works and the personas of their authors with both their pre-canonical past and the external rules of hadīth scholarship. This would entail reading the texts of al-Bukhārī and Muslim according to the Principle of Charity, which calls for interpreting a text in the best possible light in order to bring into harmony external notions of truth and those presupposed within the text. Just as Davidson described the Principle of Charity's function in speech communities, so would participants in elaborating Sunni scholarly culture treat the texts of al-Bukhārī and Muslim with charity "in order to preserve a reasonable theory of belief" in the canon.¹

The worldview that demands the extension of charity to canonical texts can be termed the books' canonical culture. It is the environment created and cultivated by the community to which the canon is bound, by an audience that recognizes that "canonizing a text...requires a commitment to make the best of it."2 Canonical culture rereads history and text to reconcile them with canonical authority. The saga of al-Bukhārī and Muslim can thus be viewed as a process of creating and maintaining the Sahīhavn canonical culture, which emerged with the canonization of the two works in the late fourth/tenth and early fifth/eleventh centuries. The earliest surviving elaboration of the canonical culture consists of the image of al-Bukhārī and Muslim forged by al-Khațīb al-Baghdādī (d. 463/1071). The personas of the two scholars that he crafts in his Tārīkh Baghdād established the dominant themes of the Sahīhayn canonical culture: the place of al-Bukhārī, Muslim and their works at the pinnacle of hadith scholarship; the vindication of al-Bukhārī from the scandal of the created lafz; al-Bukhārī's superiority to Muslim; and the simultaneous complementary relationship between the two. Even after constructing the Sahihayn canonical culture, however, generations of scholars would resort to interpretive gymnastics and editorial revisions of history in order to maintain it.

¹ Davidson, 196.

Mirroring the canonical culture established around the personas of al-Bukhārī and Muslim was the extension of charity to the texts of the Ṣaḥīḥayn themselves. Both before and after their canonization, the collection and criticism of ḥadīth functioned according to rules that were external to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works. As the Sunni ḥadīth tradition became increasingly systematized with the writings of al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī, and even more so with those of Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ (d. 643/1245), the conventions of ḥadīth scholarship emerged as an institution with which the canon stood in potential tension. Examining the issues of obfuscation in transmission (tadlīs) and the criticism of transmitters, we shall see that the Ṣaḥīḥayn sometimes fell short of the established standards of ḥadīth scholarship. Preserving the authority of the canon thus depended on charitable interpretations of the works that exempted them from these rules.

Divergences between the methods of the Shaykhayn and other hadīth critics had manifested themselves concretely in critiques of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, such as that of al-Dāraquṭnī. Protecting the canonical culture would thus require three of its great proponents, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, al-Nawawī and Ibn Ḥajar, to employ the Principle of Charity and their mastery of the hadīth tradition to resolve these outstanding criticisms of the canon.

² Halbertal, 28.

CHAPTER SEVEN

The Beginnings of Canonical Culture: Between 390-460/1000-1070

From the evidence available, the canonical culture surrounding the Sahīhavn seems to have emerged in Baghdad in the period between al-Dāraqutnī's career in the mid- to late fourth/tenth century and that of al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī in the mid-fifth/eleventh. Considering the direct relationship that Halbertal posits between the canonicity of texts and the charity with which they are treated, it is no surprise that the construction of a canonical culture surrounding the Sahīhavn began at the same time as the emergence of the canon itself. Between approximately 390/1000 and 460/1070 the hadith-scholar environment in Baghdad transformed from an openess toward criticism of the Sahīhayn to a canonical culture that demanded the extension of charity to al-Bukhārī and Muslim. Although Ibn 'Ammār al-Shahīd, al-Ismā'īlī and al-Dāraqutnī had all exhibited profound interest in al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections, they had no compunction about criticizing the Sahīhayn if they felt their authors had erred. Neither did these fourth/tenth-century scholars feel obliged to qualify or apologize for such critiques. Their evaluations merely represented an aspect of scholarly interest in the Sahīhayn, two works that did not differ ontologically from any other hadith book. Only after their canonization had endowed al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections with an authoritative role and significance for communal identification did criticizing the works or their authors pose any threat.

The construction of the Sahīhayn canonical culture first becomes evident in the work of al-Dāraqutnī's student Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī (d. 401/1010–11), a member of the Baghdad knot who penned a work defending Sahīh Muslim against some of al-Dāraqutnī's criticisms. His Kītāb al-ajwiba (Book of Responses) might have been nothing more than an exercise in objective scholarship: al-Dāraqutnī had made certain criticisms that Abū Mas'ūd believed were incorrect. In the work, however, it becomes immediately clear that Abū Mas'ūd's agenda bears far more significance: he aims primarily at exonerating Muslim's scholarly legacy from any sort of blame. Even when he admits that al-Dāraqutnī's critiques are correct, for example, he tries to deflect the blame from Muslim to transmitters in the isnād. "And as for attributing the oversight to Muslim among the others, no...," he states in one case.³ In two instances of inappropriate Addition, Abū Mas'ūd admits that al-Dāraquṭnī was correct in objecting to Muslim's inclusion of the narration. He defends Muslim, however, by saying that he did not have the correct version at his disposal. If he did, he would have taken it instead.⁴ In three instances he argues charitably that Muslim included the problematic version only to demonstrate its flaw.⁵

³ Abū Masʿūd al-Dimashqī, Kitāb al-ajwiba; 152, 321.

Abū Masʿūd's defensiveness about Muslim's work stands in stark contrast to al-Dāraquṭnī's impartial study.⁶ At one point in the Kitāb al-ajwiba, al-Dāraquṭnī criticizes a narration noted by Muslim but acknowledges that the scholar ultimately decided to leave it out of his Ṣaḥūḥ. For al-Dāraquṭnī, whose scholarly interest lay in identifying flawed narrations regardless of where he found them, this was still worthy of note. Abū Masʿūd, however, objects angrily, "So if he left it out, what is the meaning of attributing error to him [Muslim] in this!?"⁷

Within a few decades of al-Dāraqutnī's death the charity called for by Abū Mas'ūd had become expected. In Baghdad, the canonical culture surrounding al-Bukhārī in particular seems to have gelled by approximately 450/1060. The writings of al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī indicate a prevailing expectation of charity in discussing al-Bukhārī's works among ḥadīth scholars. Al-Khatīb composed a book dealing with the overall problem of mistaken identities in biographical dictionaries of ḥadīth transmitters, titling it Kītāb mūdiḥ awhām al-jam' wa al-tafrīq (The Book of Clarifying Errors of Conflation or Distinction). Although this work criticizes a whole slew of ḥadīth scholars, al-Khatīb opens the book with a mistake made by al-Bukhārī in his al-Tārīkh al-kabīr. He follows this with a fascinating statement:

⁴ Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī, Kitāb al-ajwiba; 168, 212.

⁵ Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī, Kitāb al-ajwiba; 159, 180, 188.

⁶ Yet we know that Abū Mas'ūd also criticized some narrations in Ṣaḥāḥ Muslim in his Atrāf al-Ṣahāḥayn. These criticisms, however, seem to have been restricted to Muslim's auxiliary narrations (mutābi'āt/shawāhid) or to have been citations of earlier criticisms such as those of al-Dāraquṭnī. On one such occasion, Abū Mas'ūd vaguely notes a "disagreement" on one of five auxiliary narrations Muslim provides for his two principal narrations of a ḥadīth in which the Prophet tells his followers not to kill an enemy if they have professed faith in Islam. In another case Abū Mas'ūd ollows al-Dāraquṭnī in criticizing one of Muslim's narrations for omitting a transmitter. These criticisms are preserved in the surviving elements of al-Dīmashqī's Atrāf and also in Abū 'Alī al-Ghassānī al-Jayyānī's al-Tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fi Ṣaḥīḥ al-imām Muslim. See, al-Jayyānī, al-Tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fi Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim: kitāb al-īmān, bāb taḥrīm qatl al-kāfir ba'da an qāla lā ilāh illā Allāh), 76. See also, Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī, Atrāf al-Ṣaḥāḥayn; 3b, 26b.

⁷ Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī, Kitāb al-ajwiba, 264.

It may be that some people who read these lines will assume the worst of us, believing that we intend to impugn our predecessors, exposing the faults of our venerable shaykhs and the scholars of yesteryear. Far from it, for by the beams of their light do we see, and by following in their clear footsteps do we distinguish [truth from falsehood]. Indeed, it is by their well-worn path that we circumvent error. Our relationship to them is nothing more that what Abū 'Amr b. 'Alā' (d. 154/771 or 157/774) said (he gives an isnād): 'Compared to those who have come before us, we are nothing but a tiny root on the base of a great date palm.' Indeed, when God creates luminaries among men and raises up a leader for each community, he requires those whom they guide to adhere to the truth that they illuminate. [Yet] God obliges those who stand by the truth and follow in their footsteps and are blessed with understanding to illuminate what [earlier scholars] neglected and to correct their oversights. This, because [these earlier scholars] were not immune to mistakes and were not totally protected from the ugly face of error. This is the right of the learned scholar over the student, and the obligation of those who follow to those who precede. We hope that this apology will be clear to whomever comes upon our book, the History of the City of Peace (Tārīkh Baghdād)..., for in it we have presented, from among the virtues of al-Bukhārī, material sufficient to clear away any suspicion of our opinion of him as well as any accusations concerning our correcting his errors...."⁸

Al-Khaṭīb continues with a quote from al-Muzanī, saying, "If a book were looked over seventy times there would still be a mistake in it, for God has not permitted that any book be şaḥīḥ except His Book (i.e., the Qur'ān)." He quotes Ibn Ḥanbal's son 'Abdallāh as saying, "I read a book to my father [for checking] thirteen times, and on the fourteenth time he came up with a mistake, so he put the book down and said, 'Indeed I have denied that any book could be perfectly correct (yaṣiḥḥa) except the Book of God most high.'"⁹

Al-Khatīb's tortured apology for even minor criticisms of al-Bukhārī's identification of hadīth transmitters reflects an intense anxiety over reactions to his work and the powerful canonical culture that evidently surrounded the scholarly persona of al-Bukhārī by that time. Al-Khatīb's homily invoking the sacred duty of scholarly vigilance, phrased in the idiom of the hadīth student's pietistic reverence for his teachers, represents an effort to counterbalance the charity the author feels he is expected to show al-Bukhārī. By referring his readers to the formidable accolades he grants al-Bukhārī in his Tarīkh Baghdād (whose biography is perhaps the longest of any figure in the work), al-Khaṭīb seeks to placate potential critics by calling their attention to his contribution and obedience to the canonical culture. Read against the grain, al-Khaṭīb's agonized preemptive defense suggests a scholarly atmosphere totally different from the one in which al-Dāraquṭnī, a fellow Shāfi'ī of Baghdad, had freely criticized al-Bukhārī less than a century earlier. When students asked him about several dozen transmitters from the Ṣaḥīḥayn that al-Nasā'ī (d. 303/915) had criticized, al-Dāraquṭnī bluntly seconded most of al-Nasā'ī's evaluations.¹⁰ Although al-Dāraquṭnī's Kītāb al-tatabbu' contains serious and substantive criticisms of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, its author felt no need to justify or apologize for his critique.

⁸ Al-Khațīb, Kitāb mūdih awhām al-jam' wa al-tafrīq, 1:5-6.

⁹ Al-Khatīb, Kitāb mūdih awhām al-jam' wa al-tafrīq, 1:6.

We cannot be sure of exactly whom al-Khațīb was so wary in his minor criticisms of al-Bukhārī. We know that he faced consistent intimidation from the Ḥanbalīs, from whose ranks he had defected and who publicly questioned his transmission-based Sunni allegiance.¹¹ Considering the ferocity with which the Shāfiʿī Abū Masʿūd al-Dimashqī had defended Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ, however, we can easily imagine that al-Khațīb's fellow Shāfiʿī ḥadīth scholars in Baghdad may have aroused his concern just as much as the Ḥanbalīs. We do not know when al-Khațīb wrote the Kītāb mūḍiḥ al-awhām, so we cannot know precisely what forces were affecting him at that point in his career. Based on the absence of any apologies in al-Dāraqutnī's critique of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, the vehemence of Abū Masʿūd's eventual rebuttal of his teacher and finally al-Khaṭīb's writing, we can conclude that in Baghdad a canonical culture arose around the Ṣaḥīḥayn between 390/400 and al-Khaṭīb's death in 463/1071.

The Character of the Canonical Culture: Al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī and Defining the Personas of al-Bukhārī and Muslim

The canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim is a question of how the Muslim community has viewed these two scholars' legacies. Their historiographical personas thus form as much a part of the text of the canon as their actual books. The extent to which Islamic civilization has identified the Ṣaḥāḥayn with their respective authors is illustrated by their agency in the formulaic statement "al-Bukhārī/Muslim included it..." or equating the works with their compilers in common phrases such as "the ḥadīth is in Muslim." Indeed, the skill, piety and critical rigor of the two scholars served as the basis on which their authority was founded. Questioning al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's judgment or devotion to the Prophet's legacy thus constituted a threat to the Ṣaḥāḥayn canon itself. Although al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī's apology did not even involve al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥāḥ per se, the idea of criticizing that expert's judgment in his al-Tārīkh al-kabīr proved sufficiently alarming to prompt an apology.

¹⁰ See al-Dāraquṭnī, "Dhikr aqwām akhraja lahum al-Bukhārī wa Muslim fī kitābayhimā wa da"afahum al-Nasāī," MS Ahmet III 624, Topkapı Sarayı, Istanbul: fols. 253a–254b.

¹¹ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:225.

Al-Khaţīb's biographies of al-Bukhārī and Muslim provide our earliest extant expressions of the canonical culture surrounding the Shaykhayn. As al-Khaţīb himself informs us, he intended his biography of al-Bukhārī in the Tārīkh Baghdād to describe the scholar with the proper reverence. Although al-Khalīlī's brief biographies of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as well as fragments of al-Ḥākim's entries have survived, the Tārīkh Baghdād offers us the earliest complete and, indeed, selfconscious expression of the Ṣaḥāḥayn canonical culture. The majority of biographies in the Tārīkh Baghdād consist only of reports from earlier sources that al-Khaţīb presents through their isnāds. As a result, his role in crafting al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's biographies is that of an editor who constructs an image of the two scholars by choosing selectively from the vast pool of historiographical raw material about them.

Like all later Sunni biographers, al-Khatīb freely ladled out hyperbolic descriptions of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's virtues, as well as those of other great scholars such as Ibn Hanbal. There was never a dearth of praise for the guardians of the faith. Al-Khatīb therefore leaves the reader with no doubt as to al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's prodigious memories, piety or mastery of hadīth. What concerns us here is not the mere quantity of positive evaluations, however, but rather the picture that such praise paints, the contours of the personas it shapes or the unspoken problems it intends to address. A canonical culture must reconcile the history that was with the history that should have been. The culture that al-Khatīb elaborates thus directly addresses the most prominent issues in the saga of the Sahīhayn: the proper relationship between the Shaykhayn and the greatest generation of their teachers, appropriately acknowledging the accomplishment represented by the Sahīhayn, al-Bukhārī's scandal of the lafz of the Qur'ān, and the proper ranking of al-Bukhārī and Muslim.

We have seen the problem that al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's superlative scholarship presented for the atavistic logic of the hadīth-scholar community in the tale of al-Bukhārī plagiarizing his Sahīh from his teacher. Scholars such as Ibn Abī Hātim and al-Rāmahurmuzī did not perceive the Sahīhayn or their authors as superseding the greatest generation of Ibn Hanbal, Ibn Ma'īn and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī. It was not until the writings of Ibn Manda (d. 395/1004–5) that al-Bukhārī, Muslim and the sahīh movement as a whole began to be seen as the pinnacle of the hadīth tradition. The Sahīhayn canonical culture would have to correct this imbalance.

Al-Khatīb's treatment of al-Bukhārī and Muslim thus leaves little doubt about their superiority over their teachers. He cites one Ahmad b. Abī Bakr al-Madīnī as asserting that al-Bukhārī possessed better legal acumen (afgah) and was more perceptive (absar) than Ibn Hanbal. When someone objects to this provocative statement (as al-Khatīb's reader might), al-Madanī replies, "If you looked at al-Bukhārī and Mālik you would see they were the same in juristic knowledge and hadīth."¹² Ahmad b. Naşr al-Khaffāf is quoted as saying that al-Bukhārī is more knowledgeable than Ishāq b. Rāhawayh and Ibn Hanbal by twenty degrees.¹³ Ahmad b. 'Abdallāh b. al-Bukhārī, the great scholar's grandson, heard his grandfather say that he did not humble himself (istasghara) in the presence of anyone except 'Alī b. al-Madīnī, but admitted that "perhaps I still mentioned hadīths he did not know (ugharribu 'alayhi)."14 Al-Khaţīb relies on a narration through al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī from Muslim's colleague Ahmad b. Salama, who saw "Abū Zur'a and Abū Hātim al-Rāzī place Muslim before the shavkhs of their time in the knowledge of authentic hadīths."15

¹² Al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:19; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:86; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:256; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 667.

¹³ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:27; Ibn Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:78; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:221, 225 (this includes an additional description of al-Bukhārī as "al-taqī al-naqī al-ʿālim alladhī lam ara mithlahu"); cf. Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, ed. Fu'ād Sayyid et al. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1405/1985), 11:29; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 671.

¹⁴ Al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:17; Ibn 'Adī, Asāmī, 125 (without the comment about knowing more hadīths); Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Tabaqāt al-hanābila, 1:311; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:81–2; al-Hasan b. Muḥammad al-Ṣaghānī (d. 650/1252), Asāmī shuyūkh Abī 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. Ismā îl b. Ibrāhīm b. al-Mughīra al-Bukhārī, ed. 'Alī b. Muḥammad al-ʿImrān ([Mecca]: Dār 'Ālam al-Fawā'id, 1419/[1998]), 2; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:252; al-Ṣafadī, al-Wāfī bi'l-wafayāt, vol. 2, ed. S. Dedering (Istanbul: Maţba'at Wizārat al-Maʿārif, 1949), 208; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 669.

¹⁵ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:102; al-Ghassānī, al-Tanbīh, 27; al-Qādī Iyād,

In the case of al-Bukhārī, his disgrace at the hands of the über-Sunnis in the lafz scandal had tarnished his name in the eyes of prominent architects of the hadīth tradition, such as Ibn Abī Hātim al-Rāzī. The narrative constructed by al-Khatīb, however, is one of vindication in which al-Bukhārī righteously stood by what would become the orthodox position on the Qur'ān.¹⁶ As the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī al-Subkī later explains, "Every reasonable person knows that our wordings are from among our deeds, and that our deeds are created, and that thus our wordings are created."¹⁷ Al-Bukhārī's contemporary Muhammad b. Khushnām is invoked as a witness that al-Bukhārī denied the accusation that he believed the Qur'an itself was created, insisting instead that the acts of men are created. He states that he will not change his position until proven wrong.¹⁸ For al-Bukhārī, certain of the truth of his position, "the complimenter and the detractor are the same."¹⁹ Al-Khatīb relies on al-Hākim for the comeuppance of the amīr of Bukhara, who had used al-Bukhārī's stance on the lafz of the Qur'ān to expel him from the city: he was imprisoned less than a month later by the Abbasid caliph in Baghdad. As for Hurayth b. Abī al-Waraqā', the Hanafi scholar whose assistance the amīr had enlisted in condemning al-Bukhārī, members of his family were afflicted by suffering too terrible to describe.20 To further assure al-Bukhārī's orthodox standing, al-Khatīb narrates a report through al-Hākim that invokes Ikmāl al-mu'lim, 1:79; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:89–90; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣahīḥ Muslim, 61; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:184; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:37.

¹⁶ For the Ash'arī exposition of this stance, see al-Bayhaqī, Kitāb al-asmā' wa al-sijāt, 2:17 ff.; al-Juwaynī, Textes apologétiques de Čuwaini, ed. and trans. Michel Allard (Beirut: Dar al-Machreq, 1968), 146. By the mid-fifth/eleventh century even moderate Hanbalīs, such as Ibn al-Farrā', acknowledged that the wording of the Qur'ān was created; Ibn al-Farrā', al-Masā'il al-'aqdiyya, 77 ff. Ibn Abī Ya'lā's biography of al-Bukhārī includes a report that does not uphold this image, but rather has al-Bukhārī telling Ibn Hanbal that anyone who says that the lafz of the Qur'ān is created is a "Jahmī kāftr." This is almost certainly an early Hanbalī attempt to exonerate al-Bukhārī, since his Khalq af'āl al-'ibād leaves no doubt that he did in fact believe that the wording of the Qur'ān was created; Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Tabaqāt al-ḥanābila, 1:259.

¹⁷ Al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:230.

¹⁸ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:29; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:94.

¹⁹ Al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:29.

²⁰ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:32; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:97; Ibn Khallikān, Wafāyāt al-a'yān, 4:190 (Ibn Khallikān provides the most copious information about the amīr's fate in Baghdad); al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:271–2; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:233; cf. Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:30; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 680; cf. Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīh sharh Mishkāt al-maşābīh (Cairo: al-Matba'a al-Maymūniyya, 1891), 1:14.

the authority of a vehement opponent of the created Qur'ān, Ibn Khuzayma, saying that "there is no one under the heavens more knowledgeable in ḥadīth than al-Bukhārī."²¹

Furthermore, al-Khaţīb portrays al-Bukhārī's accuser, the great muḥaddith Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā al-Dhuhlī, as both inferior to al-Bukhārī in the science of ḥadīth and motivated by petty jealousy. Al-Khaţīb cites al-Ḥusayn al-ʿIjlī as describing Abū Zurʿa and Abū Ḥātim al-Rāzī listening to al-Bukhārī attentively, adding that he was "more knowledgeable than al-Dhuhlī in this and that."²² Another contemporary of al-Bukhārī reports that he saw him and al-Dhuhlī walking together in a funeral procession. Al-Dhuhlī was asking al-Bukhārī questions, to which he replied with such ease it was as if he were reading one of the shortest sūras of the Qur'ān (no. 112, sūrat al-Ikhlāş).²³ Al-Khaţīb then includes two separate reports that al-Dhuhlī began attacking al-Bukhārī for his stance on the wording of the Qur'ān only after al-Dhuhlī's students began deserting him and flocking to al-Bukhārī's study circle.²⁴

The canonical culture as depicted by al-Khațīb also emphasizes what a momentous feat the compilation of the Ṣaḥīḥayn represented as well as their authors' critical stringency. He provides several reports telling us that al-Bukhārī selected his Ṣaḥīḥ from over 600,000 ḥadīths and spent ten years compiling it, intending it as "a testament (hujja) between [himself] and God."²⁵ A report from al-Firabrī tells us that al-Bukhārī

²¹ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:26; al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 93; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:65; al-Şaghānī, Asāmī, 2; al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā', 1:70; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:256; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:218; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:29; Ibn Rajab, Sharh Ilal al-Tirmidhī, 1:225; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 671; Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīh, 1:14.

²² Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:29; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:85; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:29; Ibn Ḥajar, Hady al-sārī, 670.

²³ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:30; Ibn Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:95; al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā', 1:68; al-Subkī, Ţabaqāt, 2:229; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:29; Ibn Rajab, Sharh Ilal al-Tirmidhī, 1:225; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 674; Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:134–5.

²⁴ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:29, 30; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:91; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:228.

²⁵ Al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:9, 14; Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Ţabaqāt al-hanābila, 1:256, 7; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:72; cf. Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 12:115; al-Şaghānī, Asāmī, 2; Ibn Khallikān, Wafāyāt al-a'yān, 4:190; al-Kirmānī, al-Kawākib al-darārī, 1:11; al-Şafadī, al-Wāfī bi'l-wafayāt, 2:208; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:249; al-Subkī, Ţabaqāt, 2:221; Muḥammad b. Abī Bakr Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī, Majmū' fihi rasā'il li'l-ḥāfiz Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī, ed. Abū 'Abdallāh Mish'al al-Mutayrī (Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1422/2001), 344; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 675; Ibn al-ʿImād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:134; Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīḥ, 1:13.

included only the most authentic hadīths, and that he performed ablutions and prayed two rak'as before inserting any hadīth in the book.²⁶ Again relying on a report from al-Ḥākim, al-Khaṭīb includes a report that Muslim compiled his Ṣaḥīḥ from a selection of 300,000 hadīths.²⁷ We then find the famous statement of Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī that "there is no book under the heavens more authentic than Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim in the science of hadīth."²⁸

The canonical culture also reflects the nature of the Sahāhayn canon itself. Muslim is thus clearly ranked below al-Bukhārī. Al-Khatīb includes a report narrated through al-Ḥākim in which a scholar says that he once saw Muslim asking al-Bukhārī questions like a youth before his teacher.²⁹ In one instance, Muslim was so impressed with al-Bukhārī's knowledge of ḥadīth that he almost cried.³⁰ On the same occasion, Muslim professes to al-Bukhārī, "I testify that only the jealous could hate you, and that there is none like you."³¹ In a report narrated through al-Ḥākim, Muslim comes to al-Bukhārī seeking his expertise, then kisses his forehead and calls him doctor (tabīb) of ḥadīth and its ills/flaws (literally, ʿilal).³²

²⁶ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:9. Ibn 'Adī includes a report that describes al-Bukhārī praying two rak'as before writing the chapter titles (tarājim) of his book; Ibn 'Adī, Asāmī, 61; Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Ţabaqāt al-ḥanābila, 1:256; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:72; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 12:115; cf. al-Şaghānī, Asāmī, 2; Ibn Khallikān, Wafāyāt al-a'yān, 4:190; al-Kirmānī, al-Kawākib al-darārī, 1:11; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:248 (al-Dhahabī notes that this meant before sitting down to work on his book); al-Şafadī, al-Wāfī bi'l-wafayāt, 2:208; al-Subkī, Ţabaqāt, 2:220; Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn, Majmū' fihi rasā'il, 344; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 675; Ibn al-ʿImād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:136; Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīh, 1:13.

²⁷ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:102; al-Ghassānī, al-Tanbīh, 28; Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Ţabaqāt al-hanābila, 1:311; Ibn al-Şalāh, Şiyāna Şahāh Muslim, 67; Ibn Khallikān, Wafāyāt al-a'yān, 5:194; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:185; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:37; Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:144.

²⁸ Al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:102; al-Ghassānī, al-Tanbīh, 29; al-Qādī 'Iyād, Ikmāl al-mu'lim, 1:80; Ibn al-Şalāh, Siyānat Şahīh Muslim, 68–9; Ibn Khallikān, Wafāyāt al-a'yān, 5:194; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:186; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:37; Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī, Majmū' fihi rasā'il, 330; Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:144.

²⁹ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:29; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:89; al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā', 1:70.

³⁰ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:28; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:69-70; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 675.

³¹ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:28; al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 380; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:70; al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā', 1:70; Ibn Rajab, Sharh Ilal al-Tirmidhī, 1:225; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 675; Ibn al-'Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:134.

³² Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:103; al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 141; Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Tabaqāt al-hanābila, 1:255; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:68, 58:91;

As part of the accolades he includes for Muslim, al-Khațīb provides the report of Ibn 'Uqda saying that Muslim made fewer errors than al-Bukhārī because he included fewer ḥadīths with incomplete isnāds.³³ In a rare instance of personal commentary, however, al-Khaţīb restores the proper relationship between the two books by adding that "Muslim followed in Bukhārī's footsteps and gained from his knowledge (nazara fī 'ilmihi)... and when al-Bukhārī came to Naysābūr near the end of his life, Muslim followed him around constantly."³⁴ To further counter expert opinions ranking Muslim above al-Bukhārī, al-Khaţīb quotes the great al-Dāraquţnī as stating, "If not for al-Bukhārī, Muslim would not have come or gone."³⁵ The authors of other prominent şahīh collections are also featured complimenting al-Bukhārī in particular. In one report, al-Nasā'ī says that al-Bukhārī's Ṣahīh is the best book available.³⁶ Al-Tirmidhī is quoted as calling al-Bukhārī "the ornament (zayn) of the umma."³⁷

In al-Khaţīb's treatment of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, we also notice that the two scholars, like their works, present a unified and complementary pair. Al-Khaţīb makes another personal addendum to a report of Muslim venerating al-Bukhārī, explaining that "Muslim used to defend (nādala 'an) al-Bukhārī to the point that what happened between [Muslim] and Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā al-Dhuhlī got worse (hattā awḥasha) because of him."³⁸ Al-Khaţīb includes Ibn al-Akhram's famous comment al-Ṣaghānī, Asāmī, 2 (here the author conflates the above three reports about Muslim); al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā², 1:70; al-Kirmānī, al-Kawākib al-darārī, 1:11; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:257; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:223; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:29; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 675; Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīh, 1:13.

³³ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:103; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:90; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:185; al-Şafadī, al-Wāfī bi'l-wafayāt, vol. 25, ed. Muhammad al-Hujayrī (Beirut, 1420/1999), 25:552; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:37.

³⁴ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:103; Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:144.

³⁵ Al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:103; al-Ghassānī, al-Tanbīh, 29; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:90; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 12:117; al-Ṣafadī, al-Wāfī bi'l-wafayāt, 25:552; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:187; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:37; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 676; Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīh, 1:16.

³⁶ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:9; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:74; al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā', 1:74; Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn, Majmū' fihi rasā'il, 329; Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:135.

³⁷ Al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:26; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:79; cf. al-Kirmānī, al-Kawākib al-darārī, 1:11; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:221; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:29; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 671.

³⁸ Ål-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:103. It is not obvious from the text of al-Khatīb's work that he himself made this addition, but al-Ghassānī, who had both Tārīkh Baghdād and al-Hākim's work, from which the report is cited, at his disposal, notes that al-Khatīb made this addition; Ghassānī, al-Tanbīh, 30; Ibn Khallikān, Wafāyāt al-a'yān, 5:194;

that, together, al-Bukhārī and Muslim missed very few authentic hadīths (qallamā yafūtu al-Bukhārī wa Muslim mā yathbutu min al-hadīth).³⁹

The personas of al-Bukhārī and Muslim in the Tarīkh Baghdād formed the basis for all later biographies of the two scholars. Particularly in the case of al-Bukhārī, al-Khaṭīb's work actually provided one of the two largest sources for later historians. Material from the Tarīkh Baghdād makes up approximately 47% (52/110 reports) of al-Dhahabī's comprehensive biography of al-Bukhārī in the Tārīkh al-islām, and 41% (11/27) of his entry on Muslim.

The second major source on which later biographers such as al-Dhahabī and al-Subkī drew was al-Hākim's lost $T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh$ Naysābūr. Al-Hākim served as the premier source for information about Muslim in particular, since he had been a veritable Naysābūr institution. Even al-Khatīb, who relies on al-Hākim for only half a dozen reports in the $T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh$ Baghdād's massive biography of al-Bukhārī, refers to al-Hākim for 50% (7/14) of the reports he includes in his much shorter biography of Muslim.

The Tarīkh Bukhārā (now lost) of Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. Aḥmad Ghunjār al-Bukhārī (d. 412/1021) was one of the earliest sources on al-Bukhārī, but al-Khaṭīb seems to have incorporated much of its material in the Tarīkh Baghdād through a transmission of the book from its author.⁴⁰ The other early source of original material on al-Bukhārī of which neither al-Khaṭīb nor al-Ḥākim seem to have made any use is the Tarīkh Samarqand (now lost) of Abū Sa'd 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad al-Astarābādhī (d. 405/1015). Later scholars like al-Dhahabī relied on the Tārīkh Samarqand for reports about al-Bukhārī's grave, which was in the vicinity of Samarqand. These include stories al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:188; Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:37; al-Ṣafadī, al-Wāfī bi'l-wafayāt, 25:553; Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:144.

³⁹ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:102; al-Ghassānī, al-Tanbīh, 29; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:91.

⁴⁰ See, for example, the report in which al-Bukhārī's having memorized 200,000 reports is contrasted with Ishāq b. Rāhawayh memorizing only 70,000; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:24-5; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:63-4; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:245; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:218; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 674. Also, see the report about al-Bukhārī knowing the hadīth of Basra better than Basrans; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:15-6; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 672-3. Al-Khatīb did not replicate Ghunjār's biography of al-Bukhārī in its entirety, however, since some reports appear in Ibn 'Asākir's Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:90. Al-Khatīb mentions Ghunjār's Tārīkh Bukhārā by name in the Tārīkh Baghdād as well; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 10:29.

of al-Bukhārī's enemies visiting his grave to offer repentance, and the many miraculous phenomena that transpired around his tomb (his grave, for example, emitting a perfumed scent and eventually attracting pilgrims from far and wide).⁴¹

Although we do not know exactly how al-Hākim portrayed al-Bukhārī and Muslim, the surviving elements of his Tārīkh Naysābūr emphasize the same themes as al-Khaṭīb. In fact, al-Khaṭīb relied on narrations through al-Hākim in a number of the above-mentioned reports illustrating the feat involved in producing the Ṣahīḥayn, al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's preeminence in the pantheon of ḥadīth scholars, and al-Bukhārī's vindication against his accusers.

Charity and the Maintenance of Canonical Culture

The themes that al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī emphasized—the Ṣaḥīḥayn as the pinnacle of ḥadīth scholarship, al-Bukhārī's vindication, his superiority to Muslim, and the unified front of the Ṣaḥīḥayn—would define the contours of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canonical culture from the fifth/eleventh century on. By selecting which reports to provide his readers, al-Khaṭīb's recension of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's biographies sought to bring the vagaries of history and the problematic origins of the Ṣaḥīḥayn into accord with their authoritative station in the Sunni community.

Yet several of these reports inherently challenged the canonical culture surrounding the two works. Through applying three levels of interpretive or editorial processes to them, however, the Sunni scholarly tradition was able to maintain and protect the Şaḥīḥayn canonical culture. First, the canonical culture itself exerted a subtle influence on the transmission and copying of historical works. Second, scholars resorted to interpretive gymnastics in order to reconcile the data of history with canonical culture. Finally, scholars actually edited problematic reports to fit expectations of how the Muslim community should view al-Bukhārī and Muslim.

⁴¹ Quoted from al-Şaghānī, Asāmī, 1-2; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:282; al-Kirmānī, al-Kawākib al-darārī, 1:12; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:234; cf. Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 11:30; al-Qastallānī, Irshād al-sārī, 1:39; cf. Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīḥ, 15.

a. Reinventing the Etiology: Charity and Legitimizing al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ

Compiling hadith collections devoted solely to sahih reports had been a revolutionary act, and venerable hadīth scholars like Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī had protested it. This posed a challenge to the authoritative status of the Sahīhayn, for how could the compilation of the two most authoritative collections have met with disapproval from leaders in the hadīth-scholar community? By the early sixth/twelfth century, Abdallah b. Muhammad al-Batalyawsī of Andalusia (d. 521/1127) had reinterpreted the initial reception of the Sahihayn in a manner that shifted the blame from transmission-based legal scholars like Abū Zur'a to the more reason-based 'jurists (fuqahā').' Al-Bukhārī and Muslim, he explains, had battled the forgery of hadiths until the people of their age persecuted them for it. It was this critical stringency in hadīth that "stirred up anger in the hearts of the jurists (fuqahā') against al-Bukhārī."42 By the time of al-Nawawi, however, the urge to cast the origins of the sahih movement in a better light had moved beyond reinterpreting history to revising historical reports themselves.

The impetus for the $sah\bar{u}h$ movement as described in al-Khatīb's account of al-Bukhārī's life is not completely clear. The great scholar's decision to begin compiling his $Sah\bar{u}h$ is explained in a report narrated through al-Hākim from one of al-Bukhārī's students, Ibrāhīm b. Ma'qil al-Nasafī. Al-Bukhārī recounts that, "We were with Ishāq b. Rāhawayh, and one of our companions said to us, 'If only you (plural) would compile an abridged book on the sunan of the Prophet (s) (kitābam mukhtaṣaram li-sunan al-Nabī).' That stuck in my heart, and I undertook collecting this book—namely, the $J\bar{a}mi^{c}$ (i.e., the $Sah\bar{u}h$)."⁴³ Here we see that there is, in fact, no mention of that characteristic that would distinguish al-Bukhārī's collection from previous works: its sole focus on authentic reports.

In al-Nawawī's succinct lexical reference and biographical dictionary of the Shāfi'ī school, the Tahdhīb al-asmā' wa al-lughāt, however, we find that the report has been transformed. Al-Nawawī also cites Ibrāhīm b. Ma'qil al-Nasafī's quotation from al-Bukhārī. In this version, however, a scholar says, "'If only you (plural) would collect an abridged book

276

⁴² Abū Muḥammad ʿAbdallāh b. al-Sayyid al-Baṭalyawsī, Kitāb al-tanbīh ʿalā al-asbāb allatī awjabat al-ikhtilāf bayn al-muslimīn, ed. Aḥmad Hasan Kaḥīl and Hamza ʿAbdallāh Nashartī (Cairo: Dār al-Iʿtiṣām, 1398/1978), 173.

⁴³ Al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:8.

(kitāb^{an} mukhtaṣar^{an}) of the authentic sunan of the Messenger of God (ṣ) (al-ṣaḥīḥ li-sunan al-rasūl),' and that became stuck in my heart and I undertook collecting that book."⁴⁴ This addition of "authentic" also appears in the versions of this report found in major later biographies of al-Bukhārī, such as Ibn Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī's (d. 846/1438) introduction to his commentary on al-Bukhārī, the Iftitāḥ al-qārī li-Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī.⁴⁵ Although he narrates the same report through al-Khaṭīb, in his Hady al-sārī Ibn Ḥajar makes Isḥāq b. Rāhawayh himself the one who suggests collecting the authentic reports of the Prophet.⁴⁶

In al-Nawawī's recension of the quote, we are thus led to believe that al-Bukhārī's decision to compile a collection of authentic hadīths was no longer a radical departure from tradition. Rather it was recast as a response to a need expressed by fellow scholars in the company of a senior hadīth master. In Ibn Ḥajar's recension, the suggestion comes from Ibn Rāhawayh himself, a member of the greatest generation of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's teachers.

Al-Nawawī also includes another etiology for al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ. He provides a report with no isnād in which al-Bukhārī states, "I saw the Prophet in a dream, and it was as if I were standing before him with a fan in my hand swatting the flies away from him (adhubbu 'anhu), so I asked a dream interpreter and he told me, 'You are swatting lies away from him (tadhubbu 'anhu al-kadhib),' and this is what led me to produce the Ṣaḥīḥ."⁴⁷ In his comprehensive biographical survey of Islam's first millennium, Shadharāt al-dhahab, this is the only etiology for the Ṣaḥīḥ that Ibn al-'Imād (d. 1089/1679) presents.⁴⁸ The great Meccan ḥadīth scholar, Mullā 'Alī Qārī (d. 1014/1606), also notes that this dream propelled al-Bukhārī to compile his collection.⁴⁹ The twentieth-century

⁴⁴ Al-Nawawī, Tahdhīb al-asmā' wa al-lughāt, 1:74. This version of the report seems to have circulated before al-Nawawī, however, alongside the other version. Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī mentions a permutation of this version in the mid-fifth/eleventh century, citing it through al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī. Al-Nawawī, however, seems to have been the first to have made this version of the quote the official one; al-Bājī, Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Bājī wa kitābuhu, 1:309.

⁴⁵ Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī, Majmū fihi rasā'il, 346. Like al-Khatīb, Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī cites al-Hākim (although here it is specifically al-Hākim's al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat rijāl al-Ṣaḥīḥayn). Interestingly, Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn cites both versions of the report side by side.

⁴⁶ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 7.

⁴⁷ Al-Nawawi, Tahdhib al-asmā', 1:74; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sāri, 7.

⁴⁸ Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 2:134.

⁴⁹ Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīh, 13.

Moroccan scholar Fath Allāh b. Abī Bakr al-Bannānī (d. 1934–5) concurs in his commentary on al-Bukhārī's work.⁵⁰ In this dream etiology the impetus for initiating the şahīh movement comes through direct inspiration from the Prophet himself, phrased as the hadīth scholars' commendable duty to preserve his authentic legacy.

It is important to note, however, that there was no categorical attempt to doctor the historical record. Encyclopedic and fastidious historians like Ibn 'Asākir, al-Dhahabī and Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Dihlawī (d. 1824) preserved the original wording of al-Khatīb's report and excluded the isnād-less account of al-Bukhārī's dream.⁵¹ Nor should we assume that scholars like al-Nawawī consciously altered the report originally found in Tārīkh Baghdād. In the canonical culture of the Sahīhayn, authenticity was the defining characteristic of al-Bukhārī's work. For the scholars who copied al-Khatīb's history, it would have been an understandable oversight to interpolate the adjective "sahīh" into al-Bukhārī's account. As in language, the application of the Principle of Charity means glossing over or reinterpreting momentary inconsistencies in the grammar of canonical culture. Working in the midst of the Sahīhayn canonical culture, a copyist could not be faulted for subconsciously correcting this 'oversight.'

b. Charity and Maintaining the Superiority of al-Bukhārī to Muslim

The primacy of the Sahāhayn in the Sunni vision of the Prophet's legacy represented both an act of communal consensus and the priorities that the Sunni tradition had set in elaborating the hadīth sciences. The Sunni tradition was thus heavily invested in defending the position of the two books as the acme of hadīth scholarship. Al-Shāfi't's statement that the Muwaița' was the most authentic (or useful) book after the Qur'ān thus attracted a great deal of interpretive concern. Ibn Jamā'a and Ibn Taymiyya explain that this opinion, trumpeted by Mālikīs like Ibn 'Abd al-Barr and al-Qādī 'Iyād, in no way proves the superiority of the Muwatta' to the Sahīhayn or undermines the umma's consensus on the primacy of the two books. When al-Shāfi'ī made his evaluation, they explain, al-Bukhārī and Muslim had not yet compiled their collections.⁵²

⁵⁰ Fath Allāh b. Abī Bakr al-Bannānī, Rafd al-qārī bi-muqaddimat iftitāh Ṣahīḥ al-Bukhārī (Rabat: al-Maţba'a al-Maghribiyya al-Ahliyya, 1347/[1928–9]), 7.

⁵¹ Ibn Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 52:72; al-Dhahabī, fuz' fihi tarjamat al-Bukhārī, ed. Hāshim Ibrāhīm b. Manşūr al-Hāshimī al-Amīr (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Rayyān, 1423/2002), 39; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:221; Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Dihlawī, Bustān al-muḥaddithīn fī bayān kutub al-ḥadīth wa aṣḥābihā al-'uzz al-mayāmīn, ed. and trans. Muḥammad Akram al-Nadwī (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 2002), 73–4.

More difficult was maintaining the proper relationship between the Sahāhayn themselves, which proved a persistent concern for Sunni guardians of the canonical culture. Ignoring al-Bukhārī's superiority to Muslim in matters of critical methodology threatened the received opinion and practice among hadīth scholars on issues like the acceptability of narrations communicated by the phrase "from/on the authority of ('an)." Although the vast majority of hadīth scholars recognized that al-Bukhārī had produced a more thorough and demanding work, the opinions of several respected figures broke with this consensus. Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī had said that Muslim's book was the most authentic work available.⁵³ Al-Qādī 'Iyād adds that a Maghribī scholar, Abū Marwān 'Abd al-Malik al-Tubnī (d. 456/1064)⁵⁴ mentioned that at least one of his teachers preferred Muslim's Sahāh to that of al-Bukhārī. Ibn Hajar and others mention that Ibn Hazm had also favored Muslim's work.⁵⁵

Although al-Khaṭīb had indirectly undermined this minority opinion by mustering contrary evidence from towering sages like al-Dāraquṭnī, it was Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ who first actively attempted to disarm this threat to the Ṣahīḥayn canonical culture. He explains that if Abū ʿAlī al-Naysābūrī had meant that Muslim's work was superior only in that it did not include ḥadīths with incomplete isnāds as legal commentary, this would be correct. If those scholars in the Maghrib mentioned by al-Qādī 'Iyād preferred Muslim's Ṣahīḥ because all the narrations of one Prophetic tradition are found in one place as opposed to being scattered throughout the work, this would also be a valid point. Asserting that Muslim surpassed al-Bukhārī in methodology and judging authentic hadīths, however, was categorically incorrect.⁵⁶

⁵² Ibn Jamā'a, al-Manhal al-rawī, 116–7; Ibn Taymiyya, Şiḥḥat uṣūl madhhab ahl al-Madīna, ed. Zakariyyā 'Alī Yūsuf (Cairo: Maṭba'at al-Imām, [1964]), 34; al-Harawī, Jawāhir al-uṣūl, 18.

⁵³ Al-Qādī Iyād, Ikmāl al-muʻlim, 1:80.

⁵⁴ Al-Ṣafadī has his death as 456 AH; al-Ṣafadī, al-Wāfī bi'l-wafayāt, 19:163.

⁵⁵ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 13.

⁵⁶ Ibn al-Ṣalāh, Siyānat Ṣahīh Muslim, 69; al-Nawawi, Sharh Ṣahīh Muslim, 1:121.

This explanation became commonplace among later defenders of the canonical culture such as al-Nawawī and Ibn Ḥajar.⁵⁷ Al-Sakhāwī's student 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Alī Ibn al-Dayba' (fl. 900/1500) composed a verse:

People have disputed before me concerning al-Bukhārī and Muslim, which should we favor?

I said, "Indeed al-Bukhārī has excelled in authenticity, as Muslim excelled in finely crafting [his book]." 58

Ibn Hajar further attempted to neutralize Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī's comment by suggesting that no evidence existed that the scholar had ever seen al-Bukhārī's book.⁵⁹ The fact that certain Maghribī scholars preferred Muslim's *Ṣaḥī*h to that of al-Bukhārī, he continued, does not entail that Muslim's work was more reliable. Ascribing "preference (afḍaliyya)" to a work is not equivalent to ascribing it "greater authenticity (aṣaḥhiyya)."⁶⁰ Al-Subkī's defense of the canonical culture was more blunt; he stated simply that "there is no weight to the opinion of those who favor Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim to it [Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī], since that opinion is irregular (shādhdha) and is thus not to be depended on."⁶¹

c. Charity and Muslim's Meeting with $Ab\bar{u} Zur'a al-R\bar{a}z\bar{i}$

In all accounts of Muslim's encounters with Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī, the tension surrounding the notion of limiting the collection of authentic reports is palpable. When one of Abū Zur'a's colleagues introduces Muslim as the man who had collected a book of four thousand authentic traditions, numerous reports describe Abū Zur'a as objecting, "To whom (li-man)/why (li-ma) did he leave the rest?" This comment foreshadows the efforts of al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī to increase the number of authentic hadīths in circulation and reinforces the mainstream stance that al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works did not exhaust the corpus of authentic hadīths. Although Abū Zur'a's remark seems slightly critical of Muslim, in actuality it implicitly legitimizes the actions of later scholars who would use the "standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim" to

280

⁵⁷ See also, Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīḥ, 1:16, where the author replicates Ibn Ḥajar's discussion.

⁵⁸ Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Dihlawī, Bustān al-muḥaddithīn, 78.

⁵⁹ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 13; cf. idem, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 62-3.

⁶⁰ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 13.

⁶¹ Al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 2:215.

extend the authority of the canon to new material. This report thus frequently appears in later work on Muslim's Sahīh.

The most complete versions of this encounter, however, include a far more critical remark by Abū Zur⁶a. Ibn ⁶Asākir and al-Dhahabī preserve an additional section in which Abū Zur⁶a further berates Muslim in his absence for not properly respecting al-Dhuhlī. It reads:

Abū Quraysh said: We were with Abū Zurʿa, and Muslim came and greeted him. He sat down for a while and they [two] discussed (tadhākarā) hadīths. When Muslim left I said to Abū Zurʿa, "He has collected 4,000 hadīths in 'the Ṣahāḥ,'" and Abū Zurʿa said "Why did he leave the rest (li-mā taraka al-bāqī)?" Then [Abū Zurʿa] said, "He doesn't have any sense (laysa li-hādhā ʿaql); if he'd tended properly to (dārā) Muḥammad b. Yaḥyā [al-Dhuhlī] he'd have become a man."⁶²

Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's rendition of this report in his Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥāḥ Muslim min al-ikhlāl wa al-ghalat (Preserving Ṣaḥāḥ Muslim from Ruin and Error), however, excludes Abū Zur'a's critical remark about al-Dhuhlī.⁶³ This truncated version is repeated in al-Nawawī's famous commentary on Muslim's Ṣaḥāḥ and in Ibn Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī's Iftitāḥ al-qārī li-Ṣaḥāḥ al-Bukhārī.⁶⁴ These scholars' decision to omit the second part of Abū Zur'a's statement represents a defense of the canonical culture surrounding the Ṣaḥāḥayn. Not only does Abū Zur'a's comment belittle Muslim, accusing him of poor judgment as well as subordinating him to al-Dhuhlī, it also threatens the canonical version of the quarrel between al-Bukhārī, Muslim and al-Dhuhlī.

As we saw in Chapter Three, although al-Dhuhlī's attack on al-Bukhārī certainly inflamed his quarrel with Muslim, the falling out between al-Dhuhlī and Muslim was the culmination of a series of disagreements between the two. In al-Khatīb's personal commentary, however, Muslim's alienation from al-Dhuhlī centers on the former's stalwart and loyal defense of al-Bukhārī. In his Tarīkh Naysābūr, al-Hākim seconded this by reporting that only Muslim and Ahmad b. Salama had stayed with al-Bukhārī when al-Dhuhlī denounced him.⁶⁵ This ⁶² Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 12:187; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 58:93. These two versions feature the initial wording "why did he leave the rest?" Cf. al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:341 (this version includes the wording "to whom did he leave the rest?").

⁶³ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣahīh Muslim, 101.

⁶⁴ Al-Nawawī, Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 1:129; Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī, Majmūʿ fihi rasā'il, 336.

⁶⁵ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 677.

theme matured more fully in the work of Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. 'Alī al-Māzarī (d. 536/1141), who asserted that Muslim was in fact the only person who stood by al-Bukhārī when the scholars of Naysābūr turned against him.⁶⁶

Abū Zur'a's comment challenges this narrative. Indeed, it is far more congruent with the pre-canonical notion that Muslim and al-Dhuhlī were involved in a private drama between student and teacher. Abū Zur'a clearly sides with al-Dhuhlī, faulting Muslim for neither showing his teacher the proper respect nor finishing his education with him. To retain the additional section would be to undermine the scenario of al-Bukhārī and Muslim standing against a jealous and fickle mob driven by al-Dhuhlī, threatening al-Bukhārī's vindication and the united front of the Shaykhayn.

Reconciling the Canon with Convention: The Ṣaḥīḥayn and the Rules of Hadīth

Although al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī and al-Khaţīb al-Baghdādī had often invoked al-Bukhārī and Muslim as models of excellence to be followed in the collection and criticism of Prophetic hadīths, these sciences functioned according to rules external to the Ṣaḥīḥayn. Before al-Bukhārī and Muslim, generations of great critics such as Mālik b. Anas, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Mahdī and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī had sifted through thousands of ḥadīth notebooks, sorting the strong from the weak according to their own criteria. Even in the wake of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's illustrious careers, scholars like Ibn 'Ammār al-Shahīd and al-Dāraquṭnī flourished according to their own idiosyncratic methodologies. Al-Dāraquṭnī maintained standards for transmitters that sometimes proved stricter than those of al-Bukhārī, while Ibn 'Ammār al-Shahīd could require a stronger reliance on written sources than Muslim. Both upheld more stringent standards for the acceptance of Addition that those employed in the Ṣaḥīḥayn.

Even after the canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, some scholars espoused standards for the evaluation of hadīths that far exceeded those of the Shaykhayn. The Shāfi'ī legal theorist and hadīth scholar Abū al-Muzaffar Manşūr al-Samʿānī of Khurāsān (d. 489/1096), for example, proved even more rigorous than al-Bukhārī in his requirements for using "from/on the authority of (ʿan)" in transmission. Beyond the mere requirement of having met at least once, he demanded that the transmitter have studied extensively with his teacher ($t\bar{u}l al-suhba$).⁶⁷ 'Uthmān b. Saʿīd al-Dānī of Andalusia (d. 444/1053) required the scholar narrating via "ʿan" to be well-known as a narrator from that source.⁶⁸

282

⁶⁶ Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. 'Alī al-Māzarī, al-Mu'lim bi-fawā'id Muslim, ed. Muḥammad al-Shādhilī al-Nayfar, 2nd ed., 3 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1992), 1:182.

In addition to the personal methodologies of individual scholars, the Sahīhavn canon might also stand in tension with the general conventions of Sunni hadīth scholarship. This tradition reached maturity in the writings of Ibn al-Salāh, whose monumental treatise on the sciences of hadīth transmission and criticism became the basis for later studies in the field.⁶⁹ With the systematization of the hadīth tradition that began with al-Hākim and solidified with Ibn al-Salāh, hadīth scholarship acquired a unified and refined authority that could present a serious challenge to the Sahīhayn canon. The conventions of the hadīth tradition comprised a body of rules that the Sahāhayn might occasionally fail to follow. The canon fulfilled important functions in the scholarly and lay community, so how could hadith experts address instances in which the two books fell short of the standards established by the hadith tradition? This potential tension between the practice of hadith scholars and the authoritative institution of the Sahīhayn canon would have to be resolved by recourse to the Principle of Charity.

a. Charity and Tadlis

One of the most glaring areas in which the Sahīhayn occasionally ran afoul of the accepted practice of Sunni hadīth scholarship was tadlīs, or obfuscation, a phenomenon that occurred in two contexts. First, tadlīs could entail a student narrating something from a teacher with whom he had studied but from whom he had not actually heard that particular report (generally termed tadlīs al-isnād). Secondly, tadlīs could involve a student obfuscating the identity of his source (termed tadlīs al-shaykh). In both cases, tadlīs consisted of misleading others about the true immediate source of one's hadīths. The first type of tadlīs occurred commonly, and often not due to any deceptive intent. If a student attending the dictation sessions of a certain teacher excused himself to answer nature's call and later heard the material he had missed from another student, he might omit his colleague from the chain of transmission and simply state "the teacher said...." The second type of tadlīs could also be innocuous, often resulting from a transmitter assuming that his audience understood who his sources were without giving their full names. It could also, however, serve to disguise an impugned or discredited source. If a transmitter said "a notable scholar told me," he might be trying to employ a hadīth that he had actually heard from a person others considered unreliable or heretical.

⁶⁷ Al-Samʿānī, Qawāțiʿ al-adilla, 2:456-7.

⁶⁸ Ibn Kathīr, al-Bā ith al-hathīth, 45.

⁶⁹ See J. Robson, "Hadīth: the Study and Transmission of Tradition," EI².

In the wake of al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī's writings, what emerged as the regnant policy among Sunni hadīth scholars for evaluating the first type of tadlis was that one could accept a report from someone known to commit tadlis (called a mudallis) provided that he explicitly stated that he had heard the report directly $(sam\bar{a}^{\circ})$ from his source.⁷⁰ This he could accomplish by using technical terms known to denote face-to-face transmission, such as "he narrated to us (haddathanā)," "I heard from him (sami'tu)" or "he reported to us (akhbaranā)." If the mudallis used a vaguer phrase, such as "from/on the authority of ('an)" or "so and so said $(q\bar{a}la)$," the hadīth could not be accepted as authentic due to a presumed break in the chain of transmission. Ibn al-Salāh affirmed this position in his classic manual on the hadīth sciences, and no significant objection to this policy appeared. Employing the Sahīhayn as an exemplum, he stated that al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections, as well as other relied-upon books, often depended on the transmission of a mudallis if it was phrased in wording that eliminated any doubt about the continuity of transmission.⁷¹

As Ibn Hajar later noted, however, the Sahāhayn also contain numerous hadīths in which a mudallis narrates from his source via the problematic phrase "from/on the authority of ('an)." Here it seemed that al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections could not provide the evidence of continuous transmission required by convention among hadīth scholars. Only reading the Sahāhayn in the most favorable light could resolve the inconsistency between the canon and the rules of hadīth scholarship.

⁷⁰ Ibn Hibbān, Sahāh, 1:122; al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī, al-Kīfāya, 2:385–6; cf. al-Samʿānī, Qawāţiʿ al-adilla, 2:312.

⁷¹ İbn al-Şalāh, al-Muqaddima, 235; al-ʿAlāʿī, Jāmiʿ al-taḥṣīl, 111–12; al-Sakhāwī, Fatḥ al-mughīth, 1:227 ff.

Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's follower, al-Nawawī, recognized this and authoritatively declared, "Know that what is in the Ṣahīḥayn [narrated] from mudallises via [the phrase] 'an' or something like it is to be interpreted (maḥmūl) as having been established as direct transmission (samā ') via some other narration [of the ḥadīth]....⁷²

Important hadith scholars accepted al-Nawawi's extension of charity to all instances of tadlis in the Sahihayn. The Levantine Mamluk-period scholar Khalīl b. Kaykaldī al-ʿAlāʾī (d. 761/1359) treated both al-Bukhārī and Muslim with extreme charity in his definitive monograph on the issue of broken transmissions. He explains, for example, that in the case of the famous mudallis, the Successor Abū al-Zubayr Muhammad b. Muslim al-Makkī (d. 126/743-4), many senior hadīth scholars refused to use reports he narrated from the Companion Jabir b. Abdallah as proof texts. Such critics only accepted what the great Egyptian scholar al-Layth b. Sa'd (d. 175/791) had vetted from al-Makkī. Al-'Alā'ī, however, notes that Muslim's Sahīh contains numerous hadīths from Jābir \rightarrow al-Makkī that al-Layth did not narrate though this isnād. Yet he adds that it was "as if Muslim, may God bless him, was aware that these [hadīths] were from material that al-Layth narrated from [Jābir] even if he did not narrate them through his path [of Jābir \rightarrow al-Makkī]...." Al-'Alā'ī thus assumes Muslim knew that al-Layth had approved of this material even though it did not meet the standards scholars generally employed when evaluating al-Makkī's hadīths.⁷³

After providing a long list of notorious mudallises, al-ʿAlāī admits that "there are many hadīths from these [transmitters] in the Ṣahīhayn" that lack explicit evidence for direct transmission. Referring to al-Nawawī, he adds, "One imām has interpreted (hamala) this as that the Shaykhayn were aware of the direct transmission (samā^c) of the individual for that hadīth...but this is a lengthy matter (wa fihi taṭwīl)." Although al-ʿAlāʾī feels that al-Nawawī's argument is slightly tenuous, he nonetheless states that al-Bukhārī and Muslim included such reports because they had reliable evidence that their transmitters could be trusted and an uninterrupted chain of transmission guaranteed.⁷⁴

⁷² Al-Nawawī, Sharh Ṣahīh Muslim, 1:146.

⁷³ Al-'Alā'ī, Jāmi' al-taḥṣīl, 126. For his biography, see Ibn Ḥajar, al-Durar al-kāmina, 2:52.

⁷⁴ Al-ʿAlāʾī, Jāmiʿ al-taḥṣīl, 130.

Ibn Hajar categorically supports al-Nawawī's charitable treatment of the Ṣaḥāḥayn. He states that any instance of tadlās via "from/on the authority of ('an)" occurring in the primary (uṣūl) narrations of the Ṣaḥāḥayn is assumed to be a locus of direct transmission. If al-Bukhārī or Muslim included the report of a mudallis using 'from/on the authority of ('an)' in the isnād among their auxiliary (mutāba'a/shawāhid) narrations, this presented no problem since the two scholars did not uphold their rigid criteria in these cases.⁷⁵ Qutb al-Dīn 'Abd al-Karīm al-Ḥalabī (d. 735/1335) stated that all these instances of tadlās though the phrase "an" should be treated as direct transmission since "the instances of 'an in the Ṣaḥāḥayn have the status of direct transmission."⁷⁶ Al-Dhahabī even exempted "what is in Ṣaḥāḥ al-Bukhārī and similar books" from the second type of tadlās, the obfuscation of one's teacher's identity. He explains that whomever al-Bukhārī uses as a source is reliable.⁷⁷

Several hadīth scholars who exempted the Sahīhayn from the standard rules governing the evaluation of tadlīs seemed very conscious of the charity they had extended the two books. Taqī al-Dīn al-Subkī once asked Jamāl al-Dīn al-Mizzī (d. 742/1341), the compiler of the most comprehensive biographical dictionary of hadīth transmitters, if al-Bukhārī and Muslim had really made certain that all instances in their collections in which tadlīs had occurred were guaranteed by direct transmission. Al-Mizzī replied, "So it is said, but that is only out of giving the benefit of doubt (tahsīn al-zann) to these two, since otherwise there are hadīths narrated by *mudallis*es that exist only via that narration found in the Sahīh[ayn]."⁷⁸ Al-Irāqī echoes this when he explains that the umma's consensus on the Ṣahīḥayn demands that Muslims extend "the benefit of doubt (taḥsīn al-zann)" to the two works.⁷⁹

b. Charity and Transmitters

Al-Khațīb al-Baghdādī had stated that al-Bukhārī and Muslim occasionally relied on transmitters who had been previously impugned as part of his argument that such criticisms were only valid if accompanied ⁷⁵ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 255-6.

286

⁷⁶ Al-Sakhāwī, Fath al-mughīth, 1:233. For al-Halabī's biography, see Ibn Hajar, al-Durar al-kāmina, 2:243–4.

⁷⁷ Al-Dhahabī, al-Mūqiza, 50.

⁷⁸ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāh, 256.

⁷⁹ Al-Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 366.

by some explanation. Al-Khaṭīb was only invoking al-Bukhārī and Muslim as part of this larger argument, and he was wise not to claim that none of the transmitters featured in the Ṣaḥīḥayn had been criticized without good reason. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim relied on Ayyūb b. 'Ā'idh al-Ṭā'ī, for example, whom al-Bukhārī himself had accused of being a Murji'ite.⁸⁰ We have already seen the example of the arch-Khārijite 'Imrān b. Ḥiṭṭān, through whom al-Bukhārī transmitted a ḥadīth. As the fifth/eleventh century drew to a close, however, and the Ṣaḥīḥayn's role as an authoritative reference and a measure of authenticity became better established, the questionable status of some of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters emerged as a problem. If, as al-Nawawī replied in his fatwā, the Ṣaḥīḥayn contained only authentic ḥadīths, how should scholars handle the presence of impugned transmitters in the two collections?

One of al-Khațīb's students, Muḥammad b. Futūḥ al-Ḥumaydī (d. 488/1095), an Andalusian who settled in Baghdad and composed his famous combined edition of the Ṣaḥīḥayn,⁸¹ proffered the Ṣaḥīḥayn as an exemplum to be imitated in evaluating ḥadīth transmitters. The two works, in fact, provided veritable dictionaries of reliable, upstanding narrators. He asserted that the most important result of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's work was their declaration of the uprightness ('adāla) of all the narrators of the principal ḥadīths (uṣūl) included in the two books. Al-Ḥumaydī's claim was built on the canonical authority of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, for:

The testimony of those two imāms, or one of them, to that effect, and their declaring [that narrator] as saḥāħ is an assessment (hukm) that requires following, a message designed to be heeded (yata'ayyanu al-inqiyād lahu), and a cautioning (nidhāra) the disobedience of which is to be feared....⁸²

The authoritative station of al-Bukhārī and Muslim therefore demanded a charitable view of their transmitters. Al-Ḥumaydī's younger contemporary, Muḥammad b. Tāhir al-Maqdisī, echoed this, stating that even if some of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters had been criticized, inclusion in the Sahīḥayn trumps this. The Shaykhayn, he explained, only narrated from "trustworthy, upright masters (thiqa 'adl ḥāfiz) with ⁸⁰ Al-Bukhārī, al-Tārīkh al-kabīr, 1:420.

⁸¹ See al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 4:13–14.

⁸² Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. Futūḥ al-Ḥumaydī, al-Jam bayn al-Sahīḥayn, ed. 'Alī Husayn al-Bawwāb, 4 vols. (Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1419/1998), 1:76.

a strong probability of having heard from the preceding person in the isnād, except for a very few instances $(ahruf^{an})$.^{83}

It was the Mālikī hadīth scholar Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. al-Mufaddal al-Maqdisī (d. 611/1214) who demanded total charity towards al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters by declaring famously that all those included in the Sahīhayn "have passed the test (jāza al-qanțara)."⁸⁴ This principle proved axiomatic for Ibn al-Salāh a few decades later. In his Mugaddima he says that hadith scholars should not pay heed to criticism of those whom al-Bukhārī and Muslim included in the Sahīhayn.⁸⁵ In his defense of Muslim's Sahih, Siyānat Sahih Muslim, Ibn al-Ṣalāh specifically exonerates Muslim from any criticism for using weak transmitters. All such criticisms of Muslim, he argues, can be rebutted by one of four points. First, if Muslim used narrators that other experts had criticized, it is assumed $(mahm\bar{u}l)$ that the criticism was not adequately established. He adds, "And it is also probable that these are instances in which, even if the critic (jārih) did clarify his reason [for criticizing one of Muslim's men], Muslim demonstrated its falsity." Second, the weak narration may not be one of Muslim's primary hadīths, but rather one of his less rigorous auxiliary narrations (shawāhid, mutābi'āt). Third, the narrator in question may have lost his reliability only after Muslim had taken hadīths from him. Finally, referring to Muslim's explanation to Ibn Wāra, he might have used a narration with a weak transmitter because its isnād was shorter than a more reliable version.⁸⁶

Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's follower, al-Nawawī, repeated these reasons for exonerating Muslim. He concluded that although a number (jamā'a) of narrators from the Ṣaḥīḥayn have been criticized, it emerges upon reflection that trust (thiqa) is conferred upon them and that one must accept their hadīths.⁸⁷ Moreover, al-Nawawī cunningly reinterpreted al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī's aforementioned argument to provide an earlier historical precedent for treating al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters with total charity. Arguing that "criticism [of narrators] is not accepted unless it

⁸³ Al-Maqdisī, Kitāb al-jam' bayn kitābay Abī Naşr al-Kalābādhī wa Abī Bakr al-Işbahānī, 1:3.

⁸⁴ Ibn Daqīq al-Īd, al-Iqtirāḥ, 327. Ibn Daqīq does not identify al-Maqdisī beyond the fact that he is his teacher's teacher and that his name is Abū al-Ḥasan. See al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 22:66–9.

⁸⁵ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Muqaddimat, 292.

⁸⁶ Ibn al-Ṣalāh, Siyānat Ṣahīh Muslim, 96 ff.

⁸⁷ Al-Nawawī, al-Taqrīb, 17; idem, Sharh Ṣahīh Muslim, 1:134.

is explained," al-Khaṭīb had added, "for indeed al-Bukhārī relied on (iḥtajja) a number [of transmitters] who had been previously criticized by others..., as did Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj..., Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī, and more than one other....^{''88} Paraphrasing al-Khaṭīb, al-Nawawī interpreted this as the extension of complete charity to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters. He states, "Al-Khaṭīb al-Baghdādī and others have said, 'What al-Bukhārī, Muslim and Abū Dāwūd used as proof (iḥtajja bihi) from among a number [of transmitters] who had been criticized before by others, is to be treated (maḥmūl) as if no effective, explained criticism had been established.''⁸⁹

What al-Khaţīb had intended as evidence that criticisms of transmitters were not valid unless accompanied by some explanation, al-Nawawī thus transformed into an exemption of al-Bukhārī's, Muslim's and Abū Dāwūd's transmitters from any criticism. The charitable premise on which al-Nawawī bases this act of legerdemain, however, lacks credibility. As discussed above, some transmitters used in the Ṣaḥīḥayn were indeed criticized with valid explanations.⁹⁰

Al-Khaţīb al-Baghdādī was a foundational figure in the systematization of the Sunni ḥadīth tradition—Abū Bakr b. Nuqţa (d. 629/1231) elegized him by stating that "no one of sound thought can doubt that the later scholars of ḥadīth are utterly dependent on (ʿiyāl ʿalā) Abū Bakr al-Khaţīb."⁹¹ But al-Khaţīb's works provided no extension of charity to the Ṣaḥīḥayn comparable to the statements made by al-Ḥumaydī, al-Maqdisī, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ or al-Nawawī. Al-Nawawī's interpretive leap, however, grounded his exemption of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters from the conventional rules of ḥadīth criticism as articulated by al-Khaţīb. Moreover, generations of later ḥadīth scholars have treated al-Nawawī's paraphrase as the words of al-Khaţīb himself!⁹² In his book on al-Bukhārī, the modern scholar 'Abd al-Ghanī 'Abd al-Khāliq attributes the statement directly to al-Khatīb, even omitting mention ⁸⁸ Al-Khațīb, al-Kifāya, 1:339.

⁸⁹ Nawawi, Sharh Sahih Muslim, 1:134.

⁹⁰ Al-Ṣanʿānī points this out; al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīh al-afkār, 1:99.

⁹¹ Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Abd al-Ghanī Ibn Nuqṭa al-Baghdādī, Kītab al-Taqyīd li-ma'rifat ruwāt al-sunan wa al-masānīd, ed. Kamāl Yūsuf al-Ḥūt (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1408/1988), 154.

⁹² See, for example, Badr al-Dīn al-ʿAynī, 'Umdat al-qārī, ed. Idārat al-Ţibāʿa al-Munīriyya et al., 25 vols. in 12 (Beirut: Muhammad Amīn Damaj, [1970], reprint of the 1891 Cairo edition, citations are to the Beirut edition), 1:8; Mullā Khāțir, Makānat al-Ṣaḥīḥayn, 238.

of Abū Dāwūd. 93 Another present-day scholar, 'Abd al-Mu'țī Amīn Qal'ajī, has done the same. 94

In the wake of al-Nawawī's statement, many later pillars of the hadīth tradition exempted al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters from criticism. In his abridgment of Ibn al-Ṣalāh's work, the Egyptian Ibn Daqīq al-'Īd (d. 702/1302) acknowledges that some of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters have been criticized. Explaining Abū al-Hasan al-Maqdisī's famous declaration that the Ṣahīhayn's transmitters "passed the test," Ibn Daqīq states that he meant, "He pays no heed to what is said [critically] about them; this is what he believes, and this is our opinion." Ibn Daqīq thus instructs those seeking to determine whether or not a narrator is reliable to consult the Ṣahīḥayn as a dictionary of accepted transmitters. The Muslim community's consensus on the two books, its collective decision to dub them "the two Ṣahīħs" and its referral to them for rulings on authenticity make the two works the most reliable source.⁹⁵

Ibn Daqīq's student al-Dhahabī takes the same course in his even more succinct reference work on the technical terms of hadīth criticism. If someone is included in the Sahāhayn, he is automatically deemed reliable (thiqa) by that fact alone. If this transmitter appears only in al-Tirmidhī's or Ibn Khuzayma's collections, however, he merits the less lustrous rating of "good (jayyid)."⁹⁶ Al-Dhahabī further echoes his teacher: "All those included in the Sahāhayn have passed the test (qafaza al-qanṭara), and one cannot turn away from them (lā ma'dil 'anhu) except by some clear evidence (burhān)."⁹⁷ Al-Dhahabī even urges readers to ignore criticism of those transmitters from the Sahāhayn that he had included in his own dictionary of impugned narrators, the Mīzān al-i'tidāl (The Scale of Judgment). He states that these criticisms "should not be heeded," and adds that "if we open that door to ourselves, a number of the Companions, Successors and imāms would enter it."⁹⁸

Al-Dhahabī's analogy between the transmitters of the Saḥīḥayn and the Companions of the Prophet is apt, for both groups received the blanket approval of the umma. Al-ʿIrāqī recognized the comparable ^{93 &#}x27;Abd al-Khāliq, al-Imām al-Bukhārī wa Ṣaḥīḥuhu, 227.

⁹⁴ See al-'Uqaylī, Kītāb al-du'afā', 1:54 (editor's introduction).

⁹⁵ Ibn Daqīq al-Īd, al-Iqtirāḥ, 326–8.

⁹⁶ Al-Dhahabī, al-Mūqiza, 78.

 $^{^{97}}$ Al-Dhahabī, al-Mūqiza, 80. Ibn Hajar repeats this argument; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 543.

⁹⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Ma'rifat al-ruwāt al-mutakallam fihim, 45.

charity extended to these two groups when he noted that the only two classes of hadīth transmitters whose status is not affected by only having one narrator from them, which would normally render them majhūl, are the Companions and the men of al-Bukhārī and Muslim.⁹⁹

Rebutting Earlier Criticisms

The most compromising consequence of the inconsistencies between the methods employed by al-Bukhārī and Muslim in their works and those of other prominent hadīth scholars was the criticisms that venerated critics made of the Sahīhayn. The critique of the great fourth/tenthcentury hadīth scholar, al-Dāragutnī, as well as those of the Andalusian muhaddith Abū 'Alī al-Javyānī al-Ghassānī (d. 498/1105) and the North African Mālikī 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. 'Alī al-Māzarī (d. 536/1141) proved the most problematic for the maintenance of the Sahīhavn canonical culture. It was to these criticisms that the canonical culture's greatest advocates, Ibn al-Salāh, al-Nawawī and Ibn Hajar thus turned their attention. Although these three masters' inimitable command of the hadith tradition allowed them to effectively overturn many of these earlier criticisms, their defenses also relied on charitable assumptions about al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's work. Indeed the Principle of Charity imbued the notion that the Sahīhayn's auxiliary narrations were not to be held to the same standard as their primary hadiths, as well as the claim that al-Bukhārī and Muslim included problematic narrations only because they assumed their audience would know more reliable versions.

It is important to note that the canonization of the Sahīhayn did not end criticism of the two works. As we saw in Chapter Six, the very illusory nature of the Sahīhayn canon enabled criticism of its contents even as scholars wielded it against opponents. Even scholars who actively employed the Sahīhayn canon occasionally criticized a hadīth from the two books if it contradicted the doctrines of their school of law or theology. The arch-Shāfi'ī al-Bayhaqī thus criticized Muslim's report that ordered that one should not say the basmala out loud.

⁹⁹ Al-Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 123. Al-Irāqī even wrote a book on these men.

Hadīth scholars also continued to criticize items from the Sahīhayn not for partisan purposes, but as part of their unabated critical review of transmissions from the Prophet.¹⁰⁰ As al-'Irāqī had said, evaluating reports was "the muhaddiths' job." Like earlier 'ilal studies, most such criticisms involved problems in the chains of transmission of certain hadīths, such as breaks in isnāds or inappropriate Addition. Al-Māzarī thus singled out fourteen instances of broken isnāds in Muslim's Sahīh. Abū al-Husayn Hibatallāh Ibn 'Asākir (d. 563/1167–8) appended five original criticized narrations he had culled from Muslim's Sahīh to ¹⁰⁰ This critical review of the Sahīhayn also stemmed from the very nature of manuscript transmission in the pre-print world. A constant reexamination of a text was required in order to prevent errors from creeping in as students copied their teachers' books. Abū 'Alī al-Jayyānī's criticisms of al-Bukhārī and Muslim thus originated from his efforts to synchronize the variant transmissions of the two texts. Although he never left Andalusia, al-Jayyānī had access to all the major recensions of the works, and produced a book on the inconsistencies and ambiguities in the Sahāhayn's transmission. His criticisms of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's texts therefore often involve errors that had materialized during the transmission process, though he also notes mistakes made by the authors themselves. In the case of Muslim's work, he has a section on 'ilal not mentioned by al-Dāraqutnī in his Kitāb al-tatabbu'. There, for example, he criticizes Muslim for erring in the identity of a certain transmitter and inappropriate isnād Addition; al-Ghassānī, Kitāb al-tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fī Ṣahīh al-imām Muslim, 51, 55. It is important to note that many of the errors that al-Jayyānī notes occur only in Ibn Māhān's recension of the Sahīh; see ibid., 73. For al-Bukhārī, he also has a short section on ilal in what is otherwise also a book designed to compare and correlate transmissions of his Sahih; al-Ghassānī, Kitāb al-tanbīh al-awhām al-wāqia $f\tilde{i}$ al-musnad al-sahīh li'l-Bukhārī, 111–2. For studies by Muslim scholars on the transmission of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīh and the scholars who played a prominent role in editing it at different stages, see Ibn Rushavd, Ifādat al-nasīh fi al-ta rīf bi-sanad al-Jāmić al-sahīh, ed. Muhammad al-Habīb Ibn al-Khawja (Tunis: al-Dār al-Tūnisiyya, [1973]); Yūsuf b. 'Abd al-Hādī Ibn al-Mubrid (d. 909/1503-4), al-Ikhtilāf bayn ruwāt al-Bukhārī 'an al-Firabrī wa riwāyāt 'an Ibrāhīm b. Ma'qil al-Nasafī, ed. Şalāh Fathī Halal (Riyadh: Dār al-Watan, 1420/1999). For modern studies on scholars who edited the authoritative versions of Sahīh al-Bukhārī, such as the Indian who settled in Baghdad, al-Saghānī (d. 650/1252), and the Egyptian Hanbalī al-Yūnīnī (d. 658/1260), see Alphonse Mingana, An Important Manuscript of the Traditions of al-Bukhāri (Cambridge: W. Heffer and Sons, 1936); Rosemarie Quiring-Zoche, "How al-Bukhārī's Sahīh was edited in the middle ages: 'Alī al-Yūnīnī and his Rumūz," Bulletin d'Études Orientales 50 (1998): 191–222; and Johann Fück, "Beiträge zur Überlieferungsgeschicte von Buhārī's Traditionssammlung," Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft 92 (1938): 60-82 (this article has several detailed charts of the transmission of the Sahih). For a discussion of the transmission of Muslim's Sahih, see Diyā' al-Dīn al-Maqdisī, "al-Ruwāt 'an Muslim," in Juz'ān 'an al-imām Muslim b. al-Hajjāj, ed. Abū Yahyā 'Abdallāh al-Kandarī and Abū Ahmad Hādī al-Murrī (Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1416/1996); James Robson, "The Transmission of Muslim's Sahīh," Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (1949): 46-61. For a discussion of the textual authenticity and attribution of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works, see Appendix II.

the end of his copy of Ibn 'Ammār's 'ilal work.¹⁰¹ A later copyist of the same manuscript, one Muhammad b. al-Hasan b. Abī al-Fadl of Damascus (d. 630/1232–3), added one more narration he had found in his reading of Muslim for Normative Matn Addition.¹⁰² The boldest isnād criticisms of the Şahīhayn came from the great Hanbalī jurist, preacher and pious activist of Baghdad, Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200). In his famous Kitāb al-mawdūʿāt (Book of Forgeries), Ibn al-Jawzī includes at least two narrations from Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī and one from Muslim's collection due to various flaws in their isnāds.¹⁰³

Ibn al-Ṣalāh represents the first holistic champion of the Ṣahāḥayn against earlier criticisms. His commentary on Muslim's work has been lost, but much of his efforts at defending the Ṣahāḥayn have survived in his Ṣiyānat Ṣahāḥ Muslim. Although Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ tries to overturn a criticism whenever possible, his main strategy centers on invoking charity: he claims that any problematic narration of a ḥadāth either comes from al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's less demanding auxiliary narrations or that a correct version appears in authentic forms elsewhere. Although he is able to find evidence from other major ḥadāth collections to disprove one of al-Jayyānī's criticisms, he must resort to the Principle of Charity for rebutting al-Dāraqutnī and al-Māzarī.¹⁰⁴ He objects to Māzarī's statement that Muslim's Ṣaḥāḥ has fourteen narrations with breaks in their chains of transmission (inqitā'), arguing:

This falsely conveys an impression of disarray ($y\bar{u}him \ khalal^{an}$), and that is not the case. For there is nothing of that sort, praise be to God, for he [Muslim] included these [problematic narrations], especially what has been mentioned here, as auxiliary narrations ($mut\bar{a}ba'a$) and included a ¹⁰¹ Ibn 'Ammār, 143–9. The author criticized these narrations for being uncorroborated from specific transmitters Muslim had cited (tafarrud). These impugned narrations are not found among al-Dāraquṭnī's criticisms.

¹⁰² Ibn 'Ammār, 150–1. Here the critic was unwittingly parroting an earlier criticism made by al-Dāraqutnī.

¹⁰³ For the first criticism, see Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūţī, al-Nukat al-badī āt 'alā al-Mawdū ʿāt, ed. 'Āmir Ahmad Haydar ([Beirut]: Dār al-Janān, 1411/1991), 47; Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-țibb, bāb shurūţ al-ruqyā bi-Fātiḥat al-kitāb; cf. ibid., kitāb al-ijāra, bāb 16, for another narration. For the second criticism, see al-Suyūţī, al-Nukat al-badī ʿāt, 212. Here al-Suyūţī states that al-Irāqī had found an authentic counterpart narration for this report. This narration does not appear in any extant recensions of al-Bukhārī's collection, but Ibn al-Jawzī found it in Hammād b. Shākir's lost recension. For the third, see al-Suyūţī, al-Nukat al-badī ʿāt, 262; Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim: kitāb al-janna wa sifāt na ʿīmihā, bāb 13; cf. Ibn Hajar, Tahdhīb al-tahdhīb, 1:333–4.

¹⁰⁴ Ibn al-Şalāh, Şiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 159–60. For an example of al-Māzarī's noting broken narrations, see al-Māzarī, 1:283.

complete version in the same book. He felt that this was sufficiently well known among the ahl al-hadīth, just as he narrated from a group of weak transmitters relying on the fact that these hadīths were known through reliable transmitters....¹⁰⁵

Here he thus relies on the argument that, although certain narrations of hadīths are problematic, Muslim allowed them as auxiliary reports only because he assumed his readers knew that correct versions existed elsewhere. Ibn al-Ṣalāh makes the same case for the incomplete isnāds found in al-Bukhārī's *Ṣaḥī*h.¹⁰⁶ He further defends al-Bukhārī and Muslim against one of Dāraquṭnī's criticisms, noting that, like almost all of al-Dāraquṭnī's critiques, "it is a criticism of their [al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's] isnāds and does not remove the texts (matn) of their hadīths from the realm of authenticity (hayyiz al-sihha)."¹⁰⁷ One narration of a Prophetic tradition might be flawed, but sound ones existed elsewhere that established the reliability of the Prophet's statement.

Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's Egyptian contemporary, Rashīd al-Dīn al-ʿAṭṭār (d. 662/1264), also mounted a defense of Muslim against al-Māzarī's criticisms. His Kītāb ghurar al-fawā'id al-majmū'a fī bayān mā waqa'a fī Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim min al-aḥādīth al-maqṭū'a deals with seventy criticized narrations from Muslim's work, which he calls "exceptions to [Muslim's] standard method (rasm)." The author's chief concern is that such criticisms pose a threat to the function of Muslim's book as a measure of authenticity and authoritative reference. He states:

Perhaps someone looking at [al-Māzarī's] book who does not have a great concern for hadīth nor any knowledge of how to collect their different narrations, might think that [these criticized hadīths] were among those hadīths that lack unbroken chains back to the Prophet, and that one can thus not use them as proof texts.

He has seen many people with this impression, which he hopes to counter by proving that all these hadīths in fact possess complete $isn\bar{a}ds$.¹⁰⁸

The most categorical defense of Muslim's Sahīh against al-Dāraqutnī came at the hands of Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's follower, al-Nawawī, whose commentary on Muslim's work includes detailed responses to all the ¹⁰⁵ Ibn al-Şalāh, Şiyānat Şahāh Muslim, 82; al-Nawawi, Sharh Şahāh Muslim, 1:125.

¹⁰⁶ Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Siyānat Ṣahīḥ Muslim, 83.

¹⁰⁷ Ibn al-Ṣalāh, Siyānat Ṣahīh Muslim, 177.

¹⁰⁸ Rashīd al-Dīn Yahyā b. 'Alī al-Mişrī al-'Attār, Kītāb Ghurar al-fawā'id al-majmū'a fī bayān mā waqa'a fī Şahīh Muslim min al-ahādīth al-maqtū'a, ed. Şalāh al-Amīn Ballāl (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 1421/2000), 140–1.

impugned narrations. While he and Ibn al-Salāh had labored to exempt al-Bukhārī and Muslim from conventions of hadīth criticism that occasionally proved too demanding for the Sahīhayn, al-Nawawī also knew how to use these rules to the canon's advantage. He defends Muslim against the most frequent flaw identified by al-Dāraqutnī, inappropriate Addition, by referring to the consensus arrived at by al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī and the majority of legal theorists (but not by most hadīth scholars): any Addition by a trustworthy transmitter is acceptable.¹⁰⁹ Al-Nawawī thus neutralizes al-Dāragutnī's criticisms by demonstrating that his methods were far harsher than the accepted norm. He therefore warns his readers that al-Dāraqutnī's methods are "the deficient principles of some hadīth scholars, contrary to the vast majority (al-jumhūr) of legal scholars and theorists (ahl al-figh wa al-usūl), so do not be swayed [by them]!"¹¹⁰ Throughout the text of his commentary on Muslim's work, al-Nawawī undertakes a case-by-case rebuttal of al-Dāragutnī's criticisms.¹¹¹

Ibn Hajar mirrored al-Nawawi's defense of Muslim in the sizable introductory volume to his mammoth commentary on Sahīh al-Bukhārī, the Fath al-bari. There Ibn Hajar includes a massive chapter entitled "Putting forth the hadīths that the hadīth master of his age, Abū al-Hasan al-Dāraqutnī, and others, criticized...and furnishing what is available as a rebuttal." This section includes a case-by-case response to al-Dāraqutnī's criticisms. Like Ibn al-Ṣalāh and al-Nawawī, he argues that many of the problematic narrations in al-Bukhārī's collection come from his laxer auxiliary narrations. But while al-Nawawī excuses Muslim's inclusion of reports with inappropriate Addition by referring to the conventions of legal theorists, Ibn Hajar relies more on al-Bukhārī's peerless expertise. Al-Bukhārī possessed an unrivaled mastery of the hadīth sciences, Ibn Hajar argues, and judged the reliability of each hadīth based on the circumstances $(qar\bar{a}in)$ of that case. One can thus not hold him accountable to the judgment of lesser scholars or the rigid rules they employed.¹¹²

¹⁰⁹ Al-Nawawī, Sharh Ṣahīh Muslim, 1:145; cf. al-Khatīb, al-Kifāya, 2:516, 538.

 $^{^{110}}$ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 501 (quoted from al-Nawawī's lost commentary on al-Bukhārī).

¹¹¹ See for example, al-Nawawī, Sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 1:190; 2:334 ff. The Dār al-Qalam edition of al-Nawawī's Sharḥ contains an appendix with all al-Dāraquṭnī's criticisms and al-Nawawī's responses.

¹¹² Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī; 503, 543.

Yet Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, al-Nawawī and Ibn Ḥajar all found themselves forced to admit that several of al-Dāraquṭnī's criticisms were undeniably correct.¹¹³ Because al-Dāraquṭnī was such a hugely respected figure in the pantheon of ḥadīth scholars, and because he played such a formative role in the early study of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, al-Nawawī and Ibn Ḥajar exempted the material that he criticized from the claim of consensus on the two works' absolute authenticity. Even if one could successfully rebut some of al-Dāraquṭnī's criticisms, one could hardly claim consensus on those elements of the Ṣaḥīḥayn rejected by a scholar of his caliber. These exceptions fell outside the pale of ijmā^c and thus did not yield epistemological certainty.¹¹⁴

Interestingly, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's exemption of material criticized by master hadīth scholars from the umma's consensus actually provided a window for selectively admitting the existence of problems in the Ṣahīħayn.¹¹⁵ Because earlier pillars of the hadīth tradition such as al-Dāraqutnī and Ibn 'Abd al-Barr had criticized Muslim's narration negating the voiced basmala, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, al-ʿIrāqī and other later Shāfiʿīs were able to champion their madhhab's stance on this issue by openly discussing the report as a textbook example of a flaw (ʿilla) in the text of a hadīth.

Other reports also contained errors beyond defense, sometimes in the content of the hadīth. Al-Nawawī therefore acknowledged that one of Muslim's hadīths saying that the first chapter of the Qur'ān revealed to the Prophet was sūrat al-Mudaththir (no. 74) is "weak, even false (bāțil), and the correct [position] is that the absolute first to be revealed was 'Read, in the name of your Lord who created...(sūrat al-ʿAlaq, no. 96)."¹¹⁶ In the case of al-Bukhārī's hadīth that describes Adam incredulously as having been "sixty arms tall," Ibn Ḥajar admitted that "nothing has

¹¹³ Al-Nawawī, Sharh Ṣaḥīh Muslim, 1:128; Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāh, 118.

¹¹⁴ Ibn al-Ṣalāh, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥāh Muslim, 87; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 501; idem, al-Nukat ʿalā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 116; Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon," 2.

¹¹⁵ Ibn al-Salāh, Siyānat Sahīh Muslim, 87.

¹¹⁶ Al-Nawawī, Sharh Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 2:565–6; Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim: kitāb al-īmān, bāb bad' alwahy, hadīth of Abū Salama. This criticized narration comes after numerous other narrations that confirm that the beginning of sūrat al-ʿAlaq was indeed the first part of the Qurʾān revealed. Muslim's inclusion of the minority report stems from the impartial methodology he followed in compiling his Ṣaḥīḥ. Just as he often included reports with conflicting legal implications provided that all their isnāds were sound, so here does he include a historical report differing from other hadīths.

yet appeared to me that removes this problematic issue $(ishk\bar{a}l)$."¹¹⁷ Such criticisms, however, were few among staunch proponents of the canon and occurred against the backdrop of these scholars' devotion to defending the Şahīhayn canonical culture.

In the wake of Ibn al-Salāh's and al-Nawawī's campaign for strengthening the Sahīhayn canonical culture, many hadīth scholars devoted works to defending al-Bukhārī and Muslim from criticism or trying to clarify problematic material in their works. Ibn Kathīr wrote a whole book refuting the two hadīths, al-Bukhārī's story of the Prophet seemingly making his miraculous voyage to Jerusalem before the start of his prophetic career and Muslim's report of the Prophet marrying Umm Habība (see Chapter Eight for more discussion), that Ibn Hazm had criticized as incontrovertibly forged.¹¹⁸ Al-Irāqī finished the rough draft of a small book detailing all the impugned narrations in the Sahīhayn and providing defenses for them, but he never completed the work.¹¹⁹ His son, Walī al-Dīn Abū Zur'a Ahmad b. 'Abd al-Rahmān (d. 826/1423) also wrote a book called al-Bayān wa al-tawdīh li-man khurrija lahu fī al-Sahīh wa qad mussa bi-darb min al-tajrīh (Elucidation and Clarification of those who Appear in the Sahīh and had been Tainted by Some Sort of Criticism).¹²⁰ Jalāl al-Dīn 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Umar al-Bulqīnī (d. 824/1421), the son of Shāfi'ī hadīth scholar of Cairo, al-Bulqīnī, also wrote a book called al-Ifhām li-mā fī al-Bukhārī min al-awhām (Explicating the Errors found in al-Bukhārī).¹²¹ Ahmad b. Ibrāhīm Sibt al-'Ajamī al-Halabī (d. 884/1479-80), another Shāfi'ī, composed a book based on Ibn Hajar's Fath called al-Tawdīh li'l-awhām al-wāgi'a fī al-Sahīh (Clarifying the Errors Occurring in the Sahīh). He also had a book on ambiguities in Sahīh Muslim (Mubhamāt Muslim).¹²²

¹¹⁷ Ibn Hajar, Fath al-bārī, 6:452–3. Şahīh al-Bukhārī: kitab ahādīth al-anbiyā', bāb 1; Fath # 3326; khalaqa Allāh Ādam wa tūluhu sitūna dhirā'am...fa kull man yadkhulu al-janna 'ala şūrat Ādam, fa-lam yazal al-khalq yanquşu hattā al-ān."

¹¹⁸ Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīḥ al-anzār, 54; cf. Ibn Hazm, [Two Hadīths from the Ṣaḥīḥayn], 28b-29a.

¹¹⁹ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāh, 116.

¹²⁰ Al-Malkkī, Lahz al-lihāz, 5:186. This book has been published as Abū Zur'a Ahmad al-'Irāqī, al-Bayān wa al-tawdīh li-man ukhrija lahu fi al-sahīh wa mussa bi-darb min al-tajrīh, ed. Kamāl Yūsuf Hūt (Beirut: Dār al-Jinān, 1410/1990).

¹²¹ Al-Sakhāwī, al-Daw' al-lāmi' li-ahl al-qarn al-tāsi', 12 vols. in 6 (Beirut: Dār Maktabat al-Hayāt, [1966]), 4:109. This book has survived in manuscript form, see Qā'imat al-makhtūtāt al-'arabiyya al-muşawwara bi-mīkrūfīlm min al-jumhūriyya al-'arabiyya al-yamaniyya (Cairo: Maţba'at Dār al-Kutub, 1967), # 86.

¹²² Al-Sakhāwī, al-Daw' al-lāmi', 1:199. This book on al-Bukhārī may be the work

Conclusion

The pre-canonical history of al-Bukhārī, Muslim and their masterpieces contained elements that did not accord with the shape and station of the Sahīhayn canon. As the canon emerged at the dawn of the fifth/eleventh century, the environment of hadīth study in Baghdad transformed into a canonical culture that required a charitable reading of the text of the canon. With al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī's biographies of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, we see the contours of this culture take shape and emphasize themes that reconcile the canon with history. Al-Bukhārī, Muslim and their Sahihs are placed at the acme of the hadith tradition, erasing initial objections to the sahih movement. The Sahihayn are shown as the products of almost superhuman scholarly and pietistic effort. Al-Bukhārī is vindicated in the scandal of the Qur'ānic lafz, an early advocate of orthodoxy against a jealous adversary. As both a persona and a book, al-Bukhārī is ranked above Muslim. Nonetheless, the twin components of the Sahīhayn form a complimentary and conjoined pair. The construction of this canonical culture, however, did not suffice. Further interpretive and editorial efforts were required to defend the Sahīhayn canon against the enduring dangers of its pre-canonical past.

The personas of al-Bukhārī and Muslim were not the only element of the canon that required charity. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim were only two figures in the wider world of Sunni hadīth scholarship, a tradition characterized by a relative diversity of methodologies both before and after the formation of the canon. With the systemization of the Sunni hadīth sciences between the writings of al-Hākim, al-Khatīb and Ibn al-Şalāh, the potential for inconsistency between this tradition and the methods of al-Bukhārī and Muslim became pronounced. On two specific topics, tadlis and the criticism of transmitters, defenders of the canonical culture would have to extend full charity to the Sahīhayn in order to reconcile the institution of the canon and the conventions of hadīth study. Proponents of the canonical culture also found it necessary to address earlier criticisms that had resulted from inconsistencies between al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's methods and those of other major hadith scholars. Again, the Principle of Charity constituted an important tool in the arsenals of Ibn al-Salāh, al-Nawawī and Ibn Hajar.

of the author published as al-Tawdīh li-mubhamāt al-Jāmi' al-ṣahīh, ed. Abū al-Mundhir al-Naqqāsh Ashraf Ṣalāḥ 'Alī (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1422/2001), which does not deal with supposed errors occurring in the Ṣaḥīħ.

In the maintenance of the Sahīhayn canonical culture, we see a direct correspondence between the canonicity of these texts and the amount of charity they are afforded.¹²³ In all aspects of the Sahīhayn canonical culture, it was Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ and his follower al-Nawawī who played the most prominent and creative roles. This should come as no surprise, for Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ had proven the most fervent proponent of their canonical functions. He had taken dramatic steps in declaring the infallibility of the Ṣahīḥayn, and produced the boldest and most influential argument for institutionalizing al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections as authoritative references that could replace the arcane critical methodology of ḥadīth scholars. Al-Nawawī inherited his master's agenda, replicating his arguments and reinforcing the canonical edifice.

¹²³ Halbertal, 29.

CHAPTER EIGHT

THE CANON AND CRITICISM: ICONOCLASM AND THE REJECTION OF CANONICAL CULTURE FROM IBN AL-ṢALĀḤ TO THE MODERN SALAFĪ MOVEMENT

Introduction

Discussing the standing of the Sahīhayn, Goldziher concluded that veneration for them "never went so far as to cause free criticism of the sayings and remarks incorporated in these collections to be considered impermissible or unseemly...."¹ He insightfully observed that "veneration was directed at this canonical work [of al-Bukhārī] as a whole but not to its individual lines and paragraphs."² In his Rethinking Tradition in Modern Islamic Thought, Daniel Brown concurs. He states that in the "classical" period there was a great deal of leeway for the criticism of the canonical collections.³ As we have seen, Goldziher's and Brown's assessments accurately describe the pre-canonical period as well as the continued criticism of the two books even after their canonization. They do not, however, recognize the important change that occurred in the dynamic of the canon and criticism in the early modern and modern periods.

Especially in recent times, criticisms of the Sahīhayn canon have met with remarkable hostility. Mohammad Abd al-Rauf has recognized the dramatic change in the reaction to criticism, but identifies it as the result of Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's buttressing the canonical culture in the seventh/thirteenth century. He asserts that in the wake of Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's writings, "no more criticism could be tolerated...."⁴ Although Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ and al-Nawawī certainly did demand a charitable reading of the Ṣahīḥayn, their contributions to the canonical culture marked neither a moratorium on criticism nor an actual end to it.

¹ Goldziher, 236–7.

² Goldziher, 247.

³ Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition in Modern Islamic Thought (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1996), 111.

⁴ Abd al-Rauf, "Hadīth Literature," 285.

Indeed, criticism of the Sahīhayn continued in force well after Ibn al-Ṣalāh's and al-Nawawī's seminal careers. In the century after their deaths, a number of hadīth scholars rejected the canonical culture built around al-Bukhārī and Muslim. These objections gave voice to the long-standing tension between the drive for institutional security that had transformed the Ṣahīhayn into authoritative references and the iconoclastic strain in hadīth scholarship that remained steadfastly focused on the critical evaluation of individual reports.

It was the emergence of the Salafi reform movement in the eighteenth century that brought this simmering tension to a boil. Its revitalized focus on the critical study of hadīth, its prioritization of hadīth above the hermeneutic traditions of the madhhabs and its willingness to question $ijm\bar{a}$ attacked the very foundation of the hadīth canon. Two of its premier hadīth scholars, Muhammad b. Ismā'īl al-Amīr al-San'ānī (d. 1768) and Muhammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī (d. 1999), exemplified this critical rejection of the Sahīhavn canonical culture. For early modern and modern advocates of the traditional schools of law or reformists concerned with defending an increasingly beleaguered Islamic civilization, these criticisms of the Sahīhayn came to represent a rejection of the institutions that had authorized the canon and that it served. The ferocity with which proponents of the madhhabs have attacked al-Albānī's criticism of the Sahīhayn in particular reflects both the canon's role as a symbol of the classical Islamic institutional tradition and the canon's important function in scholarly culture.

Rejection of the Canonical Culture: Criticism after Ibn al-Ṣalāh

The Şaḥīḥayn canonical culture existed to safeguard the institution of the canon and the important functions it served in the Sunni scholarly tradition. The charity extended to the two works in order to overcome the tension between the methods of their authors and the independent rules of hadīth criticism reflected the needs of non-hadīth specialists, who relied on the Ṣaḥīḥayn as a measure of authenticity and authoritative reference. The Ṣaḥīḥayn canon was supposed to provide these jurists with the authority of the Prophet's authentic sunna in a manageable form, sifted by those two scholars who had come to epitomize the critical rigor of the ḥadīth tradition and approved by the umma's infallible consensus.

The authoritative edifice of the canon, however, was a construct. It was the creation of scholars struggling to provide the Islamic intellectual tradition with the secure institutions it required to meet the needs of the wider Sunni community. Major late architects of the Sunni hadith tradition, such as Ibn Hajar, embraced the canonical culture shaped by al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī and elaborated by Ibn al-Ṣalāh and al-Nawawī. Yet at its heart, the hadīth scholar's study of the Prophet's legacy remained an austere cult of authenticity that acknowledged no source of authority beyond the chain of transmission that connected Muslims to the charisma of their Prophet. The culture of the hadīth scholar thus nurtured an iconoclastic strain that did not easily suffer the elaboration of authoritative institutions above and beyond the isnād. Just as many hadīth scholars had rejected Ibn al-Salāh's perceived call to rely on sahih books and end the critical evaluation of hadiths, so did many refuse the demand to grant the Sahihavn an iconic status above the conventions of hadīth criticism. While scholars like al-Dhahabī and Ibn Hajar generally accepted the cases for charity advanced by Ibn al-Salāh and al-Nawawī, other hadīth scholars considered them baseless assertions with no grounding in the principles of the hadīth sciences. Criticism thus continued despite the strength of the Sahīhayn canonical culture.

Although the great Syro-Egyptian hadīth master Ibn Daqīq al-ʿĪd (d. 702/1302) had embraced the Sahīhayn canonical culture on the issue of exempting al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters from criticism, he exhibited skepticism over al-Nawawī's argument on tadlīs. The notion of distinguishing the Sahīhayn from other books in this case, he explained, was baseless. Such a charitable distinction must entail one of two untenable claims. Either we are sure that al-Bukhārī and Muslim made certain that every instance of possible tadlīs was actually a direct transmission (samā^c)—which we cannot know—or the consensus (ijmā^c) of the umma guarantees that no such error occurred. Yet this again depends on the impossible task of scholars having ascertained that al-Bukhārī and Muslim were entirely thorough in eliminating breaks in their isnāds.⁵

⁵ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 255.

Another Shāfi'ī contemporary of Ibn Daqīq in Cairo, Sadr al-Dīn Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad Ibn al-Muraḥḥal (d. 716/1317),⁶ seconded this skepticism towards Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's and al-Nawawī's exemption of al-Bukhārī and Muslim from the rules governing tadlīs. In his Kītāb alinṣāf (apparently lost) he explained:

Indeed, in this exemption $(istithn\bar{a}^{\,\prime})$ something makes my soul uneasy. For it is a claim without proof, especially since we have found that many of the hadīth masters $(huff\bar{a}z)$ have criticized hadīths found in the Sahīhayn or one of them for the tadlīs of their narrators.⁷

The Cairene Hanafī Ibn Abī al-Wafā''s rejection of the Sahāhayn canonical culture moves beyond such skepticism, however, entering the realm of unmitigated contempt. He argues that the notion of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters having "passed the test" is preposterous. Muslim, he explains, had narrated from demonstrably weak transmitters. Ibn Abī al-Wafā' also rejects Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's argument that one should not hold al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's auxiliary narrations to the same standard as their primary ones. Such narrations are supposed to explain the status ($h\bar{a}l$) of a ḥadīth, and if Muslim's collection was supposed to include only authentic reports, what do weak auxiliary reports say about the condition of his main ḥadīths?⁸ Accepting all instances of a mudallis narrating via "from/on the authority of ('an)" if they occur in the Sahāhayn but not in other works is similarly baseless and represents nothing more than vain posturing (tajawwuh).⁹

Ibn Abī al-Wafā' then administers his coup de grace to the canonical culture, detailing a number of hadīths from the Ṣahīhayn whose contents render them unquestionably false. He mentions Muslim's hadīth that "God most great created the earth (al-turba) on Saturday...," which contradicts the Qur'ānic statement that the world had been created in six days (Saturday being the seventh).¹⁰ He brings up a hadīth from Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī that seems to recount the Prophet making his miraculous night journey to Jerusalem before he had even received his first

⁶ Mahdī Salmāsī, "Ibn al-Murahhal," Dā'erat al-ma'āref-e bozorg-e eslāmī, 4:200-1.

⁷ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 255.

⁸ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 4:566.

⁹ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 4:566 ff.

¹⁰ Şahīh Muslim: kitāb şifāt al-munāfiqīn wa ahkāmihim, bāb ibtidā' al-khalq wa khalq Ādam 'alayhi al-salām (1).

revelation.¹¹ Finally, he notes Muslim's report of the Prophet promising the newly converted Abū Sufyān that he will marry his daughter, Umm Ḥabība, in the wake of the Muslim conquest of Mecca.¹² Ibn Abī al-Wafā' points out that scholars had agreed that the Prophet had already married her years earlier. The Ḥanafī dismisses the various efforts to explain this evident contradiction as vain posturing (tajawwuh) and "futile responses (ajwiba ghayr țā ila)."¹³

Iconoclasm and Institutional Security in Islamic Civilization: The Salafi Tradition

Ibn al-Muraḥhal and Ibn Abī al-Wafā' rejected the Ṣaḥīḥayn canonical culture and instead evaluated material from the two books according to the critical conventions of the ḥadīth tradition. Yet their criticisms met with no obvious reprimand. The only condemnation of criticizing the Ṣaḥīḥayn came from Yūsuf b. Mūsā al-Malaṭī (d. 803/1400–1), a controversial Ḥanafī student of al-Mughulṭāy. His unusual and little-known statement that "anyone who looks critically (nazara fī) at [Ṣaḥīħ] al-Bukhārī has become a heretic (tazandaqa)," however, was perceived as patently bizarre by contemporaries and later Muslim biographers. Ibn al-Imād (d. 1089/1679) even listed it along with allowing the consumption of hashish as an example of al-Malaṭī's deviant opinions.¹⁴

In the early modern period, the iconoclastic strain of hadīth study evident in scholars like Ibn Abī al-Wafā' would resurface in the Salafī movement, with *muhaddith*s like Muhammad b. Ismā'īl al-Ṣan'ānī and later Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī. In the turbulent struggle over defining Islam in the modern era, however, their rejections of the Ṣahīhayn canonical culture would meet with fierce criticism from defenders of the classical Islamic institutions bound closely to the canon. For the first time, criticizing the Ṣahīḥayn would become anathema for many scholars.

304

¹¹ See Fath al-bārī, #'s 349, 3886, 7517; Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-ṣalat, bāb 1, kitāb manāqib al-anṣār, bāb 41 and 42, kitāb al-tauhīd, bāb 37.

¹² Şahīh Muslim: kitāb fadā il al-sahāba, bāb fadā il Abī Sufyān b. Harb (40).

¹³ Ibn Abī al-Wafā', al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya, 4:568–69.

¹⁴ Ibn al-Imād, Shadharāt al-dhahab, 7:40.

a. Revival and Reform in the Early Modern and Modern Periods

Since the eighteenth century, movements of revival and reform arising as responses to both internal stimuli and the pervasive influence of Western civilization have dominated Islamic intellectual history. These movements have all faced the problem of determining the proper role of hadīth in defining Islamic law, ritual and worldview in ongoing debates about the shape that Islam should take in the modern world. Islamic Modernists such as the Indian Sir Sayyid Ahmad Khān (d. 1898) have dismissed the classical tradition of hadīth study as incapable of guaranteeing an authentic vision of the Prophet's sunna. They have thus rejected the role of Prophetic traditions as a central tool for interpreting Islam. Diametrically opposed to these modernists are those scholars one might refer to as Madhhab Traditionalists, who believe that the classical Islamic institutions of the schools of law, theology and Sufi guilds offer the only correct path for understanding Islam.

Lying in between these two camps on the spectrum of embracing or casting off the classical institutions of Islamic civilization are the diverse movements loosely grouped under the term 'Salafi,' or those willing to reevaluate the institutions of medieval Islam in order to revive the pure Islam of the Prophet and the first righteous generations (salaf) of Muslims. Modernist Salafis such as the Muhammad 'Abduh (d. 1905), Rashīd Ridā (d. 1935) and Shaykh Muhammad al-Ghazālī (d. 1996) have eclectically utilized elements of the classical Islamic tradition that they felt could aid in reviving this original greatness. 'Abduh thus attempted to revive the rationalism of the Mu'tazila, and al-Ghazālī mined the various interpretive methods of the different Sunni madhhabs to produce a vision of Islam that was traditionally authentic but more compatible with modernity. Both tried to curb those parts of the hadith tradition that clashed with modernity by making hadith more subservient to the over-arching principles of the Our'ān and the methods of Muslim legal theorists.¹⁵ Tied to this group are the Traditionalist Salafis, who invert this equation: like other reformists, they seek to rejuvenate the Muslim community by reviving the primordial greatness of Islam, yet they have sought to recreate the Prophet's sunna by making the classical study of hadīth and the ways of the early community paramount.

¹⁵ See Muḥammad al-Ghazālī, al-Sunna al-nabawiyya bayn ahl al-fiqh wa ahl al-ḥadīth, 11th ed. (Cairo: Dār al-Shurūq, 1996).

For all these reformist strains, the Sahīhayn have served as a powerful symbol in debates over the proper role of hadīth in modern times. Islamic Modernists like the Egyptian Mahmūd Abū Ravva have used al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's venerated status to severely criticize the classical hadith tradition by demonstrating how even the Sahihayn contain forged reports.¹⁶ Daniel Brown describes how Modernist "deniers of hadith have especially delighted in exposing traditions in the sahih collections, especially Bukhārī and Muslim, which they take to be vulgar, absurd, theologically objectionable, or morally repugnant."¹⁷ Conversely, Muhammad al-Ghazālī employed the canon to assist him in boldly reinterpreting the classical Islamic tradition to prove that women can hold high public office and to affirm matters of dogma such as the punishment of the grave. Unlike Abū Rayya, he venerated al-Bukhārī and Muslim and so used their decisions not to include certain problematic hadīths on these issues to neutralize the reports' efficacy as proof texts.¹⁸

Because we are concerned with the tension between the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon and the methods of ḥadīth criticism indigenous to the Islamic tradition, we will focus only on the treatment of the canon by Traditionalist Salafīs and Madhhab Traditionalists. The other two reformist strains, the Islamic Modernists and Modernist Salafīs, have been primarily concerned with reacting to the West. Sir Sayyid Aḥmad Khān's dismissal of the classical ḥadīth tradition resulted from his encounters with the Orientalist William Muir, who questioned the authenticity of the ḥadīth corpus.¹⁹ Muḥammad 'Abduh's and Jamāl al-Dīn al-Afghānī's intellectual output and political activism were responses to European political and cultural encroachment. Muḥammad al-Ghazālī's reevaluation of the proper role of women in Islamic society stemmed in part from witnessing the effective leadership of Margaret Thatcher.²⁰

¹⁶ Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 89.

¹⁷ Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 95.

¹⁸ Muhammad al-Ghazālī, Turāthunā al-fikrī, 6th edition (Cairo: Dār al-Shurūq, 2003), 180–2; idem, al-Sunna al-nabawiyya bayn ahl al-fiqh wa ahl al-hadīth, 64.

¹⁹ Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 33-6.

²⁰ Haifaa G. Khalafallah, "Rethinking Islamic Law: Genesis and Evolution in the Islamic Legal Method and Structures. The Case of a 20th Century Alim's Journey into his Legal Traditions: Muhammad al-Ghazali (1917–1996)," (Ph.D. diss., Georgetown University, 2000), 89; idem, "Muslim Women: Public Authority, Scriptures and 'Islamic Law,'" in Beyond the Exotic: Women's Histories in Islamic Societies, ed. Amira Sonbol (Syracuse: Syracuse University Press, 2005), 41–2.

Skeptical of Prophetic reports that clash with rationalism or the expectations of modernity, but simultaneously eager to defend the hadīth as the repository of the Prophet's golden age, the apologetic thought of the Modernist Salafīs has yielded no systematic approach to classical methods of authenticating hadīths.²¹

Although Western cultural, intellectual and political domination has cast its shadow over almost every corner of Muslim discourse in the modern period, the Traditionalist Salafīs and the Madhhab Traditionalists have been more concerned with each other's rhetoric than with the West. For Traditionalist Salafīs, the umma's immediate challenge is the corruption of the Prophet's sunna wrought by excessive loyalty to the madhhabs and the practices of popular religion. For the adherents of these traditions, the Salafī threat to classical Islamic institutions looms larger than Western encroachment. For both groups, Westernization and any Muslim contaminated by it are evils beyond the scope of dialogue. That they both dismiss any Muslim thinker who does not approach questions of Islam through the classical methodologies of fiqh or hadīth as "Occidentalists (mustaghribūn)" or "imitators of the Orientalists" testifies to their shared indigenous focus.²²

The varied strands that would make up the Traditionalist Salafi movement emerged from the various revival and reform movements that began dominating the intellectual landscape of Islamdom in the eighteenth century. The rise of the Wahhābī movement in Arabia, the Sokoto caliphate in West Africa and later the ahl-e hadīth movement in India formed part of a broader network of Islamic movements. At their core lay the objective of renewing the bond with the pure origins of Islam though a rejuvenated interest in Prophetic hadīth. These reformists sought to break free from the historical accretions of Islamicate civilization, condemned as bidʿa, and return Muslim societies to the radical monotheism (tawhīd) of the Prophet's original message. They often embraced the study of hadīth as the most direct means to ²¹ See Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 37; cf. Albert Hourani, Arabic Thought in the Liberal Age 1798–1939 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983), 146 ff.

²² Al-Albānī, Mukhlaşar Şaḥīḥ al-Bukhānī, ⁴ vols. (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1422/2002), 2:8–9. Here al-Albānī uses Abū Rayya and Muḥammad al-Ghazālī as examples. Madhhab Traditionalists, however, generally use the term "imitator (muqallid)" only for Muslim scholars who do not follow the classical methodologies at all. Azhar *shaykh*s like al-Ghazālī would probably fall outside this category. Instead, they would be dismissed as "preachers ($d\bar{a}$ 'iya pl. $du'\bar{a}t$)."

replicating the Prophet's ideal Medinan community and turning away from both the excesses of popular religion and the strict allegiance to specific schools of law.²³

As John Voll has identified, the shrine cities of Mecca and Medina served as a central junction in this massive revival phenomenon. With the move of prominent muhaddiths such as the Cairene Ibn Hajar al-Haythamī (d. 974/1597) and Mullā 'Alī Qārī of Herat (d. 1014/1606) to the shrine cities, the Hijāz played host to a cadre of hadīthoriented scholars such as Ibrāhīm b. Hasan al-Kurānī (d. 1101/1689), Muhammad Havāt al-Sindī (d. 1751) and 'Abdallāh b. Sālim al-Basrī (d. 1722), who would exercise a tremendous influence on students from as far away as Malaysia.²⁴ These circles produced preeminent activist scholars like Muhammad Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb (d. 1792) and Shāh Walī Allāh al-Dihlawī (d. 1762). While the thought and programs of Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb and Shāh Walī Allāh differed dramatically, they both exemplified a willingness to reconsider and break with the mainstream traditions of Sunni thought as it existed in the late medieval period.²⁵ To different extents, both questioned taqlīd, or the practice of following an existing madhhab without questioning its proofs, and made a direct consultation of Prophetic hadīths the ultimate determinant in interpreting the message of the Our³ān.²⁶

²³ Barbara Daly Metcalf, Islamic Revival in British India: Deoband, 1860–1900 (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1982), 6; Basheer M. Nafi, "Taşawwuf and Reform in Pre-Modern Islamic Culture: in Search of Ibrāhīm al-Kūrānī," Die Welt des Islams 42, no. 3 (2002): 313.

²⁴ See John Voll, "Abdallah b. Salim al-Basri and 18th Century Hadith Scholarship," Die Welt des Islams 43, no. 3 (2002): 356–72; idem, "Foundations for Renewal and Reform: Islamic Movements in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries," in The Oxford History of Islam, ed. John Esposito (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1999), 509–47; idem, "Hadith Scholars and Tariqahs: an Ulama Group in the 18th century Haramayn and their Impact in the Islamic World," Journal of African and Asian Studies 15 (1980): 264–73; Metcalf, Islamic Revival, 19; Muhammad Ishaq, India's Contribution to Hadith Literature (Dhaka: University of Dacca, 1955), 152 ff.; Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 23.

²⁵ See Ahmad Dallal, "The Origins and Objectives of Islamic Revivalist Thought: 1750–1850," Journal of the American Oriental Society 113, no. 3 (1993): 341–59.

²⁶ DeLong Bas, Wahhabi Islam, 10–13. See Muhammad Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb, "Fatāwā wa masā'il al-imām al-shaykh Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Wahhāb," in Mu'allafāt al-shaykh al-imām Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Wahhāb, ed. Şālih b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Aṭram and Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Duwaysh, vol. 3 (Riyadh: Jāmi'at Muhammad b. Su'ūd al-Islāmiyya, 1398/[1977]), 32.

This common interest in reviving the study of Prophetic hadīths and condemning excessive or blind adherence to an established school of law ran like a common thread through most of the eighteenthcentury movements of revival and reform. To varying degrees, they all championed the practice of ijtihād, or turning anew to the Qur'ān, the Prophet's sunna and the practices of the early community in order to find new answers to the legal or religious problems of the day. In their focus on the early Muslim community and a return to its legacy at the expense of the later developments of Islamic orthodoxy, these movements were fundamentalist in character. They telescoped religious history, demonstrating a willingness to sacrifice the elaborate developments of classical Islamicate civilization in order to recapture the unity, purity and authenticity of the early community.²⁷ After the Prophet's life and the first few generations of his followers there were no more qualitative distinctions in history. In this, scholars like Shāh Walī Allāh and Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb subverted the atavistic conservatism of the Sunni intellectual tradition, asserting that devout and competent modern Muslims were every bit as capable of understanding the message of Islam as the founders of the madhhabs had been.²⁸

b. Traditionalist Salafis in the Middle East

The loosely grouped Traditionalist Salafī movement in the Middle East developed in four dispensations. The earliest, most persistent and most politically active was founded by Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb in the mideighteenth century in central Arabia, expanding through its alliance with the Saud family of Najd and eventually becoming the dominant religious movement on the Arabian Peninsula. A second Salafī strain appeared in the Yemeni city of Ṣanʿā', with the iconoclastic ḥadīth scholar Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl al-Ṣanʿānī (d. 1768) and two generations later with the reformist thinker and ḥadīth scholar Muḥammad b. 'Alī al-Shawkānī (d. 1839).²⁹ A third school developed in Damascus in the second half of the nineteenth century around revivalist scholars such ²⁷ Rudolph Peters, "Idjtihād and Taqlīd in 18th and 19th Century Islam," Die Welt des Islams 20, no. 3–4 (1980): 131–2.

²⁸ Dallal, "The Origins and Objectives of Islamic Revivalist Thought," 347; Peters, "Idjtihād and Taqlīd," 139; Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 23.

²⁹ Nafi, "Taşawwuf and Reform in Pre-Modern Islamic Culture," 351.

as 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Bayṭār (d. 1917) and his students, Jamāl al-Dīn al-Qāsimī (d. 1914) and Ṭāhir al-Jazā'irī (d. 1920).³⁰ Finally, an influential Salafī school formed in Baghdad through the Hanbalī revival led by the Alūsī family: Maḥmūd al-Alūsī (d. 1853), Nuʿmān al-Alūsī (d. 1899) and Maḥmūd Shukrī al-Alūsī (d. 1924).³¹

These three schools were distinct from the Wahhābī movement, with both the Baghdad and Damascene schools espousing a more tolerant approach to classical Sufism. Indeed, their ideological fraternity with the Wahhābīs often proved dangerous for Salafīs in Damascus and Baghdad. Their opponents would often accuse them of being Wahhābīs, and the Ottoman state held them under suspicion of being a Wahhābī fifth column within the empire.³² Al-Ṣanʿānī was a contemporary of Ibn ʿAbd al-Wahhāb himself, and despite their similar Salafī leanings, the Wahhābī proclivity towards declaring other Muslims unbelievers (takfīr) detracted from al-Ṣanʿānī's initial positive impression of the movement. He wrote in verse:

I recant that which I said about the Najdī (Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb), for things have come to me from him on which I differ. I thought well of him and said, 'Could it be, could it be, 'That we have found someone to seek God's path and His slaves deliver?'

But some of his letters have come to me from his own hand, Declaring all the world's peoples disbelievers intentionally. In this he has contrived all his proofs and, You see them weak as a spider's web when examined critically.³³

Nonetheless, the Damascene, Baghdadi, Yemeni and Wahhābī dispensations of the Salafī phenomenon influenced one another. Scholars like al-Qāsimī and Maḥmūd Shukrī al-Alūsī corresponded, and, more ³⁰ See David Dean Commins, "The Salafi Islamic Reform Movement in Damascus, 1885–1914: Religious Intellectuals, Politics and Social Change in Late Ottoman Syria," (PhD diss., University of Michigan, 1985); Itzchak Weisman, "Between Ṣūfī Reformism and Modernist Rationalism: A Reappraisal of the Origins of the Salafiyya from the Damascene Angle," Die Welt des Islams 41, no. 2 (2001): 206–236; W. Ende, "Salafiyya," *EI*².

³¹ Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 30.

³² Halah Fattah, "Wahhabi' Influences, Salafi Responses: Shaykh Mahmud Shukri and the Iraqi Salafi Movement, 1745–1930," Journal of Islamic Studies 14, no. 2 (2003): 138–9, 146.

³³ Al-Qanūbī, al-Sayf al-ḥādd, 40. Supporters of Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb dispute al-Ṣan'ānī's authorship.

recently, al-Albānī used Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb's books in his lessons.³⁴ Although the Traditionalist Salafī school differed significantly from the apologetics and Euro-centered political activism of Modernist Salafīs like 'Abduh, the trends nonetheless informed one another.³⁵ 'Abduh's disciple, Rashīd Riḍā, considered al-Ṣanʿānī to be the renewer (mujaddid) of the twelfth Islamic century.³⁶ Al-Albānī, in turn, started down the path of reformist thinking when he came across an article by Riḍā in an issue of 'Abduh and Riḍā's al-Manār journal.³⁷

Like the other reform movements, the Traditionalist Salafis have aimed at reviving Islam's original purity and greatness by clearing away the dross of later cultural accretions. Unlike Modernists, however, they have focused literally on reviving the Prophet's sunna as expressed in the hadīth corpus. The primary culprits in distancing the Muslim community from the authentic sunna have been "excessive loyalty to the madhhabs (al-ta'assub al-madhhabī)," an over-involvement in the science of speculative theology (kalām), and popular religious practices such as those found among Sufi brotherhoods. What al-Ṣanʿānī charmingly calls "the bid'a of madhhabism (al-tamadhhub)" causes Muslims to take the rulings of later scholars over the direct injunctions of the infallible Prophet.³⁸ The speculative sciences have led Muslims away from the textual authenticity that gives Islam its purity. Popular religion and indulging in cultural accretions have led them to engage in bid'a that threatens Islam's essential monotheism (tawhid), such as visiting graves and seeking the miracle-working of local saints.

To cure these ills, Traditionalist Salafīs have not merely engaged in the study of hadīth, they have tried to cultivate its most critically rigorous spirit. Jamāl al-Dīn al-Qāsimī's Qawāʿid al-tahdīth min funūn muṣṭalah al-ḥadīth (The Principles of Regeneration from the Technical Science of Ḥadīth Study) and Ṭāhir al-Jazā'irī's Tawjīh al-nazar ilā uṣūl al-athar (Examining the Principles of Transmitted Reports) resemble classical

³⁴ See Jamāl al-Dīn al-Qāsimī and Maḥmūd Shukrī al-Alūsī, al-Rasā il al-mutabādala bayn Jamāl al-Dīn al-Qāsimī wa Mahmūd Shukrī al-Alūsī, ed. Muḥammad b. Nāşir al-ʿAjamī (Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 2001). For a sample of al-Albānī's curriculum, see Ibrāhīm Muḥammad ʿAlī, Muḥammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī: muḥaddith al-ʿaṣr wa nāşir al-sunna (Damascus: Dār al-Qalam, 1422/2001), 24.

³⁵ Weisman, "Between Ṣūfī Reformism and Modernist Rationalism," 235.

³⁶ J.J.G. Jansen, "Shawkānī," EI².

³⁷ Al-Albānī, "Tarjamat al-Shaykh al-Albānī—Nash'at al-Shaykh fī Dimashq," lecture by al-Albānī from www.islamway.com, last accessed 6/3/2004.

³⁸ Al-Şan'ānī, Kitāb iqāz al-fikra li-murāja'at al-fitra, ed. Muhammad Şubhī b. Hasan al-Hallāq (Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999), 52.

manuals on the science of hadīth such as Ibn al-Ṣalāh's Muqaddima, but urge Muslims to move beyond the simple acceptance of earlier opinions when evaluating the authenticity of a hadīth.³⁹ Reviving the stringent spirit of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, Salafīs reject the lax use of weak hadīths in defining a Muslim's worldview. Al-Albānī asks rhetorically: if we do not treat weak hadīths as such, what is the point of the science of hadīth criticism? "For the heart of the issue," he explains, "is that it be highly probable, without serious doubt, that the Prophet (s) actually said that hadīth so that we can depend on him in the Sharia, and attribute rulings to him."⁴⁰

Their work is reminiscent of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's innovative pioneering of the sahīh movement a millennium earlier, with their rejection of weak hadīths and willingness to break with the laxer standards of Ibn Hanbal's greatest generation. It is thus no surprise that one of al-Albānī's students, the Yemeni Muqbil b. Hādī al-Wādi'ī (d. 2001), compiled the first comprehensive sahīh collection in almost a thousand years, a work designed to provide Muslims with all the authentic hadīths not included in the Ṣahīhayn.⁴¹

Salafīs thus cast aside the institutions of classical Islam, relying on hadīths from the Prophet as the ultimate authoritative medium for transmitting the proper interpretation of the faith. According to the Salafī school, this obviates the chains of mystical and legal authority that allowed new practices such as Sufi rituals or fixed legal codes to enter Islam, merely masking departures from the authentic teachings of the Prophet. These were preserved in the authentic hadīths, which are accessible to any Muslim who can correctly navigate the volumes in which they were collected. The Qur'ān and the Prophet's sunna are the only criteria for judging right from wrong. Partisanship or loyalty to a certain scholar or school should not blind Muslims from the ultimate authority of these two sources.

The Traditionalist Salafī focus on ḥadīth, reviving the ways of the early Muslim community and questioning the institutions of classical Islam that had arisen since, stemmed from the same iconoclastic strain as the Ḥanbalī reformer Ibn Taymiyya (d. 728/1328). Indeed, the ³⁹ Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 32.

⁴⁰ Al-Albānī, Ṣaḥīḥ al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb, 3 vols. (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 2000), 1:60.

⁴¹ Abū 'Abd al-Rahmān Muqbil b. Hādī al-Wādi'ī, al-Jāmi' al-şahīh mimmā laysa fī al-Şahīhayn, 6 vols. (Cairo: Dār al-Haramayn, 1416/1995).

Wahhābī, Baghdadi and Damascene schools originated in part from a renewed interest in Ibn Taymiyya's writings.⁴² As Marshall Hodgson explains, this iconoclastic strain was inherent in the ḥadīth-based Ḥanbalī tradition:

Hanbalism had never really been primarily a school of fiqh at all. It remained a comprehensive and essentially radical movement, which had elaborated its own fiqh in accordance with its own principles, but whose leaders were often unwilling to acknowledge the same kind of taqlîd as provided the institutional security of the other schools and rejected the ijmâ' tradition of the living community on principle.⁴³

As we shall see, the manner in which Ibn Taymiyya and his student Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyya utilized the Ṣaḥīḥayn resurfaces in the Salafī approach to the canon. As we saw in Chapter Six, Ibn Taymiyya and Ibn al-Qayyim cunningly employed the Ṣaḥīḥayn as a rhetorical foil against their Ash'arī opponents. Ibn Taymiyya dramatically supported Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's claim about the authenticity of the two works, asserting that "[Al-Bukhārī and Muslim] do not agree on a ḥadīth except that it is authentic without a doubt" and compiling the most comprehensive list of scholars whom he claimed seconded this opinion.⁴⁴ For Ibn Taymiyya, the canon proved very useful, for al-Bukhārī and Muslim provided the centerpiece for his efforts to shift the ultimate authority in determining the Prophet's true legacy towards ḥadīth scholars as opposed to the later substantive law of the jurists.⁴⁵

Yet, just as he treated other aspects of Sunni scholarly production, Ibn Taymiyya refused to admit any iconic status for the Sahāhayn. His subtle qualification that only material found in both al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works is without a doubt authentic allowed him to criticize freely reports found in only one. Unlike al-Nawawī, his public fatwās announced that numerous reports in al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's work were flawed. He openly criticized Muslim for approving the hadīth of the earth being created on Saturday and the report about the Prophet marrying Abū Sufyān's daughter.⁴⁶ He noted that al-Bukhārī's work includes at least three impugned traditions, such as the hadīth of the ⁴² Weisman, "Between Şūfī Reformism and Modernist Rationalism," 210–13; Daniel Brown, Rethinking Tradition, 30.

⁴³ Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, 3:160.

⁴⁴ Ibn Taymiyya, Majmū^c al-fatāwā, 18:20.

⁴⁵ Ibn Taymiyya, Ilm al-hadīth, 112; idem, Majmūʿ al-fatāwā, 13:352.

⁴⁶ Ibn Taymiyya, Majmū^c al-fatāwā, 17:235-7.

Prophet marrying Maymūna while in a state of pilgrimage (muhrim). Ibn Taymiyya exceeded even his own boundaries by criticizing the hadīth of the Prophet praying after the eclipse, which appears in both the Sahīhayn.⁴⁷ This seemingly contradictory approach to the canon, wielding its authority as the acme of critical hadīth scholarship but simultaneously denying it iconic status, would reappear with the modern Salafī movement.

Muhammad b. Ismā'īl al-Ṣan'ānī: A Yemeni Salafī

The Zaydī Shiite center of Ṣanʿā' was an unusual setting for a revival of the Sunni hadith tradition. This environment, however, produced a succession of hadīth scholars of singular dynamism and devotion to the study of the Prophet's sunna through the medium of hadith. An early progenitor was the ninth/fifteenth-century scholar Muhammad b. Ibrāhīm Ibn al-Wazīr (d. 840/1436). Although he sprang from Zaydī origins, Ibn al-Wazīr wrote a rebuttal of this Shiite school and then penned a massive defense of the Prophet's sunna as understood through the Sunni prism of Prophetic hadīth.⁴⁸ Ibn al-Wazīr's intellectual interests lay in interacting with the Sunni hadīth tradition, and he thus composed a commentary on Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's Muqaddima. In this work, the Tanqih al-anzār, he demonstrates an intellectual creativity unparalleled by his contemporaries in Cairo. Far from blindly following Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's chapter structure like al-'Irāqī and others, he addresses neglected issues such as the reliability of Ibn Mājah's Sunan topically. He foreshadows the Salafi movement's anti-madhhab stance by stating that, in matters of law, it is not permitted to ignore a hadith declared sahīh unless one can demonstrate a damning flaw in the report.49

Although he lived over three centuries later, Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl al-Ṣan'ānī (b. 1099/1688, d. 1768) inherited Ibn al-Wazīr's Salafī spirit, devoting a large commentary to his Tanqīḥ al-anzār and frequently citing

314

⁴⁷ Ibn Taymiyya, 'Ilm al-hadīth, 160; idem, Majmū' al-fatāwā, 18:22.

⁴⁸ Al-Sakhāwī, al-Daw^c al-lāmⁱ, 6:282. This second work has been published as al-'Awāṣim min al-qawāṣim fī al-dhabb 'an sunnat Abī al-Qāsim, ed. Shu'ayb Arnā'ūţ, 2nd ed., 9 vols. (Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1992). For a brief discussion of Ibn al-Wazīr and his place in Yemeni intellectual history, see Bernard Haykel, "Reforming Islam by Dissolving the Madhāhib: Shawkānī and His Zaydī Detractors in Yemen," in Studies in Islamic Legal Theory, 338.

⁴⁹ Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīḥ al-anzār, 48.

his predecessor with great affection.⁵⁰ Like Ibn al-Wazīr, he hailed from a Zaydī background but remained steadfastly focused on the Sunni hadīth tradition. His oeuvre also consisted almost entirely of commentaries on the works of major Sunni muhaddiths: Ibn Daqīq's Ihkām al-ahkām, Ibn Hajar's Bulūgh al-marām and al-Suyūtī's al-Jāmi' al-saghīr. Al-Ṣan'ānī's Kitāb īgāz al-fikra li-murāja'at al-fitra (The Awakening of Thought for a Return to the Pure Nature [of Islam]) represents an attempt to break theological discussion out of what he sees is the stupor of taqlid and senseless speculation (khawd), returning it to the ways of the Salaf. He declares that blind imitation has always been mankind's pitfall, but further lambastes decadent Muslim scholars for their laziness, divisiveness, and obsequiousness. He accuses participants in speculative theology of constructing straw-man arguments for their opponents and then failing to reevaluate such useless assertions. Furthermore, if a hadīth or Qur'ānic verse contradicts these scholars' stance or school of thought, they try to interpret it away even if the interpretation is impossible in that context.51

Al-Ṣanʿānī studied in Mecca and Medina with Sālim b. ʿAbdallāh al-Baṣrī and others, then returned to Ṣanʿāʾ to serve as the preacher in the city's main mosque. He frequently provoked the ire of Zaydī scholars and the community's leaders, however, with his preoccupation with studying and teaching the "classic (ummahāt)" Sunni ḥadīth books. He also broke with the rest of the community in his insistence on following ḥadīths instead of the Zaydī school in matters of ritual. Like al-Bukhārī before him and later the ahl-e ḥadīth in India, he insisted on raising his hands in prayer and holding them by his chest instead of by his side like other Shiites.⁵² Al-Shawkānī, al-Ṣanʿānī's principal biographer, held him in great personal admiration and saw him as an ideal Salafi ḥadīth scholar unafraid of breaking with social convention. He described al-Ṣanʿānī as one who "fled from taqlīd and the spuriousness of those opinions of the jurists that lacked any proof."⁵³

⁵⁰ See, for example, al-Ṣanʿānī, Ḥadīth iftirāq al-umma ilā nayyif wa sabʿīn firqa, ed. Saʿd b. ʿAbdallāh al-Saʿdān (Riyadh: Dār al-ʿĀṣima, 1415/[1994]), 95–7.

⁵¹ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Kitāb īqāz al-fikra li-murājaʿat al-fitra, 48–50.

⁵² Muhammad b. 'Alī al-Shawkānī, al-Badr al-tāli' bi-mahāsin man ba'd al-garn al-sābi', ed. Khalīl Mansūr, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1418/1998), 2:53–5; Metcalf, Islamic Revival in British India, 275.

⁵³ Muhammad b. 'Alī al-Shawkānī, al-Badr al-tāli', 2:53.

Indeed, al-Ṣanʿānī stands out as one of the most fearlessly iconoclastic hadīth scholars in Islamic history. Five centuries after Sunni consensus had solidified on the complex question of defining the uprightness ('adāla) of a ḥadīth transmitter in the work of Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, al-Ṣanʿānī proposed a total reconsideration. Whereas Sunni ḥadīth scholars had accepted Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's definition that an upstanding transmitter be "an adult Muslim of sound mind, free of the paths of sin and defects in honor (murū'a)," al-Ṣanʿānī's Thamarāt al-nazar fī ʿilm al-athar (The Fruits of Reasoning in the Science of Traditions, written 1758) argues that this elaborate definition is pointless. Rather, 'adāla is simply the state of "the likelihood of truthfulness (mazannat al-sidq)." The existing standards of uprightness, al-Ṣanʿānī continues, are too lofty for the material they supposedly govern. Muhaddiths, like scholars in the other Islamic sciences, had become distracted in setting up principles (uṣūl) that do not hold up in actual application (furūʿ).⁵⁴

Al-Ṣanʿānī's iconoclasm appears most clearly in his treatment of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's works. Although he greatly respected the two masters, this maverick rejected almost every feature of the Ṣahīḥayn canonical culture as constructed by al-Khatīb, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, al-Nawawī and Ibn Ḥajar. He states quite simply that "we respect the Ṣahīḥayn, but we do not give them more station than they deserve."⁵⁵

Most dramatically, he rejects the claim of the umma's consensus on the two books. Although al-Nawawī had earlier refused the notion that this consensus meant that the contents of the Sahīhayn yielded epistemological certainty, he never questioned that $ijm\bar{a}$ ' on the books' authenticity had in fact occurred. Al-Ṣanʿānī, on the other hand, refutes this, citing the improbability of all the Muslim scholars agreeing on the authenticity of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's hadīths. Are we also to assume, he asks, that everyone who had in fact approved the two books was truly familiar with their contents? Even before the Sahīhayn were written, he concludes, such practical difficulties in evaluating consensus had led Ibn Hanbal to pronounce that anyone who claimed $ijm\bar{a}$ ' had occurred on an issue was a liar.⁵⁶ The main hadīth providing justification for the infallibility of the umma's consensus, he continues, would not even apply to the intricacies of hadīth criticism. The Prophet had ⁵⁴ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Thamarāt al-nazar, 125.

⁵⁵ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Thamarāt al-nazar, 137.

⁵⁶ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīh al-afkār, 1:93.

stated that his community would not agree on "going astray $(dal\bar{a}la)$," while a minor flaw in a narration can hardly merit such a title. The umma is immune to error writ large, not small oversights (khaia) such as making a mistake in evaluating the isnād of an $\bar{a}h\bar{a}d$ hadīth.⁵⁷

Al-San'ānī also attacked the canonical ranking of al-Bukhārī above Muslim. He argued that the feature that had most clearly distinguished al-Bukhārī above Muslim, his requirement for at least one meeting between transmitters in narrations via "from/on the authority of ('an)," had little practical value and provided no real guarantee of direct transmission. How could a transmitter who may have narrated hundreds of hadīths from a particular teacher hear all these reports in one sitting? Considering this, what use is al-Bukhārī's requirement for one meeting in guaranteeing the direct transmission of all the hadīths passed through this link? There still remains the possibility of a break (irsāl) in the isnād.⁵⁸ Just as al-Ṣanʿānī deflates al-Bukhārī's requirement, he gives a more positive evaluation of Muslim's. Muslim's requirement for contemporaneity in 'an transmissions was not a naïve assumption that two people who lived at the same time had heard their hadīths from one another; Muslim simply required the high probability that the two had met for direct transmission. In reality, this was the same level of assurance provided by al-Bukhārī's theoretically more rigorous conditions.59

Al-Ṣanʿānī also rejects attempts to disarm the opinions of scholars who had favored Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ over al-Bukhārī's. Unlike the standard line that "some" scholars from the Maghrib had preferred Muslim's collection, he feels that a large number of prominent ḥadīth experts had in fact favored Muslim. Furthermore, they did so for reasons more significant than Muslim's exclusion of incomplete legal-commentary reports ($ta'līq\bar{a}t$) and his convenient grouping of all the narrations of a tradition in one place. Al-Ṣanʿānī claims that he saw in the writings of al-Nawawī, Ibn Jamāʿa and Tāj al-Dīn al-Tabrīzī indications that these scholars felt Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim was more authentic than Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī. He also rejects Ibn Ḥajar's attempts to explain away Abū ʿAlī al-Naysābūrī's proclamation that Muslim's work was the most authentic book available.⁶⁰

⁵⁷ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīḥ al-afkār, 1:94.

⁵⁸ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīḥ al-afkār, 1:302-3.

⁵⁹ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīh al-afkār, 1:47-8.

⁶⁰ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīh al-afkār, 1:50-1.

Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ's and al-Nawawī's demands for charity on the issues of tadlīs and the criticism of transmitters did not convince al-Ṣanʿānī. He reminds us that many of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters were criticized with good reason and clear explanations.⁶¹ In response to al-Nawawī's claim that instances of a mudallis's transmitting through ʿan in the Ṣaḥāḥayn should be treated as direct transmission, al-Ṣanʿānī cites Ibn Daqīq's and Ibn al-Muraḥḥal's skeptical objections.⁶² He comments that "this is a claim, but where is the proof?" Here he even breaks with Ibn al-Wazīr, who had acceded to the notion that al-Bukhārī and Muslim would not have included a mudallis's narration via ʿan unless they knew it occurred through another reliable isnād. Again, al-Ṣanʿānī objects that there is no proof for such a claim.⁶³

Shāh Walī Allāh and the First Condemnation of Criticizing the Canon

Like Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb and al-Ṣanʿānī, the great Indian scholar Shāh Walī Allāh voyaged as a young man to the Hijāzī crucible of reformist ḥadīth scholarship and returned to his native Delhi with a heightened appreciation for the authority of the ḥadīth tradition. In terms of fluency with the labyrinth of Islamic sciences, however, he proved far more advanced than the stark ḥadīth-based Ḥanbalism of Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb. Even al-Ṣanʿānī, who grasped and engaged the Ashʿarī and Muʿtazilite traditions of dialectical theology, did not match Shāh Walī Allāh's innovative mixture of ḥadīth scholarship, reformed Sufism, social and political activism, and even Neo-Platonism.

Unlike Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb's and al-Ṣan'ānī's preoccupation with matters of creed and ritual observation, Shāh Walī Allāh's career tackled the troubling political realities of India in his time. The sudden failure of Moghul imperial power after the death of the emperor Aurangzeb in 1707 marked the end of unified and effective Moghul rule in the subcontinent. Shāh Walī Allāh was eyewitness to the terrible destruction wrought on the unprotected Moghul realm in the wake of the empire's decay. In 1739, the Afghan conqueror Nādir Shāh sacked Delhi and caused tremendous bloodshed. Combined with a series of disastrous Afghan invasions in 1748, 1757 and 1760, these events traumatized the psyches of men like Shāh Walī Allāh.⁶⁴ For scholars, it represented the fragmentation of Islamic society in India. As Ahmad Dallal writes, "Disunity is a central theme that occupied [Shāh Walī Allāh] throughout his life."⁶⁵

⁶¹ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīh al-afkār, 1:99.

⁶² Al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīḥ al-afkār, 1:320 ff.

⁶³ Al-Ṣanʿānī, Tawdīh al-afkār, 1:323; cf. Ibn al-Wazīr, Tanqīh al-anzār, 144.

In his role as a scholar, teacher, and social activist and in his relations with local Indian rulers, Shāh Walī Allāh sought to regain a lost unity. He believed that political power was an essential component of a rejuvenated Islamic civilization in India. In the wake of the Moghul failure, he wrote to several leaders such as the Nizām of Hyderabad asking them to take on the role of Islam's patron and leader in the subcontinent.⁶⁶ This desire to protect communal cohesion resulted in an attitude towards religious disagreement and popular practices that was more pluralistic than those of Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb, al-San'ānī or the founder of the West African Sokoto Caliphate, Usman dan Fodio (d. 1817). Unlike the Wahhābīs, he proved very conservative about excommunication, limiting it to cases for which the Qur'an or hadith provided direct evidence and not extending it to acts of associationism (shirk) such as prostrating to trees. He allowed people to visit tombs for mourning and to seek the intercession of pious people, provided one did not glorify them.⁶⁷

Shāh Walī Allāh agreed with the other reformists that excessive loyalty to the madhhabs had seriously hobbled the Islamic intellectual tradition and led it away from the Prophet's true message. Yet he also recognized the tremendous utility of these institutions. He personally treated all four Sunni madhhabs equally, and urged scholars to use them eclectically as reservoirs of expert opinions. The ultimate determinant in selecting which school's ruling to take, however, was the direct sayings of the Prophet. Since all the schools of law had theoretically derived their authoritative rulings from the Prophet's sunna, the hadīths retained an inherent and constant superiority to these bodies of substantive law. Each generation of scholars should thus consult them anew.⁶⁸ For the masses of Sunni Muslims, however, following one of the four established ⁶⁴ Metcalf, Islamic Revival in British India, 25.

⁶⁵ Dallal, "The Origins and Objectives of Islamic Revivalist Thought," 343; Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, 3:148.

⁶⁶ Metcalf, Islamic Revival in British India, 35.

⁶⁷ Dallal, "The Origins and Objectives of Islamic Revivalist Thought," 346.

⁶⁸ Metcalf, Islamic Revival in British India, 37; Dallal, "The Origins and Objectives of Islamic Revivalist Thought," 347–8.

madhhabs was essential. In India, they should adhere to the rulings of their traditional Hanafī school. 69

Shāh Walī Allāh's commitment to communal cohesion governed his attitude towards the Sahīhayn canon. Despite the reformist tendencies he shared with his fellow student in the Hijāz, al-Ṣanʿānī, Shāh Walī Allāh was no harsh iconoclast. He staunchly defended the canon. Like the schools of law, they provided indispensable institutions for the preservation of unity in Islamic thought. He states at the beginning of his discussion of hadīth in his magnum opus, the Hujjat Allāh albaligha (God's Conclusive Argument), "Know that there is no path for us to know the precepts of the Sharia or its rulings except though the reports of the Prophet (s)...." Reliable books of hadīth, foremost the Sahāhayn and Mālik's Muwatta', are essential for this, since "there does not exist today any non-written, reliable transmission (riwāya...ghayr mudawwana) [back to the Prophet]."⁷⁰ He then lists the various levels of hadith collections, beginning with the top level of the Muwatta' and the Sahīhayn. Alluding to a Qur'ānic verse (Qur'ān 4:115) used since the time of al-Shāfi'ī (d. 204/819–20) to emphasize the importance of consensus $(ijm\bar{a})$, he states:

As for the Sahīhayn, the hadīth scholars have come to a consensus that everything in them with an isnād back to the Prophet is absolutely authentic, that [the two books] are attested by massive transmission back to their authors, and that anyone who detracts from their standing is a heretic (mubtadi^c) not following the path of the believers.⁷¹

This represents the first moratorium on criticism of the Ṣaḥīḥayn. Although Abū Masʿūd al-Dimashqī, Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, al-Nawawī and Ibn Hajar had all rallied to the defense of al-Bukhārī and Muslim, they had never condemned criticism of the Ṣaḥīḥayn as inherently unacceptable. Even after the consolidation of the canonical culture in the seventh/ thirteenth century, no one attacked the critiques of Ibn Taymiyya or the virulent criticisms of Ibn Abī al-Wafā' as violations of the canonical orthodoxy. Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ and al-Nawawī had struggled to protect the ⁶⁹ Metcalf, Islamic Revival in British India, 39; Peters, "Idjtihād and Taqlīd in 18th and 19th Century Islam," 143; Marcia K. Hermansen, trans., The Conclusive Argument from God (Islamabad: Islamic Research Institute, 2003), xxx.

⁷⁰ Shāh Walī Allāh, Hujjat Allāh al-bāligha, 1:132–3.

⁷¹ Shāh Walī Allāh, Hujjat Allāh al-bāligha, 1:134. For a discussion of the use of this verse as a proof text for ijmā^c, see Abū Zahra, Ibn Taymiyya, 469 ff.

Sahīhayn because the books had become crucial institutions in Sunni scholarly culture. Yet in the relative stability of Mamluk Cairo, attacks by critics like Ibn Abī al-Wafā' held little consequence for the sturdy and blossoming Sunni religious culture of the period.

For Shāh Walī Allāh, the stakes had become much higher indeed. Although we do not know exactly to whom he directed his warning about criticizing the Sahīhayn, only a merchantman's ride away across the Indian Ocean in Yemen his contemporary al-San'ānī was flagrantly dismissing the canonical culture that had been constructed to protect the institution of the Sahihayn. Although Shah Walī Allah was a hadith-oriented reformist who sought to limit the divisive effects of the madhhabs, he appreciated the roles of such institutions in maintaining social, intellectual and political order in a beleaguered umma. It is not difficult to imagine that he had come across the iconoclastic thought of the young San'ānī while in the Hijāz, perhaps in the classes of their common teacher Abū Tāhir b. Ibrāhīm al-Kurdī (d. 1732-3), and later sensed the danger it posed for his reformist agenda. While we can hardly contend that Shāh Walī Allāh's harsh condemnation of criticizing al-Bukhārī and Muslim was an actual response to al-Sanʿānī's writings, it might as well have been. What al-Ṣanʿānī reviled as "the heresy of madhhabism," and the baseless premises of the Sahīhayn canonical culture, Shāh Walī Allāh saw as essential institutions for the Islamic revival.

Muhammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī: Iconoclast Extraordinaire

Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī was born in 1914 in Shkodër, Albania, to a family of staunchly Ḥanafī scholars. When he was nine years old, however, his family emigrated to Syria. There the young Albānī followed in his father's footsteps and studied Ḥanafī jurisprudence with other Albanian students in Damascus. As a young man, he entered a bookstore near the Umayyad Mosque one day and found a copy of Rashīd Ridā's and Muḥammad 'Abduh's reformist journal al-Manār. An article written by Ridā in particular struck al-Albānī. Ridā was criticizing the great champion of classical Sufism, Abū Ḥāmid al-Ghazālī, for his Sufi teachings and his use of unreliable ḥadīths to justify them. Al-Albānī also found the ḥadīth scholar Zayn al-Dīn al-'Irāqī's (d. 806/1404) book detailing those weak ḥadīths that al-Ghazālī had included in his classic Ihyā, 'ulūm al-dīn (Revival of the Religious Sciences).⁷² These works sowed the seeds of mistrust in al-Albānī's heart for Sufism and weak hadīths; for him they were loopholes through which 'inauthentic' practices could enter Islam. Attracted by al-Manār's call for the purified, Arab Islam of the Prophet's time, he began studying the hadīth sciences independently.

Like Ibn Taymiyya and Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb before him, al-Albānī turned against the practices of popular Sufism and the strict adherence to one school of law in the face of contradicting hadīths. He read through all of Ibn 'Asākir's mammoth Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq and, discovering that the Umayyad Mosque had formerly been the Church of St. John built on his tomb, refused to pray there.⁷³ Like other Salafīs, al-Albānī regarded the act of incorporating graves into worship as bid'a.⁷⁴ These non-conformist ways eventually angered al-Albānī's father, who told his son that he needed to choose between "disbelief and monotheism (al-kufr wa al-tawhīd)." Al-Albānī replied that equally he must choose between "the sunna [of the Prophet] and taqlīd." Cast out penniless by his father, al-Albānī became a watch repairer and began spending long hours in the <code>Zāhiriyya Library</code> in Damascus (founded by <code>Tāhir al-Jazā'irī</code>) poring over hadīth manuscripts.⁷⁵

Al-Albānī devoted himself to hadīth scholarship in the Salafī idiom. He undertook what became an extensive project that he would later dub "bringing the sunna within reach of the umma (taqrīb al-sunna bayn yaday al-umma)," the principal aim of which was to remove what he deemed weak hadīths from important classical Islamic texts. It was the deleterious effects of these weak hadīths that had allowed the Muslim community to stray so far from the authentic legacy of the Prophet. This Salafī philosophy is best glimpsed in al-Albānī's massive, thirteenvolume work identifying weak hadīths entitled Silsilat al-ahādīth al-da'īfa wa al-mawdū'a wa ta'thīrihā al-sayyi' fī al-umma (The Series of Weak and Forged Ḥadīths and Their Negative Effect on the Umma). He also composed books identifying the weak hadīths found in famous works such as al-Mundhirī's (d. 656/1258) al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb, al-Bukhārī's

322

⁷² Al-Albānī, "Tarjamat al-shaykh al-Albānī—Nash'at al-Shaykh fī Dimashq," lecture from www.islamway.com, last accessed 6/3/2004.

⁷³ Al-Albānī, "Tarjamat al-Shaykh al-Albānī—2," lecture from www.islamway.com, last accessed 6/3/2004.

⁷⁴ 'Alī, Muḥammad Nāsir al-Dīn al-Albānī, 23.

⁷⁵ Al-Albānī compares his breaking with his father's legal school with Abraham's leaving his father's idolatrous ways; see al-Albānī, "Tarjamat al-Shaykh al-Albānī—2."

al-Adab al-mufrad and finally the famous Four Sunans of Abū Dāwūd, al-Tirmidhī, al-Nasā'ī and Ibn Mājah.⁷⁶

Al-Albānī combined such focused hadīth scholarship with intensive scholarly activism. Through his books and preaching, he sought to reform the community around him by calling them to heed the Qur'ān and the Prophet's sunna above all things. He traveled from city to city, attacking in speeches and writings what he called "corrupting morals, illegitimate forms of worship and false beliefs."77 He called on the predominantly Hanafi scholars around him to ensure that their school's rulings accorded with the sunna of the Prophet as expressed in the hadīth corpus. A muftī might advocate his school's position on a question, but he should always provide direct evidence from the Qur'an and the hadīth before doing so.78 His books attacked innovative religious practices (bid'a) and sought to eradicate them from social institutions such as funerals, wedding ceremonies, and the annual pilgrimage. His criticisms extended to state interference in religious affairs, for he rejected the Syrian government's support for the Hanafi legal code as embodied in the Ottoman Majelle as well as the position of scholars who allowed interest for the sake of facilitating modern finance.⁷⁹ Eventually he was imprisoned in Syria, where he wrote a major work on al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ, and was forced to emigrate to Jordan in 1980.

Al-Albānī, like Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb and Shāh Walī Allāh, telescoped the normative dimension of time in Islamic religious history. He rejected the atavistic logic of the Islamic intellectual tradition and considered himself qualified to review the work of the classical scholars of Islam.⁸⁰ Al-Albānī was not calling for intellectual anarchy or the neglect of scholars; like all Muslim scholars, he clearly identified a certain group

⁷⁶ See al-Albānī, Da f Sunan Abī Dāwūd (Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1408/1988); idem, Da f Sunan al-Tirmidhī (Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1411/1991); idem, Da f Sunan al-Nasā'ī (Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1411/1990); idem, Da f al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb, 2 vols. (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1421/2000); idem, Ṣaḥīḥ al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 2000).

¹⁷ "akhlāq fāsida, 'ibādāt mubtadi'a wa 'aqīdāt bāțila...," Muḥammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī, "Silsilat as'ilat Abī Ishāq al-Ḥuwaynī li'l-shaykh Muḥammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī," lecture from www.islamway.com, last accessed 2/13/2002.

⁷⁸ Al-Albānī, "al-Taqlīd," two-part lecture from www.islamway.com, last accessed 2/12/2002.

⁷⁹ Al-Albānī, "al-Taqlīd," and "Silsilat as ilat Abī Ishāq al-Huwaynī."

⁸⁰ See al-Albānī, Fatāwā al-shaykh al-Albānī, ed. 'Akāsha 'Abd al-Mannān al-Ţayyibī (Cairo: Maktabat al-Turāth al-Islāmī, 1414/1994), 162. Here the author states that one scholar's position cannot be taken over another's simply because he lived earlier.

known as "the people of knowledge (ahl al-'ilm)" to whom everyday Muslims should turn for religious expertise. Nor was he rejecting the work of classical Muslim scholars; indeed al-Albānī relied entirely on earlier criticisms of hadīths and their transmitters in his reevaluation of the contents of famous works. Although he considered himself qualified enough to reexamine classical texts, he could not recreate the intimate access that classical scholars had to the minutiae of hadīth criticism. Al-Albānī's books, such as the Silsilat al-aḥādīth al-da īfa, thus apply the opinions of classical hadīth masters and later critics such as Ibn Abī al-Wafā' to classical texts. They are thus replete with citations from the whole range of Sunni authorities, including al-Shāfi'ī, Ibn Ḥajar and Ibn Ḥazm.⁸¹

This telescoped vision of religious history centered on the study of hadīth as a continuous and living tradition in a constant state of reevaluation. When asked about his controversial criticism of a famous hadīth transmitter from the early Islamic period, al-Albānī replied that the science of hadīth criticism "is not simply consigned to books (mastūr fī al-kutub),"⁸² it is a dynamic process of critical review. Al-Albānī explained that one of the principles of Islamic scholarship is that "religious knowledge (ʿilm) cannot fall into rigidity (lā yaqbalu aljumūd)."⁸³ It is thus not surprising that al-Albānī and his students are the first Muslim scholars in centuries to produce massive collections evaluating Prophetic traditions.

Al-Albānī's career has certainly been one of the most controversial in modern Islamic intellectual history. In both his legal rulings and hadīth evaluations, al-Albānī broke with the communal consensus of the madhhab traditions. Like Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb, he was thus attacked for breaking with the infallible ijmā' of the umma.⁸⁴ Although he drew almost entirely on the work of classical scholars, his reevaluation of hadīths long considered authentic or relied on by elements of the Muslim community provoked controversy. Madhhab Traditionalists recoiled

⁸¹ See, for example, al-Albānī, Silsilat al-aḥādīth al-daʿīfa wa al-mawdūʿa, 13 vols. (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 1422/2002), 1:141, where he draws from Ibn Ḥazm's al-Iḥkām fī uṣūl al-aḥkām.

⁸² Al-Albānī, "Silsilat as'ilat Abī Ishāq al-Huwaynī li'l-shaykh Muhammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī."

⁸³ Al-Albānī, Ṣaḥīḥ al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb, 1:4.

⁸⁴ For this criticism of Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb, see Samer Traboulsi, "An Early Refutation of Muhammad Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb's Reformist Views," Die Welt des Islams 42, no. 3 (2002): 393.

at his influential and barbed criticisms of the traditional schools of jurisprudence, broad rejection of Sufism and controversial legal rulings. His prohibition on women wearing gold bracelets, otherwise considered a female prerogative, angered traditionalists, while his statement that women need not cover their faces drew the ire of conservatives who might otherwise embrace his fundamentalist calling.⁸⁵ According to even his own students, al-Albānī's personality could be caustic.

A plethora of books have thus appeared attacking al-Albānī and refuting his positions, most of them from the pens of Madhhab Traditionalists. The Jordanian Ash'arī theologian, Ḥasan b. 'Alī Saqqāf, for example, composed a book entitled Qāmūs shatā'im al-Albānī (Dictionary of al-Albānī's Slanderings). Other scholars have more specifically criticized al-Albānī's rulings on the authenticity of ḥadīths in his Silsilat al-aḥādīth al-ḍaʿīfa, his Silsilat al-aḥādīth al-ṣaḥīḥa, and his listing of weak reports from the Four Sunans.⁸⁶

Al-Albānī's sometimes autodidactic education was a further affront to many Muslim scholars, who absolutely required a student to read texts at the hands of a scholar trained within an interpretive school and to eventually receive license ($ij\bar{a}za$) for his understanding of that book. Just as Taqī al-Dīn al-Subkī (d. 756/1356) had accused Ibn Taymiyya of not learning the proper interpretation of classical texts from qualified transmitters, so too many scholars have attributed al-Albānī's unacceptable positions to his lack of $ij\bar{a}zas$.⁸⁷

Against the Canon: Al-Albānī's Criticism of the Ṣaḥīḥayn and His Detractors

Al-Albānī used the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon for the same dialectical purposes as generations of Muslim scholars before him: they provided him a trump card in debates over the authenticity of ḥadīths. He acknowledged the rhetorical power of the two books, saying that "it has become like a ⁸⁵ Al-Albānī, Fatāwā, 593 ff.

⁸⁶ For example, see Şalāh al-Dīn al-Idilbī, Kashf al-ma'lūl mimmā summiya bi-Silsilat al-ahādāth al-sahāha (Amman: Dār al-Bayāriq, 1421/2001); Mahmūd Sa'īd Mamdūh, al-Ta'īf bi-awhām man qassama al-sunan ilā sahāh wa da'īf, 6 vols. (Dubai: Dār al-Buhūth li'l-Dirāsāt al-Islāmiyya wa Ihyā' al-Turāth, 1421/2000); Hasan b. 'Alī Saqqāf, Qāmūs shatā'im al-Albānī (Amman: Dār al-Imām al-Nawawī, 1993).

⁸⁷ Al-Subkī, al-Sayf al-saqīl, 63. Muḥammad Abū Zahra has convincingly argued against this accusation leveled at Ibn Taymiyya. See Abū Zahra, Ibn Taymiyya; 111 ff., 118.

general convention ('urf ^{an} ' $\bar{a}mm^{an}$)" among Sunni scholars that anything included in the $\bar{S}ah\bar{h}hayn$ is without a doubt authentic.⁸⁸ When asked about several pro-Shiite hadīths asserting 'Alī's rightful place as the Prophet's successor, al-Albānī replied that if someone really believes these reports, he should "lay out the $\bar{S}ah\bar{h}hayn$ before him" and find the hadīths in one of them as proof.⁸⁹

Yet like the Damascene firebrand Ibn Taymiyya, al-Albānī openly undermined any iconic status for the two works beyond their convenience as authoritative references in debate. He rejected the practice of some less thorough jurists who, like al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, would manipulate the legitimizing power of the "standards of al-Bukhārī and Muslim" by claiming that a hadīth met these criteria simply if the transmitters in its isnād were found in the Ṣahāḥayn.⁹⁰ As his Egyptian student Abū Ishāq al-Ḥuwaynī explained, jurists cannot simply look up the narrators found in an isnād in a dictionary of transmitter criticism and declare the ḥadīth authentic if none of them have been impugned. The science of ḥadīth evaluation requires that one explore any corroborating or contrasting narrations of the ḥadīth to determine its reliability.⁹¹

In March 1969, al-Albānī published an edition of 'Abd al-'Azīm al-Mundhirī's Mukhtaşar Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim as part of his efforts to provide the Muslim community with accessible versions of classical ḥadīth works expunged of all weak material. His extreme respect for al-Bukhārī and Muslim is evident, for he adds, "That is with the exception of the Ṣaḥīḥayn, due to the scholars' approval of these collections and their being free of weak or unacceptable reports (al-aḥādīth al-ḍa'īfa wa al-munkara)...."⁹² This statement, however, clearly did not accurately represent the author's stance on the Ṣaḥīḥayn. Drawing on well-known earlier criticisms, such as the problem of Abū al-Zubayr al-Makkī's tadlīs, al-Albānī notes in brief footnotes that about two dozen narrations in Muslim's collection contained flaws due to vagaries in their chains of ⁸⁸ Al-Albānī, ed., Sharḥ al-ʿAqīda al-Ṭaḥāwiyya (Amman: al-Dār al-Islāmī, 1419/1998), 22.

⁸⁹ Al-Albānī, "al-Taqlīd."

⁹⁰ Al-Albānī, Sahīh al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb, 1:70.

⁹¹ Abū Ishāq al-Huwaynī, "Shurūț al-Bukhārī wa Muslim," lecture from www.islamway. com last accessed 2/03/2004.

⁹² 'Abd al-'Azīm Zakī al-Dīn al-Mundhirī, Mukhtaşar Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, ed. Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn al-Albānī (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1416/1996), 23.

transmission.⁹³ As al-Albānī's conflict with the Madhhab Traditionalists developed, he also criticized, in his lectures and writings throughout the 1970s, 80s and 90s, hadīths from al-Bukhārī's collection for isnād and content reasons, such as the report of the Prophet marrying Maymūna while in a state of pilgrimage.⁹⁴

Al-Albānī's empty homage to the consensus on the Şahīhayn and his use of the two books as measures of authenticity in polemics, despite his many criticisms of the works, mirror the rhetorical duplicity with which the canon was employed in the classical period. Al-Albānī's reliance on well-established criticisms of the Şahīhayn does, however, clarify the seeming contradiction between such critiques and his condemnation of "Westernized" Modernist scholars who reject hadīths that "the umma has accepted with consensus": he did not feel that he himself was actually criticizing any of al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's hadīths.⁹⁵ Rather, he was simply noting existing critiques made by the historical giants of hadīth scholarship. As he stated in defense of his noting a flaw in one of al-Bukhārī's isnāds earlier critiqued by al-Dhahabī, "I am not the innovator (mubtadi') of this criticism...."⁹⁶

Nonetheless, the outcry from the Madhhab Traditionalists over al-Albānī's perceived attack on the Ṣaḥīḥayn was ferocious. In the early 1970s, the Syrian Ḥanafī ḥadīth scholar 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda (d. 1997) published a tract against al-Albānī's reevaluation of the Ṣaḥīḥayn. In 1987 the Egyptian ḥadīth scholar Maḥmūd Saʿīd Mamdūḥ published a work entitled Tanbīh al-muslim ilā taʿaddī al-Albānī ʿalā Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim (Alerting the Muslim to al-Albānī's Transgression upon Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim).⁹⁷ The Lebanese scholar and staunch defender of the traditional Islamic schools of law, Gibril Fouad Haddad, has dubbed al-Albānī "the chief innovator of our time" and accused him of bidʿa for publishing "corrected' editions of the two Sahihs of al-Bukhari and Muslim...in violation of the integrity of these motherbooks."⁹⁸

⁹³ See, for examples, al-Albānī, ed., Mukhtaşar Şaḥāḥ Muslim; 49 (#153 for the Jābir → Abū al-Zubayr al-Makkī flaw), 121 (#'s 446 and 448, which al-Albānī deems "weak"), 210 (#831, criticized for a lackluster transmitter, 'Umar b. Ḥamza), 343 (#1293, again for 'Umar b. Ḥamza), 272 (#1039 for Literal Matn Addition).

⁹⁴ Al-Albānī, ed., Sharh al-Aqīda al-Tahāwiyya, 23.

⁹⁵ Al-Albānī, Mukhtaşar Şahīh al-Bukhārī (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 1422/2002), 2:8–9.

⁹⁶ Al-Albānī, ed., Sharh al-Aqīda al-Ţahāwiyya, 37.

⁹⁷ Mahmūd Saʿīd Mamdūh, Tanbīh al-muslim ilā taʿaddī al-Albānī ʿalā Ṣaḥīh Muslim ([Cairo]: [n.p.], 1408/1987).

⁹⁸ See www.sunnah.org/history/Innovators/al_albani.htm, last accessed 5/31/04.

The works of two of al-Albānī's critics are particularly instructive in examining the dynamic between the canon and criticism. The most persistent detractor of al-Albānī's hadīth scholarship has been Maḥmūd Saʿīd Mamdūḥ, who studied with two of the scholar's bitterest adversaries, 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda and the Moroccan Sufi 'Abdallāh b. al-Ṣiddīq al-Ghumārī (d. 1993). Mamdūḥ has written at least four rebuttals of al-Albānī's work on different subjects, but al-Albānī's impudence in criticizing the Ṣaḥīḥayn has proven the lodestone for Mamdūḥ's attacks.⁹⁹ The most incisive and comprehensive defense of the Ṣaḥūḥayn canon, which perforce addresses al-Albānī's criticisms, is the monumental Makānat al-Ṣaḥūḥayn (The Place of the Ṣaḥūḥayn) of the Medinan scholar Khalīl Mullā Khāțir.

For Madhhab Traditionalists, al-Albānī's criticism poses two main challenges. First, it threatens the important role of the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon in scholarly culture. Second, it undermines the institutions of consensus, scholarly hierarchy and the vision of history on which the canon rests. At the root of the Traditionalists' refutations of al-Albānī's scholarship in general is his willingness to question the established practices and presuppositions of the Sunni scholarly tradition. Rejecting al-Albānī's condemnation of using weak ḥadīths in Islamic law and ritual, Mamdūḥ declares:

Indeed, I have concluded that his methods disagree with those of the jurists and hadīth scholars, and that he is creating (yuḥdithu) great disarray and evident disruption in the proofs of jurisprudence both generally and specifically. He lacks trust in the imāms of law and ḥadīth, as well as in the rich ḥadīth and law tradition handed down to us, in which the umma has taken great pride.¹⁰⁰

In contrast, Mullā Khāțir reiterates the predominant non-Salafī view of Islamic religious history, according to which later generations are only worthy of imitating the great scholars of yore. "Al-Bukhārī is a mujtahid," he explains, "and contemporary people are imitators (muqallid), walking according to his principles and constraints, as well as those of others like him from among the people of knowledge."¹⁰¹ In his rebuttal

⁹⁹ An additional example of Mamdūh's rebuttals of al-Albānī is his Wuşūl al-tahānī bi-ithbāt sunniyyat al-sibha wa al-radd 'alā al-Albānī. For a tangential discussion of al-Albānī's inappropriate criticism of al-Bukhārī, see Mamdūh, al-Naqd al-şahāh li-mā u'turida 'alayhi min ahādāth al-Maşābāh, 16–7 (see Ibn Hajar, Fath #'s 843 and 6329).

¹⁰⁰ Mamdūh, al-Ta'rīf bi-awhām, 1:14.

¹⁰¹ Mullā Khāțir, Makānat al-Şaḥīḥayn, 494.

of al-Albānī's removing weak hadīths from the Four Sunans, Mamdūh derides him for assuming that in the bygone ages Islam had been in error but that now, when the umma has devolved into the terminal and pervasive ignorance of endtime, he could return the community to the straight path. "As if the umma," he mocks, "was in error in the ages of light...l."¹⁰² Concerning al-Albānī's removal of weak hadīths from al-Bukhārī's work al-Adab al-mufrad, Mamdūh asks rhetorically, "I wonder, was al-Bukhārī, God bless him, unable to select the hadīths of al-Adab al-mufrad as he did with his Ṣahīh?"¹⁰³ Mullā Khāṭir, who is too polite to name al-Albānī specifically, merely talks of an "upstart at the end of time (ghirr fī ākhir al-zamān)" who impudently challenges the umma's consensus on the Ṣahīhayn's absolute authenticity.¹⁰⁴

The practical manifestation of the authority of tradition in Sunni scholarship is the notion of consensus, which transforms received opinion among scholars into a direct manifestation of God's authority as deposited in His chosen umma. One of the primary faults that Madhhab Traditionalists find in al-Albānī's criticism of the Sahīhayn is thus his rejection of the consensus established with regard to the two works' authenticity. Mamdūh states unequivocally in his Tanbīh that al-Albānī's deigning to "examine critically (al-nazar fi)" the Sahihayn constitutes an affront to the umma's acceptance of the two works and attacks the $im\bar{a}$ that had the scholars since the early 400s/1000s have declared on the two works. Even considering the possibility that some of the isnāds in the Sahīhavn contain flaws is to doubt the defining characteristic of the two books: all the material they contain is sahih by very dint of its inclusion.¹⁰⁵ The absolving power of $ijm\bar{a}$ provides the answers to any criticisms al-Albānī might raise about the Sahīhayn, such as the question of tadlis in the two works. Invoking the charitable declarations made by Ibn al-Salāh and al-Nawawī, Mamdūh explains, "The rules of hadīth have determined that al-Bukhārī and Muslim were correct, and the umma has agreed on this."106 He adds that al-Albānī "throws out the $ijm\bar{a}$ of the umma and the craft of its hadith masters, entering

¹⁰² Mamdūḥ, al-Ta'rīf bi-awhām, 1:11. This rebuttal duplicates early rebuttals of Wahhābism, such as that of 'Abd al-Wahhāb b. Aḥmad al-Shāfi'ī al-Azharī al-Tandatāwī's rebuttal of Ibn abd al-Wahhāb. See Traboulsi, "An Early Refutation of Muḥammad Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb's Reformist Views," 395.

¹⁰³ Mamdūh, al-Ta'rīf bi-awhām, 1:31.

¹⁰⁴ Mullā Khāțir, Makānat al-Sahīhayn, 127.

¹⁰⁵ Mamdūh, Tanbīh al-muslim, 13-14.

¹⁰⁶ Mamdūh, Tanbīh al-muslim; 24, 53.

into a matter settled long ago and whose authenticity was agreed on centuries ago." 107

Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's canonical function as the exemplum of excellence in hadīth scholarship also serves as an exhibit in the canon's defense. Their work defines the rules of hadīth scholarship, so who is al-Albānī to question their judgment? Mullā Khāțir states:

Al-Bukhārī and Muslim, may God bless them, they are the imāms of this science, the stallions of its arena, without peer in their time, the heroes of their age, in mastery, criticism, research, examination and in encompassing knowledge...there can be no objection to the Shaykhayn.¹⁰⁸

In addition to breaking with consensus, critics of al-Bukhārī and Muslim thus face the impossible task of superseding their ultimate expertise in hadīth.¹⁰⁹ Mullā Khāțir correctly adds that nowadays hadīth scholars cannot access all the material that al-Bukhārī and Muslim had at their disposal but has since vanished.¹¹⁰ How can al-Albānī thus dare to correct these vaunted masters?

Like Shāh Walī Allāh's defense of the Sahāhayn canon, Mamdūh and Mullā Khāțir also reject al-Albānī's criticisms because they threaten the canon's well-established utility. Mullā Khāțir notes that one of the properties of the two works is that one can act on their hadīths without any need to prove their authenticity.¹¹¹ Perhaps his greatest objection to al-Albānī's scholarship is the very notion of "correcting the Sahāhayn (tashāh al-Ṣahāhayn)," to which Mullā Khāțir devotes an entire chapter in his book. For him the very notion of qualifying the phrase "al-Bukhārī/Muslim included it" with the comment "and it is authentic" represents unmitigated effrontery to the purpose of the canon.¹¹² Mamdūh seconds this concern. "You see the hadīth masters (huffāz)," he states, "if they cite a hadīth from one of the Sahāhayn, that was sufficient to rule that the hadīth was authentic, so you do not see them researching the isnāds."¹¹³

¹⁰⁷ Mamdūh, Tanbīh al-muslim, 7.

¹⁰⁸ Mullā Khātir, Makānat al-Sahīhayn; 246, 256.

¹⁰⁹ Mullā Khātir, Makānat al-Sahīhayn, 318.

¹¹⁰ Mullā Khāțir, Makānat al-Sahīhayn, 488.

¹¹¹ Mullā Khātir, Makānat al-Sahīhayn, 80.

¹¹² Mullā Khātir, Makānat al-Sahīhayn, 474-6.

¹¹³ Mamdūh, Tanbīh al-muslim, 7.

Al-Albānī's criticism of the Sahīhayn also manifests the Salafī threat to the principles of following an established madhhab (taqlid) and the hierarchy of scholars so valuated among Madhhab Traditionalists. Mamdūh asserts that al-Albānī's criticizing the Sahīhayn invites further criticism of the two works and is a call for unconstrained independent reasoning (ijtihād) instead of the proper reliance on qualified scholars (taqlīd). Criticizing these established institutions of Islamic scholarship "opens a door we cannot easily shut."114 Furthermore, it represents a challenge to the hermeneutic hierarchy of the madhhabs and their system of authorized interpretation of texts. Mamdūh states that al-Albānī's opinions contain "great dangers" since he has given "to any claimant the right to judge the hadīths of the Sahīhavn by what he sees as within the bounds of the scientific principles of hadīth."115 Mullā Khātir's final evaluation of correcting the Sahīhavn is thus that criticizing "what the umma has agreed on is pure calumny and misguidance, the greatest of losses (al-khusrān al-mubīn) and the fatal blow (qāsimat al-zahr)."116

Conclusion:

Al-Albānī's Reply and the Continuity of Iconoclastic Hadīth Criticism

Al-Albānī was defiant in the face of his critics. He responded to Mamduh's condemnation of his reevaluation of some of Muslim's narrations by exclaiming, "As if, by Muslim's inclusion of these hadīths, they acquired some immunity (him^{an}) from criticism. That is without a doubt a mistake."117 In the last edition of his Mukhtasar Sahīh al-Bukhārī, al-Albānī states:

It is essential that I put forth a word of truth for the sake of scholarly integrity (li'l-amāna al-'ilmiyya) and exoneration from blame (tabri'a li'l*dhamma*, sic): a scholar must admit an intellectual truth expressed by Imām al-Shāfi'ī in a narration attributed to him: God has forbidden that any except His Book attain completion (abā Allah an yatimma illā kitābuhu).¹¹⁸

¹¹⁴ Mamdūḥ, Tanbīh al-muslim, 13–14.
¹¹⁵ Mamdūḥ, Tanbīh al-muslim, 24.

¹¹⁶ Mullā Khātir, Makānat al-Sahīhayn, 488.

¹¹⁷ Al-Albānī, ed., Mukhtaşar Ṣahīh Muslim, 17. Here al-Albānī seems to be directly quoting the seventh/thirteenth-century scholar of Marrakesh, Ibn al-Qattan al-Fasi (d. 628/1231) in his massive hadīth work Bayān al-wahm wa al-īhām. See Ibn al-Qattān al-Fāsī, Bayān al-wahm wa al-īhām, 4:298.

¹¹⁸ Al-Albānī, ed., Sharh al-Aqīda al-Ţahāwiyya, 23; idem, Mukhtasar Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī, 2:5-6.

After describing a problematic hadīth in al-Bukhārī's collection, he adds that this is but one of dozens of examples that demonstrate the ignorance "of those impudent ones who chauvinistically acclaim al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ, as well as that of Muslim, with blind loyalty and say with complete certainty that everything included in those two books is authentic."¹¹⁹

Here we see al-Albānī repeating essentially the same quote cited by al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī nine centuries earlier as he defended his right to criticize al-Bukhārī's identification of transmitters (although al-Khatīb cites al-Shāfi'ī's student al-Muzanī as the source). Both deny that any book other than the Qur'ān can be free from error or attain immunity from criticism. Al-Khatīb played a crucial role in constructing the Ṣaḥīḥayn's canonical culture, but he reserved the scholar's right to correct his predecessors. No work can achieve an impervious iconic status, for scholars always reserve the right to scrutinize it critically. Al-Albānī thus explains that "Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, despite its glory and the scholars' acceptance of it..., has not been totally free of criticism from some scholars."¹²⁰ Responding to the attacks of the Ḥanafī Abū Ghudda, al-Albānī correctly points out that the Ḥanafī school has a long and persistent history of criticizing the Ṣahīḥayn.¹²¹

Al-Albānī clarifies that his intention is not to reduce the utility of hadīth collections or question the authority of Prophetic reports. He is merely noting existing criticisms of hadīths found in the Ṣahīhayn for the benefit of the reader. Many such criticisms pertain only to one narration of the hadīth and not to the Prophetic tradition itself.¹²² In fact, he says that by showing that some hadīths criticized in works like Ibn Mājah's Sunan actually have authentic and reliable versions, he "has saved hundreds of hadīths from the weakness that some of their isnāds entail."¹²³

For al-Albānī, exempting the Ṣaḥāḥayn from critical review constitutes a betrayal of "scholarly integrity." Embracing a canonical culture that sacrifices critical honesty for the security of scholarly institutions violates a Muslim scholar's responsibility. The acceptability of criticizing the ¹¹⁹ Al-Albānī, Silsilat al-aḥādīth al-ṣaḥīḥa (Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 1416/1996), 6:2:93.

¹²⁰ Al-Albānī, Mukhtaşar Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, 2:7.

¹²¹ Al-Albānī, ed., Sharh al-Aqīda al-Tahāwiyya, 38-42.

¹²² Al-Albānī, Mukhtasar Sahīh al-Bukhārī, 2:4.

¹²³ Al-Albānī, Mukhtasar Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī, 2:5.

Sahīhayn enunciates the contrast between this Salafī attitude towards the canonical culture and that of its staunch supporters. When Ibn al-Jawzī declared some hadīths from Ibn Hanbal's Musnad forgeries because their contents seemed to contradict tenets of the faith, the great champion of the Sahīhayn canon, Ibn Hajar, wrote that we must try to reconcile this material and not dismiss it. "For if people open that door to rejecting hadiths," he wrote, "it would be claimed that many hadiths from the Sahihavn were false, but God most high and the believers have refused to let this happen."¹²⁴ In contrast, the Salafi hadīth scholar Ṭāhir al-Jazā'irī argues that Ibn Taymiyya justifiably criticized a hadith from al-Bukhāri's collection for unacceptable content. Al-Jazā'irī expresses surprise and concern over scholars who try to suppress discussion of mistakes in the Sahīhayn because they think that allowing criticism of the matn will open the door to the "people with agendas (ahl al-ahwā')." He disagrees, saying that proper criticism is a worthy practice.¹²⁵ Al-Albānī echoes this sentiment, saying that proper criticism based on the principles of hadith scholarship is never inappropriate. He quotes Mālik as saying that "there is not one among us who has not rebutted or been rebutted except the master of that grave [i.e., the Prophet] (s)."¹²⁶

Between al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī's invocation of the notion that no book except the Qur'ān is above criticism and al-Albānī's repetition of this mantra almost a thousand years later, we see a continuous strain of iconoclastic hadīth scholarship that survived alongside the burgeoning canonical culture of the Ṣahīhayn. The work of al-Dāraqutnī before the canonization of the Ṣahīhayn, and of al-Māzarī, al-Jayyānī and Ibn Abī al-Wafā' after it, represents the continued application of the critical methods of hadīth scholarship despite the protective culture constructed around the icons of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. Those scholars who elaborated and defended the canonical culture did so because they believed that the canon fulfilled certain crucial purposes in the scholarly community. Iconoclastic hadīth scholars like Ibn al-Muraḥhal and Ibn Abī al-Wafā' did not concede to prioritizing the canonical culture above the critical standards of ḥadīth criticism.

¹²⁴ Ibn Hajar, al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, 158.

¹²⁵ Al-Jazā'irī, Tawjīh al-nazar ilā usūl al-athar, 1:331–2.

¹²⁶ Al-Albānī, Sahīh al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb, 1:25.

Yet, if criticism of the Sahīhavn canon was not novel, why do vociferous condemnations of these critiques only begin in the early modern period? In the case of Shāh Walī Allāh, defending the canon was an act of protecting and consolidating the truly unifying institutions of Islam in the besieged and beleaguered Indian subcontinent. Possibly in the work of Shāh Walī Allāh, and certainly in the case of the Madhhab Traditionalists, we see that the Sahihayn serve as proxies for the institutions of classical Islamic scholarship. The Sahihayn canon was both a product of and a response to the needs of the Sunni legal and theological schools as they solidified in the fifth/eleventh century. The authority of al-Bukhārī and Muslim rested on the power of $ijm\bar{a}$. The Madhhab Traditionalists' categorical rejection of criticizing al-Bukhārī and Muslim stemmed from their perception that an attack on the two books was a manifestation of the Salafi attack on consensus, scholarly hierarchy and even the valuated notion of time itself. This dimension of criticizing the canon only appeared with the tremendous wave of revival and reform movements in the eighteenth century and the concomitant reemergence en force of the iconoclastic Salafī strain of hadīth scholarship with men like al-San'ānī and al-Albānī. Only in response to the unprecedented threats they posed to the unifying institutions of classical Islamic religious culture did these increasingly beleaguered institutions find it necessary to defend themselves.

CHAPTER NINE

CANON AND SYNECDOCHE: THE $AHĪHAYN IN NARRATIVE AND RITUAL

Introduction

So far, we have discussed the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon as a practical and powerful tool of scholarly debate and exposition. It is the kanòn of truth, the measure of authenticity through which the redemptive media of the Prophet's legacy can be applied decisively. It is the authoritative reference and exemplum that can be invoked to set the rule of a genre. Yet to remain focused solely on jurisprudence or the study of ḥadīth inexcusably limits the role of the Prophet's sunna in Muslim life. It ignores important dimensions of how text, authority and communal identification can interact through the medium of the Prophet's charismatic legacy. Our view has also been limited to the form of canonicity that Sheppard and Folkert conceived of as a criterion of distinction (Canon 1). As we widen our lens beyond the scholarly world, we must examine what functions al-Bukhārī and Muslim fulfilled in their capacity as Canon 2: a fixed collection and delimited set of texts.¹

The Prophet's persona has cast a commanding shadow in Islamic civilization, but it has often remained intangible. In the centuries after their canonization, the Ṣaḥīḥayn would thus meet a pressing need beyond their strictly scholarly functions: that of a trope representing the Prophet's legacy in the broader Sunni community. In both the realms of ritual and the construction of historical narrative in Islamic civilization, al-Bukhārī and Muslim would symbolize the Prophet's role as the pure wellspring of the faith and the liminal point through which his community could access God's blessings. The two works would be the part that symbolized and essentialized the whole, a synecdoche for Muḥammad himself.

As a literary trope, synecdoche closely resembles metonymy, or the replacement of one word with another because of some common association between them. Scholars like Hayden White, however, have distinguished between metonymy's function as a part representing the whole and synecdoche's function as a part essentializing it.² 'Fifty sails' indicates fifty ships metonymically, but the synecdoche of 'the English Crown' is the part of the royal person that essentializes the power and sovereignty of the British state. Due to the tremendous veneration that the Sahāhayn had earned in Sunni Islam as the most authentic reservoirs of the Prophet's legacy, they were ideally suited to essentialize it.

¹ Sheppard, "Canon," 66; Folkert, "The 'Canons' of 'Scripture,'" 173.

CHAPTER NINE

Delimiting the Infinite: Managing the Sunna through the Hadīth Canon

As Norman Calder observed, "One feature of Muslim tradition is that it acknowledges an indeterminately large body of hadith literature."³ The Prophet's oral legacy within his community is amorphous and boundless, subsuming a seemingly infinite number of reports ranging from the most well-authenticated hadīths to common household sayings popularly attributed to the Prophet. As al-Shāfi'ī noted in the second/eighth century and Ibn Taymiyya emphasized at the turn of the seventh/thirteenth, any claim to have encompassed all the extant hadīths attributed to the Prophet was absurd.⁴ In order to fulfill its important role in society, ritual and law, the Prophet's sunna thus needed to be contained in a manageable form. It is in this capacity that the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon, and the Sunni ḥadīth canon as a whole, has served admirably.

To the extent that there existed a simple need for some sort of synecdochic delimitation, the Sunni hadīth canon has been relatively ² Hayden V. White, Metahistory: the Historical Imagination in Nineteenth-Century Europe (Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1973), 31–34.

³ Norman Calder, "The Limits of Islamic Orthodoxy," in Intellectual Traditions in Islam, ed. Farhad Daftary (London: I.B. Tauris, 2000), 75. See also, Weiss, The Search for God's Law; 260, 266; Wheeler, Applying the Canon in Islam, 59.

⁴ Muḥammad b. Idrīs al-Shāfi'ī, al-Risāla, ed. Aḥmad Shākir (Beirut: al-Maktaba al-'Ilmiyya, [n.d.], a reprint of the 1940 Cairo edition), 42–3; Ibn Taymiyya, Raf[°] al-malām 'an al-a'imma al-a'lām, ed. Muḥyī al-Dīn Khaṭīb (Cairo: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, 1387/[1967]), 4. Al-Suyūṭī (d. 911/1505) claimed that all the ḥadīths of the Prophet could be encompassed by amalgamating all the collections of ḥadīth—a task he attempted in his massive al-'Jāmi' al-kabīr. Later scholars, however, such as Abū 'Alā' al-'Irāqī al-Fāsī (d. 1770–1) added over 5,000 ḥadīths that al-Suyūṭī had missed in his mega-collection; al-Suyūṭī, Jām' al-jawāmi', 1:1–2; 'Abd al-Ḥayy b. al-Ṣiddīq al-Ghumārī, Iqāmat al-hujja 'alā 'adam iḥāṭat aḥad min al-a'imma al-arba'a bi'l-sunna, (unpublished manuscript), 15.

elastic. Beyond the Sahihayn, we thus find common references to the canonical units of the Five or Six Books. Any delimited unit could theoretically stand in for the Prophet's sunna as a whole. When the great Ilkhanid vizier and historian Rashīd al-Dīn (d. 718/1318) sought to properly honor God's revelation and the sunna of the Prophet in one of his pious endowments, he ordered the custodians of his mosque to produce one copy of the Qur'ān and one copy of Ibn al-Athīr's Jāmi al-usūl fī ahādīth al-rasūl (Compendium of the Texts of the Prophet's Hadīths) every vear.⁵ Rashīd al-Dīn's reason for choosing the Our'ān for this purpose is obvious, but why did he select Ibn al-Athīr's Jāmi al-usūl? The minister must have felt that the work, which condenses the hadīths from the Sahīhayn, the collections of al-Tirmidhī, al-Nasā'ī, Abū Dāwūd and Mālik, effectively symbolized the Prophet's legacy and was the proper counterpart to God's revealed word. Earlier, the Alexandrian hadīth scholar Abū Ţāhir Ahmad b. Muhammad al-Silafī (d. 576/1180) had equated the Prophet's legacy synecdochically with the Five Books of al-Bukhārī, Muslim, Abū Dāwūd, al-Nasā'ī and al-Tirmidhī. He stated that those who opposed (mukhālif) these five books on which the umma had agreed opposed the Prophet himself and are like Islam's adversaries in Christian and pagan lands (dar al-harb).6

For al-Silafī, these five books symbolized the Prophet's very words and the normative legacy that bound the Sunni community together. To disagree with their status was thus to forgo membership in the Prophet's umma. In al-Silafī's statement, we can clearly perceive the unambiguous role that this set of authoritative texts played in defining the boundaries of the orthodox community. Like Moshe Halbertal's "text centered communities," the borders of al-Silafī's 'Abode of Islam (Dār al-Islām)' "are shaped in relation to loyalty to a shared canon."⁷

⁵ Rashīd al-Dīn stipulated that the two books then be placed between the pulpit and the prayer niche (mihrāb) and that an invocation be said for him, so that he might receive blessings for all those who benefited from them; Rashīd al-Dīn, Vaqfnāme-ye rob'-e rashīdī: al-vaqfiyya al-rashīdiyya be-khaiţ al-vāqef fī bayān sharā'eţ omūr al-vaqf wa al-maşāref (Tehran: Ketāb-khāne-ye Mellī, 1350/[1972]), 167.

⁶ Abū Tāhir Ahmad b. Muhammad al-Silafī, "Muqaddimat al-hāfiz al-kabīr Abī Tāhir al-Silafī," in al-Khațtābī, Maʿālim al-sunan, 4:362.

⁷ Halbertal, 129. We should note that this synecdochic use of a hadīth collection to represent the Prophet himself was not strictly limited to the Ṣaḥīḥayn or canons in which the two books formed the core. Abū 'Īsā al-Tirmidhī (d. 279/892), for example, is reported to have said that if you had his Jāmi' in your house, it is as if the Prophet himself was speaking in your home. Such claims, however, have been rare; the vast majority of synecdochic representations of the Prophet's sunna have centered on the Ṣahīḥayn or one of the two books; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:155.

CHAPTER NINE

Synecdoche in Ritual: Usage of the Ṣaḥīḥayn Canon in Ritual Contexts

Having been endowed with a substantial religious authority in the fifth/ eleventh century, al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections were well situated to dramatize religious meaning. The Sahīhayn canon has thus found plentiful usage in the realms of political, calendrical and supplicatory rituals. How would these two voluminous hadith books, however, be employed in a ritual setting? Kendall Folkert insightfully identified the two manners in which a canonical text can serve as a vehicle for meaning in ritual. First, a canonical text can function as a collection of scriptures accessed during the ritual. Second, the physical text of the canon can function as an actual participant in ritual. In this case, rather than just being a storehouse of authoritative writings, the canon can actually serve as a carrier of that authority in physical space. In addition to the contents of the books per se, the book itself can wield power as a symbol or icon.⁸ Reading al-Bukhārī's Sahīh over a sick person to heal him involves the first function of the canon; the contents of the book provide some communion with a higher power and access to God's blessings. An army carrying al-Bukhārī's collection before it like an ark, however, utilizes the second mode of canonical function; the physical book is a central participant in the ritual.

When used in the first mode, the Sahīhayn have served as scripture in public or private readings. Reading a book in public has long been the centerpiece of the Islamicate educational and collective religious experience. Just as Halbertal describes the Jewish text-centered community, Islamic religious books have been "a locus of religious experience" whose readings have constituted "a religious drama in and of itself."⁹ As Michael Chamberlain and Jonathan Berkey have shown in their studies on knowledge and society in medieval Damascus and Cairo respectively, the public reading of books was one of the main forms of cultural production in the Islamicate world.¹⁰ Even today in madrasas from Morocco to Indonesia, students gather to hear their teacher read a text or comment on a senior disciple's (sārid) reading.¹¹

⁸ Folkert, "The 'Canons' of 'Scripture," 178.

⁹ Halbertal, People of the Book, 7–8.

¹⁰ Michael Chamberlain, Knowledge and Social Practice in Medieval Damascus, 1190–1350 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994), 136; Jonathan Berkey, The Transmission of Knowledge in Medieval Cairo (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1992), 210 ff.

¹¹ See, for example, Dale F. Eickelman, "The Art of Memory: Islamic Education and its Social Reproduction," in Comparing Muslim Societies, ed. Juan R.I. Cole (Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1992).

At Friday prayers or lessons convened in the mosque for the general public, a professional reading of the Qur'ān, hadīth or pietistic texts serves as the crux of the performance or lesson. Books could also be read in private settings, either by individuals, in the households of notables or in the palaces of rulers for the sake of private appreciation or exclusive access to blessings.

But the Sahīhayn are not works of creative scripture, narrative or liturgical prose. They are essentially synecdochic segments cut out of the endless continuum of the Prophet's sunna, discrete instances of his normative legacy selected and arranged by al-Bukhārī or Muslim. Consisting of page after page of Prophetic hadīths with rare commentary, there is little beyond the editorial choices of the two scholars to provide any tangible notion of authorship. To read the Sahīhayn is to read a synecdoche of the Prophet's legacy, the value of which has been assured by the two great canonical figures of the Sunni hadīth tradition.

Although the Sahihavn could represent the sunna in a manageable form, the two works are nonetheless massive. Even professional hadīth scholars like al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī who devoted themselves to ceaseless study sessions of al-Bukhārī's work required at least several days to complete hearing the collection from a teacher.¹² As a result, public readings of al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's works could take a more accessible private-public form, with a select group of religious devotees gathering in a mosque or Sufi lodge to read the bulk of the text and the general public participating only in the culmination (khatm) of the book.¹³ Just as the congregation attending the nightly reading of the Our'an during Ramadan swells at the khatm of the holy book on the twenty-seventh night of the month, the putative Night of Power, so too the khatm of a Sahīh was the public ritual focus of its reading. As a result, from the late 800s/1400s we see a proliferation of books on performing the khatm of the Sahīhayn and other major hadīth works as well as providing vignettes about the lives of their authors, such as that of 'Abd al-Salām b. Mahmūd al-'Adawī (d. 1033/1623) on al-Bukhārī's collection and that of al-Sakhāwī on Abū Dāwūd's or al-Nasā'ī's Sunans.14

¹² Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:222.

¹³ See, for example, Yūsuf al-Kattānī, Madrasat al-Bukhārī fī al-Maghrib, 2 vols. (Beirut: Dār Lisān al-'Arab, [198–]), 2:549.

¹⁴ Sezgin, Geschichte des arabischen Schrifttums, 1:130; al-Sakhāwī, Badhl al-majhūd fi khatm al-Sunan li-Abī Dāwūd, ed. 'Abd al-Lațīf al-Jīlānī (Riyadh: Adwā' al-Salaf, 2003); idem, Bughyat al-rāghib al-mutamannī fi khatm al-Nasā'ī.

CHAPTER NINE

Let us now examine the three main vectors of ritual activity that have employed the Sahāhayn: supplicatory, calendrical and political. In all three cases, ritual use of the Sahāhayn seems to have begun in force during the seventh/thirteenth and eighth/fourteenth centuries, approximately two to three centuries after their canonization. There is scant evidence of ritual usage for the two books in sources covering the earlier period between the careers of al-Bukhārī and Muslim and the late sixth/twelfth century, like al-Khatīb's Tārīkh Baghdād, 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī's Tārīkh Naysābūr, Ibn al-Jawzī's al-Muntazam or 'Abd al-Karīm b. Muḥammad al-Rāfi'ī's (d. 623/1226) al-Tadwīn fī akhbār Qazwīn. It is not completely clear why ritual use of the Sahāḥayn began in this period, but exploring the nature of their usages may offer explanations.

a. Supplicatory and Medicinal Rituals

Supplicatory rituals are rites through which people call on the supernatural for assistance. This genre of ritual activity overlaps with rituals of exchange and communion, in which humans undertake an act in the hope or expectation that the supernatural will reciprocate.¹⁵ Employing the Saḥiḥayn canon in supplicatory or medicinal rituals seems to be the earliest ritual usage of the two books. This role of the books followed on the heels of the ritual attention paid in particular to al-Bukhārī's grave, which became a locus for intercession and miracles within a century of his death, as the Tārīkh Samarqand of 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥanmad al-Astarabādhī (d. 405/1015) informs us.¹⁶ The Andalusian muḥaddith Abū 'Alī al-Jayyānī (d. 498/1105) recounts that one Abū al-Fatḥ Naṣr b. al-Ḥasan al-Samarqandī (fl. 470/1080) visited him in Valencia in 464/1071–2 and described how the people of Samarqand had been afflicted by a terrible drought. This was alleviated only when the people of the city went to al-Bukhārī's grave and invoked God's mercy.¹⁷

An unusual ritual usage seems to have appeared for Muslim's Sahāh in the early sixth/twelfth century, when it became the vehicle for an apparently isolated ordeal of mourning. When the son of the scholar Abū al-Qāsim Ismāʿīl b. Muḥammad al-Taymī (d. 535/1140–1) died, he buried him and then read Sahāḥ Muslim by his grave in Hamadhān.

¹⁵ Catherine Bell, Ritual: Perspectives and Dimensions (New York: Oxford University Press, 1997), 108.

¹⁶ Cited from al-Ṣaghānī, Asāmī, 1-2. See Chapter 7, n. 41.

¹⁷ Al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 19:273–4; cf. al-Qastallānī, Irshād al-sārī, 1:29.

In an act reminiscent of a ritual rejoining of the community after a transitional ordeal, the day al-Taymī finished his reading he set up a large table with sweets and food and invited all his friends to join him in a feast.¹⁸ We have no other evidence, however, of the Ṣahīhayn being used in this manner.

By the 700s/1300s al-Bukhārī's Saḥīh had become a well-known tool for people seeking God's intervention in times of illness and hardship within the cultural orbit of Mamluk Egypt and Syria. The Damascene Tāj al-Dīn al-Subkī (d. 771/1370) notes that the book was "a refuge from predicaments (mu'dilat) and well-tried for responding to needs," adding that "this is a well-known matter, and if we were pushed to mention all this and what occurred with it, the explanation would be too lengthy."¹⁹ In 790/1388, one of the many instances in which the bubonic plague struck Cairo, the Shāfi'ī chief judge ordered al-Bukhārī's work read in the Azhar Mosque as a plea for relief. When the plague continued, he ordered it read again two weeks later in the Mosque of al-Hākim. In a final, desperate petition for divine succor, the judge convened a reading three days later in the Azhar Mosque with orphaned children in attendance.²⁰ Muhammad b. Yūsuf al-Kirmānī (d. 786/1384) explains that he decided to write his onamastically focused commentary on al-Bukhārī because "a certain sultan from an important Muslim land (ba'd ummahāt bilād al-Islām)" (probably the Mamluk sultan) fell ill and wanted al-Bukhārī's work read over him so that its blessing (baraka) might cure him. The scholars charged with the reading, however, could not confidently read the isnāds without stumbling over the unvoweled names of the transmitters.²¹ The Cairene Ibn Hajar al-'Asqalānī reported that his teacher Abū Muhammad 'Abdallāh b. Abī Hamza was told by a "mystic ('ārif)" that "Sahīh al-Bukhārī has not been read in a time of severity except that this has been relieved, nor [has anyone who read it] when embarking a ship [had that] ship sink." He adds that Ibn Kathīr says that al-Bukhārī's collection can be read as an invocation for rain $(istisq\bar{a})^{,22}$

¹⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 4:51.

¹⁹ Al-Subkī, Ṭabaqāt, 2:234.

²⁰ Taqī al-Dīn Ahmad b. 'Alī al-Maqrīzī (d. 845/1441), Kitābal-sulūk li-ma'rifat duval al-mulūk, ed. Sa'īd 'Abd al-Fattāḥ 'Āshūr, 11 vols. in 4 (Cairo: Maţba'at Dār al-Kutub, 1970), 3:2:577.

²¹ Al-Kirmānī, al-Kawākib al-darārī, 1:5.

²² Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 14; al-Qastallānī, Irshād al-sārī, 1:29.

CHAPTER NINE

In the Ottoman Hijāz, the Hanafī émigré from Herat, Mullā 'Alī Qārī (d. 1014/1606), tells us that al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ had been dubbed "the well-tried antidote (al-tiryāq al-mujarrab)." He quotes one Sayyid Aşīl al-Dīn as saying, "I have read al-Bukhārī one hundred and twenty times for events (waqā'i') and important tasks (muhimmāt) of mine and of others, and the desired result occurred and the needs were met...."²³ The reputation of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ had spread as far as India in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. Shāh Walī Allāh's son, Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz (d. 1824), says that reading the work in times of severity, fear, illness, famine or drought "is a tried and tested cure."²⁴

There is much less evidence for widespread use of Muslim's book in medicinal or supplicatory rituals. Nonetheless, the collection did attain at least a portion of the fame of its more illustrious counterpart. The famous Central Asian hadīth and Qur'ān scholar Muḥammad b. Muḥammad Ibn al-Jazarī (d. 833/1429), for example, read part of Muslim's Ṣaḥīħ at Muslim's grave for baraka.²⁵

b. Calendrical Rituals

Calendrical rituals impose a framework of human significance on the abstract dimension of time or the endless cycles of nature. In general, such rituals are either based on the seasons or on commemorating important moments in a community's collective experience. In the Islamic calendrical system, where the calendar year has been deliberately severed from the solar year and planting seasons, religious holidays serve as anchors in the Muslim sense of time. The month of Ramadan and the Night of Power are thus two markers of the Islamic year.²⁶ As we shall see, a three-month reading of the Şaḥīḥayn would also effectively create a ritual 'season.'

The use of the Ṣaḥīḥayn in calendrical rituals seems to have begun slightly later than the books' supplicatory role. From the available evidence, it seems that around the early eighth/fourteenth century

²³ Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīḥ, 1:13.

²⁴ Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Dihlawī, Bustān al-muhaddithīn, 75.

²⁵ Abū Muḥammad 'Abdallāh b. Muḥammad Yūsuf Efendizāde, "'Ināyat almālik al-mun'im li-sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim," MS 343–5 Hamidiye, Süleymaniye Library, Istanbul: 1:3b.

²⁶ Bell, Ritual, 103.

al-Bukhārī's book, and to a lesser extent Muslim's, was being read in mosques to mark the consecutive months of Rajab, Sha'bān and Ramadan, climaxing with the celebration at the end of the holy month. In Cairo, the Mamluk sultan al-Zāhir Barqūq (d. 801/1399) hired a scholar to read the Ṣaḥīḥayn in his newly founded Zāhiriyya Mosque during Sha'bān and Ramadan.²⁷ In 1515 CE, the madrasa of al-Sayfī Baybars was founded in Cairo and a scholar was hired specifically to read Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī during Rajab, Sha'bān and Ramadan.²⁸

Even in the far-flung Songhay empire of Mali, with its grand mudbuilt capital at Timbuktu, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Abdallāh al-Sa'dī (d. after 1065/1655–6), an imām in Jenne and administrator in Timbuktu, tells us that the Ṣaḥīḥayn were read in mosques during these three months. This is not surprising, since Mali's scholars traveled and studied in the Maghrib, Egypt and the Ḥijāz, bringing ritual practices back with them. Aḥmad b. Aḥmad Aqīt of Timbuktu (d. 991/1583) recited the Ṣaḥīḥayn during Rajab, Sha'bān, and Ramadan annually for over twenty years.²⁹ His contemporary, the ḥadīth scholar Aḥmad b. al-Ḥājj Aḥmad b. 'Umar, was also known as "the reciter of the two Ṣaḥīḥs in the Sankore mosque."³⁰ Across the vast dune sea to the northwest, an anonymous mid-ninth/fifteenth-century scholar in Marrakesh would read al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ to the descendents of the Prophet in the city during Ramadan.³¹

Even in Syria in the late 1800s, al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ was read in the Naṣr Dome of the Umayyad Mosque in Rajab, Sha'bān and Ramadan with great attendance and fanfare.³² In Morocco during the same period, main mosques and Sufi lodges began reading the Ṣaḥīḥ in Rajab, continued through Sha'bān and finished on the Night of Power in Ramadan.³³ Al-Bukhārī's collection was also read on other important religious occasions. In 1119/1707–8, for example, 'Abdallāh b. Sālim ²⁷ Berkey, The Transmission of Knowledge in Medieval Cairo, 213.

²⁸ Berkey, The Transmission of Knowledge in Medieval Cairo, 17, 75.

²⁹ John Ö. Hunwick, Timbuktu and the Songhay Empire: al-Sa'dī's Ta'rīkh al-sūdān down to 1613 and other Contemporary Documents (Leiden: Brill, 1999), 61. For more on scholars in Timbuktu, see Elias N. Saad, Social History of Timbuktu: the Role of Muslim Scholars and Notables 1400–1900 (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983), 58–126.

³⁰ Hunwick, Timbuktu and the Songhay Empire, 46.

³¹ Hunwick, Timbuktu and the Songhay Empire, 69-70.

³² Commins, The Salafi Reform Movement in Damascus, 57-8.

³³ Al-Kattānī, Madrasat al-Bukhārī fī al-Maghrib, 2:544-5.

al-Bașrī (d. 1722) was assigned to read the work at the Grand Mosque in Mecca upon its renovation by the orders of the Ottoman Sultan Aḥmad III.³⁴

c. Political Rituals

One of the most dramatic usages of the Sahīhayn canon has been in the realm of political ritual, which generally serves two primary functions. First, rites of political ritual create a sense of coherence and common order among a collectivity of people. Second, they legitimize this sense of political community by establishing a link between it and the higher orders of the cosmos.35 The usage of the Sahīhayn in political ritual seems to have begun in the seventh/thirteenth and eighth/fourteenth centuries in Mamluk Egypt and Syria. The Mamluk army that marched out of Cairo against the Ilkhanid Mongols at the beginning of the eighth/thirteenth century was led by a person carrying Sahih al-Bukhārī.³⁶ Ibn Kathīr says that in Sha'bān 766/1365, when the amīr Sayf al-Dīn Baydar (the Mamluk sultan's erstwhile deputy in Syria) returned to Damascus to take up the governorship of the city, prominent citizens received him with a large public celebration. These festivities involved public readings of the final sections of al-Bukhārī's Sahīh (khatmat al-Bukhāriyyāt) in the Umayyad Mosque and other locations in succession at different mosques all day. Meanwhile Sahīh Muslim was being read at the Hanbalī mihrāb at the Nūriyya madrasa near the Umayyad Mosque. Ibn Kathīr, who was responsible for arranging all this, said that such an event had not taken place at any other time in recent years.37 When the army of the Moroccan Sa'dian dynasty marched out of their ochre-colored southern capital of Marrakesh to fight the invading Portuguese in 998/1589-90, scholars performed a public khatm of al-Bukhārī's Sahīh as the army left the gates.³⁸

Perhaps the most consistently cunning exploiter of the Sahāhayn canon for political ritual has been the reigning 'Alawid dynasty of Morocco. Deriving their political legitimacy from their descent from the Prophet, ³⁴ Voll, "'Abdallah b. Salim al-Basri and 18th Century Hadith Scholarship," 360.

³⁵ Bell, Ritual, 129.

³⁶ J. De. Somogyi, "Adh-Dhahabi's record of the destruction of Damascus by the Mongols in 699–700/1299–1301," Goldziher Memorial 1 (1948): 361.

³⁷ Ibn Kathīr, al-Bidāya wa al-nihāya, 14:326–7.

³⁸ Al-Kattānī, Madrasat al-Bukhārī fī al-Maghrib, 2:549.

'Alawid rulers have turned to al-Bukhārī's Sahīh as a physical manifestation of Muhammad's legacy. The true founder of the dynasty, the conqueror and statesman Mawlā Ismā'īl (d. 1727), sought to transform his patrimony from a family of raiders dependent on the ephemeral loyalties of local Berber tribes into a true state with a dependable standing army. He thus built up a core unit of African slave soldiers, originally captured in the conquest of gold-laden Timbuktu, to serve as the centerpiece of his army. This unit grew in size, as Mawlā Ismā'īl had their sons trained by artisans and then enlisted in the ranks upon reaching the age of ten, until it reached the awesome size of 150,000 men.³⁹ Mawlā Ismā'īl dubbed these soldiers "The Slaves of al-Bukhārī (Abid al-Bukhāri)," for it was upon the Sahih and its representation of the Prophet's sunna that their loyalty to their ruler was based. The Moroccan archivist and historian Abū al-'Abbās Ahmad al-Nāsirī (d. 1897) explains that in his efforts to free himself of reliance on the fickle loyalties of tribal forces, Mawlā Ismā'īl gathered the leaders of his slave regiment around a copy of al-Bukhārī's Sahīh. He said:

I and you are slaves to the sunna of the Messenger of God (s) and his sacred law as collected in his book (i.e., the $Sah\bar{i}h$), so all that he has commanded we will do, and all that he has forbidden we will forsake, and by it we will fight (wa 'alayhi nuqātil).

He then took their oaths by al-Bukhārī's book. At one end of the great parade ground that the ruler built for his praetorian at his hilltop imperial palace in Meknes, Mawlā Ismā'īl constructed a madrasa named after al-Bukhārī. He ordered that copy of the Ṣaḥīḥ on which the soldiers' oaths had been taken preserved there and that they carry it "like the Ark of the Children of Israel (tābūt banī Isrā'īl)" when they went out on campaign.⁴⁰

The 'Alawid dynasty has maintained the prominent place of $Sah\bar{i}h$ al-Bukhārī in political rituals. When King Hasan I came to Rabat on Eid al-Fitr in 1873, he ordered festivities including the reading of the Sahīh and culminating in a large public gathering with all the city's notables. The king also did this upon the completion of his royal palace in Rabat. $^{\rm 41}$

³⁹ Abū al-Qāsim al-Zayyānī, al-Bustān al-zarīf fī dawlat awlād mawlāya al-sharīf, ed. Rashīd al-Zāwiya (Rabat: Maţba'at al-Ma'ārif al-Jadīda, [1992]), 1:171; Maurice Delafosse, "Les débuts des troupes noires du Maroc," Hespéris 3 (1923): 7–8.

⁴⁰ Abū al-'Abbās Ahmad b. Khālid al-Nāşirī, Kītāb al-islisqā li-akhbār duwal al-Maghrib al-aqşā, ed. Ja'far al-Nāşirī and Muḥammad al-Nāşirī, 9 vols. (Casablanca: Dār al-Kitāb, 1956), 7:58.

The 'Alawid dynasty has relied on its claim of descent from the Prophet as the central pillar of its political legitimacy in Morocco. Basing the esprit de corps of his praetorian on al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ and maintaining the collection as the unit's mascot reinforced Mawlā Ismā'īl's chosen role as heir to the Prophet's political authority. The Ṣaḥīḥ's ability to stand in for the Prophet's persona in ritual, literally carried before the king's advancing army, was central to the logic of this political ritual. Similarly, the esteemed station of the Ṣaḥīḥayn allowed Ibn Kathīr to help transform the arrival of the Baḥrī Mamluk governor in Damascus into an evocation of religious significance.

The Ritual Power of the Sahihayn: The Muhammadan Blessing

In Islam, God is the source of all baraka, or what Josef Meri calls "the stuff of faith."⁴² It is the blessing by which men's felicity is ensured in both the earthly life and the hereafter. Proximity to God through either piety or some link to a liminal figure entails greater access to His baraka.⁴³ As the receptacle of revelation and the bridge between the divine and the temporal, the Prophet is the ultimate liminal figure in Islam. As the perfect human, possessed of "tremendous character (Qur'ān 68:4)," and on whom God and the angels "shower their prayers (Qur'ān 33:56)," the figure of Muḥammad has enjoyed the greatest access to baraka. His persona is the most completely endowed with "the capacity to mediate between humanity and the Deity."⁴⁴ Imitating his lifestyle and obeying his commands as embodied in the Sharia enables Muslims to approach this locus of God's blessings. Gaining physical or aural proximity to the Prophet's words, his relics or members of his family provides extended access to his liminality.⁴⁵ Similarly, pious individuals who have themselves

⁴¹ Al-Kattānī, Madrasat al-Bukhārī fī al-Maghrib, 2:547.

⁴² Josef W. Meri, The Cult of Saints among Muslims and Jews in Medieval Syria (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002), 17.

⁴³ See G.S. Colin, "Baraka," EP; Ernest Gellner, Saints of the Atlas (London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1969), 12.

⁴⁴ Gellner, Saints of the Atlas, 70.

⁴⁵ For a discussion of the salvational role of the Prophet and his family in Egyptian popular Sufism, see Valerie J. Hoffman-Ladd, "Devotion to the Prophet and His Family in Egyptian Sufism," International Journal of Middle East Studies 24 (1992): 617. For a earned a station close to God and His blessing themselves become loci of liminality and baraka for others.

Like saints, who wield extraordinary powers through their proximity to God, books enjoying such proximity are also a "nexus of baraka, miracles and mediation...."⁴⁶ Michael Chamberlain describes religious knowledge (ilm) as a source of blessing (baraka) that Muslims of all social standings tried to acquire.⁴⁷ The pursuit and study of ilm was thus a ritual practice, equated with forms of worship such as ritual remembrance of God (dhikr) and canonical prayer, and thus requiring the same levels of ritual purity. Acquiring knowledge was a "collective liminal experience" in which the attempt to grasp and appreciate God's will brought the audience closer to Him.⁴⁸

Reading or listening to a performance of a hadīth collection was thus to increase one's proximity to God's blessings as deposited and dispensed through His Prophet. As J.Z. Smith states, "Ritual is, first and foremost, a mode of paying attention. It is a process for marking interest."⁴⁹ In the ritual logic of the audience, reading Muḥammad's words is to give his person and legacy attention. To consider his example is to please God as the Prophet had pleased Him and incur that blessing that God showered upon him. It is to walk that path of liminality. The ritual of listening to or acting on a ḥadīth becomes a metaphoric act of accessing the blessings the Prophet enjoyed.⁵⁰

The conspicuous Muslim habit of calling God's peace and blessings down upon the Prophet after every mention of his name in either written or oral expression emphasizes the role of the Prophet as a channel for access to God's baraka. One widely cited hadīth states that "whoever prays upon me once, God prays upon him ten times."⁵¹ In activities such discussion of the role of the descendents of the Prophet (igurram) among Berbers in Morocco, see Gellner, Saints of the Atlas, 70-80.

⁴⁶ Taylor, In the Vicinity of the Righteous, 127.

⁴⁷ Chamberlain, Knowledge and Social Practice, 122.

⁴⁸ Chamberlain, Knowledge and Social Practice, 127-9.

⁴⁹ Jonathan Z. Smith, To Take Place: Towards Theory in Ritual (Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1987), 103.

⁵⁰ See Edmund Leach, Culture and Communication (Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1976), 30 ff.

⁵¹ Şaḥīḥ Muslim: kitāb al-şalāt, bāb 17; Sunan Abī Dāwūd: kitāb al-witr, bāb 26; Sunan al-Nasā'ī: kitāb al-sahw, bāb 55; Jāmi' al-Tirmidhī: kitāb al-salāt, bāb 240; Sunan al-Dārimī: kitāb al-raqā'iq, bāb 58. Al-Tirmidhī's citation of the hadīth is followed by the earliest occurrence I have found of the explanation, here attributed to Sufyān al-Thawrī, that God's 'prayer' upon mankind is mercy (raḥma), while that of the angels is 'seeking forgiveness [for mankind] (istighfār).' Other, more unusual reports on this issue include

as the Sunni canonical prayer, in fact, invocations for the Prophet's sake equal or supersede the performer's set prayers for himself or herself. Here Muhammad becomes a proxy for the believer's own personal invocations. The Egyptian Shāfi'ī al-Sakhāwī (d. 902/1497) notes that the purpose of such intense prayer on the Prophet is "growing close to God most high by imitating His act [of blessing the Prophet] and fulfilling the right due the Prophet (s)." Al-Sakhāwī quotes one Abū Muhammad al-Marjānī as saying, "In calling your prayers on him [the Prophet], you are, in truth, because of the benefits that these prayers return to you, praying for yourself."52 The benefits of calling God's peace and blessings down upon the Prophet extend to the scholarly realm of those who write books in addition to their audiences. Abū Tāhir al-Silafī mentions a hadīth that guarantees baraka for an author who writes "may the peace and blessings of God be upon him" after the Prophet's name. The hadīth states that "whoever prays (sallā 'alayya) for me in a book, angels will continue to pray for him as long as my name is in that book."53

In ritual, the Sahīhayn thus act synecdochically as a channel for God's blessings as transmitted through the Prophet. The Mamluk sultan whom al-Kirmānī mentioned as having fallen ill hoped the baraka of Sahīh al-Bukhārī would cure him.⁵⁴ We find in the letter of the Moroccan scholar 'Abd al-Kabīr b. Muḥammad al-Kattānī (d. 1914–5) instructions to read through al-Bukhārī's Sahīh in mosques and houses in order to get the "Muḥammadan intercession (al-shafā'a al-muḥammadiyya).⁵⁵ Mullā 'Alī Qārī quotes Sayyid Aṣīl al-Dīn as crediting the miraculous powers of the Sahīḥ "to the barakāt of the most noble of the nobles (the Prophet) and the source of felicity, may the most favored prayers and most perfect greeting be upon him."⁵⁶ one attributed to Abū Bakr that "prayer upon the Prophet eliminates sins more than water does fire...;" al-Khațīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 7:172.

⁵² Al-Sakhāwī, al-Qawl al-badī' fī al-salāt 'alā al-habīb al-shafī' (Beirut: Maţba'at al-Inşāf, 1383/1963), 25. "Indeed God and His angels pray upon the Prophet; O you who believe shower prayers and blessings upon him (Qur'ān 33:56)."

⁵³ Al-Silafī, al-Wajīz fī dhikr al-majīz wa al-mujīz, ed. Muḥammad Khayr al-Biqā'ī (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1411/1991), 95.

⁵⁴ Al-Kirmānī, al-Kawākib al-darārī, 1:5.

⁵⁵ Al-Kattānī, Madrasat al-Bukhārī fī al-Maghrib, 2:545–6.

⁵⁶ Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Mirqāt al-mafātīh, 1:13.

The synecdochic function of the Ṣaḥāḥayn in these rites provides the best explanation for why ritual usage of the canon began on any appreciable scale only in the seventh/thirteenth century. Marshall Hodgson notes that at this time Islamicate civilization in the Nile-Oxus region had reached some critical distance from the faith's epicenter in the person of the Prophet. Society required new vehicles for bridging this divide and accessing the Prophet's baraka, and the seventh/thirteenth and eighth/fourteenth centuries thus witnessed an intensified interest in pilgrimages to Muḥammad's grave in Medina, those of his purported descendents throughout the Islamic world and other local saints.⁵⁷ The Ṣaḥāḥayn provided a textual alternative.

The popularization of the Ṣaḥīḥayn in public rituals such as readings during Ramadan mirrors the wider popularization of communal ritual such as those practiced by Sufi brotherhoods, which began flourishing in their institutional tarīqa form in the 600s/1200s.⁵⁸ Similarly, the initiative that the Mamluk rulers took in organizing and funding public readers of the Ṣaḥīḥayn dovetails with their general sponsorship of popular religious practices, such as building major Sufi lodges in Cairo and Damascus.⁵⁹

The Canon and Synecdoche in Narrative: A Salvational Trope in a Narrative of Decline and Salvation

Just as the Sahīhayn represented the Prophet's liminality and charisma, granting access to the baraka to which he was the key, al-Bukhārī and Muslim also became a synecdochic trope for scholars constructing narrative in Islamic history. Hadīth literature is not limited to the dry compilation and criticism of Prophetic reports. It encompasses a network of genres that either orbit the collection and evaluation of reports or mold these activities into forms that address specific needs. Hadīth-oriented biographical dictionaries like Tārīkh Baghdād, works on 'ilal and the technical terms of hadīth evaluation fit into the first category. The second category includes specific types of hadīth collections that could channel the Prophet's charisma through an individual scholar's personal religious expression. Mustakhrajs, personal mu'jams documenting all the lands to which a collector had traveled (riḥla) and all the teachers from whom he had heard (mashyakha, barnāmaj), as well as the great ḥadīth collections themselves fall into the second. Together, all these genres weave a meta-narrative that serves as the shared culture of ḥadīth scholars or those other Muslim sages or laity who trade on their domain.

⁵⁷ Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, 2:453; Taylor, In the Vicinity of the Righteous, 14.

⁵⁸ J. Spencer Trimingham, The Sufi Orders in Islam (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998), 9–10; J.O. Hunwick et al., "Taşawwuf," *EI*².

⁵⁹ Taylor, In the Vicinity of the Righteous, 12 ff.

This is a romantic narrative of decline and salvation. It constantly replays what Marshall Hodgson called "the old man's view of history," in which the community seems bound inevitably towards religious and moral entropy but clings to a lingering hope for the survival of the true faith through the uniquely pious efforts of the scholar. "The best of generations is the one in which I was sent, then that which comes after it, then that which follows"; this Prophetic tradition embodies the Sunni vision of religious history, as the Muslim community drifts farther and farther in time from the epicenter of the Prophet's mission. Each successive age after that greatest community has a more tenuous grasp of the Prophet's salvational message.⁶⁰

Ibn Hibbān (d. 354/965) thus complains that his surroundings were flooded with ever-multiplying attributions to the Prophet and dilettantes who could not tell authentic hadīths from forged ones.⁶¹ His student al-Hākim writes in the beginning of his Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth:

Indeed, when I saw heretical innovations in religion (bida[°]) increasing in our time, and the people's knowledge of the fundamentals of the sunna decreasing...this called me to compose a small book including all the branches of the sciences of hadīth that students of reports might need....⁶²

⁶⁰ See Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, 1:381; see also, Tarif Khalidi, Arabic Historical Thought in the Classical Period, 25; idem, "The Idea of Progress in Classical Islam," Journal of Near Eastern Studies 40, no. 4 (1981): 277–89. Other examples of hadīths or statements expressing this historical entropy include the hadīth "there will not come upon you a time except that the era after it will be worse (lā ya'tī 'alaykum zamān illā wa alladhī ba'dahu sharr minhu), and the statement attributed to al-Hasan al-Başırī, "every year you (pl.) will worsen (kull 'ām tardhulūn)"; Sahīḥ al-Bukhārī: kitāb al-fitan, bāb lā ya'tī 'alaykum zamān illā wa alladhī ba'dahu sharr minhu; Mullā 'Alī Qārī, al-Maṣnū' fī ma'rifat al-ḥadīth al-mawdū', ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda, 6th ed. (Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1426/2005), 136.

⁶¹ Ibn Hibbān, Sahīh Ibn Hibbān, 1:58.

⁶² Al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 2.

In the introduction to his commentary on Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, al-Khaṭṭābī says:

I contemplated the recourse for the affairs of our time, such as the scarcity of ilm, the prevalence of ignorance (jahl), and the dominance of the people of religious heresies (bida^c), that many of the people's affairs have deviated towards their different schools of thought (madhāhib) and turned away from the holy book and the sunna. I feared that this matter would become more severe in days to come, that knowledge will be more preciously rare (a'azz) due to the paucity of those whom I see today... attending faithfully to [hadīth] and attaining a sound (sāliḥ) level of knowledge in it.⁶³

Writing over a century later in Khurāsān, al-Baghawī (d. 516/1122) describes the crises of heresy and ignorance on his environment: "Nothing remains of the religion except its outlines (rasm), nor of knowledge except its name, to the point that falsity is considered to be the truth among most people in our time, and ignorance is confused with knowledge."⁶⁴

In the face of this decline, the struggle of the 'true Sunni scholars' to preserve the legacy of the Prophet represents the only hope for personal and communal salvation. One of the most frequently quoted hadīths in the introductions to works of hadīth literature thus prophesies, "One party from among my umma will always stand by the truth unharmed by those who forsake them, until the command of God comes."⁶⁵ Ibn Ḥanbal is frequently quoted as identifying this sect with the ahl al-hadīth, whom al-Ḥākim describes as "trumping the people of heresy with the sunna of God's messenger."⁶⁶ Only by stubbornly clinging to the continuous study and repetition of the Prophet's legacy can the hadīth tradition fulfill its destiny as the sole guardians of Islam's pure origins.

Moreover, it is always the author's own immediate efforts that embody this hope of salvation. Al-Baghawī thus offers his huge legal compendium of hadīth (Sharh al-sunna) as an attempt to revive the path of the ⁶³ Al-Khattābī, A lām al-hadīth, 1:102-3.

⁶⁴ Al-Baghawī, Sharh al-sunna, ed. Shu'ayb Arnā'ūt and Zuhayr al-Shāwīsh, 14 vols. ([Beirut]: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1390/1971), 1:3–4.

⁶⁵ "Lā tazālu ţā'ja min ummatī zāhirīn 'alā al-haqq lā yadurruhum man khadhalahum hattā ya'tiya amr Allāh"; Ṣahīh Muslim: kitāb al-imāra, bāb qawlihi (ş) lā tazālu ṭā'jfa.... For another version, see al-Hākim, Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth, 2.

⁶⁶ Yahyā b. Manda, Juz' fihi manāqib al-shaykh al-Ṭabarānī, 5b (quoted from al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī's lost Manāqib ashāb al-ḥadīth).

CHAPTER NINE

righteous forbears who established the religion, acting as "one striving to light a lamp in the encompassing darkness, [so that] the perplexed can be guided by it or someone seeking guidance can find the path."⁶⁷

The notion of the sahīh movement as the pinnacle of hadīth scholarship, evident after the writings of Ibn Manda (d. 395/1004–5), provided a convenient trope in this narrative. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim in particular came to represent the acme of critical rigor in hadīth study. Majd al-Dīn Ibn al-Athīr (d. 606/1210) describes how, while the number of hadīth collections blossomed in the wake of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's careers, their authors were pursuing all sorts of agendas (aghrād, maqāşid) and the glorious age of the Shaykhayn had vanished (inqaraḍa). Even with the continued work of Abū Dāwūd, al-Tirmidhī and al-Nasā'ī, it was as if the age of al-Bukhārī and Muslim "was the sum of all ages in terms of the acquisition of that science ('ilm), and it ended with it. Afterwards that quest waned."⁶⁸

Because they represented the pinnacle of achievement in the hadīth tradition, the Sahīhayn could serve as the perfect symbol for the Prophet's legacy in the narratives that scholars spun around the tension between the 'authentic teachings of the Prophet (sunna)' and 'heretical innovation (bid'a)' in Islamic religious culture. Writing within a Sunni community that acknowledged the two works' unparalleled status, scholars could wield them as representations of the salvation that results from embracing the Prophet's authentic legacy.⁶⁹

a. Khwāje Abdallāh al-Anṣārī and the Beginning of Synecdoche in Narrative

The earliest extant example of Muslim scholars utilizing the Ṣaḥīḥayn as a synecdoche for the Prophet's legacy in narrative comes from the fifth/eleventh century writing of Abū al-Faḍl al-Maqdisī (d. 507/1113). His teacher in the Khurāsānī city of Herat, the fierce über-Sunni Khwāje 'Abdallāh al-Anṣārī (d. 481/1089), cuts an interesting figure in Islamic intellectual history. A staunch Ḥanbalī who condemned the cultivation of speculative theology in a massive multivolume book, he was also a committed Sufi who penned a complex work on the technical terminology of mysticism and the progressive stages toward complete consciousness of God.⁷⁰ Al-Dhahabī cites an apparently lost text from al-Magdisī describing the famous Seljug vizier Nizām al-Mulk summoning Khwāje 'Abdallāh to a debate in Herat. Both the vizier and his master, the Seljuq sultan Alp Arslan, had arrived in Herat on a visit and had heard complaints from Shāfi'ī and Hanafī scholars about Khwāje 'Abdallāh's intolerant über-Sunnism. He had stated, for example, that he would curse anyone who denied that God was physically above the earth. Nizām al-Mulk demanded that Khwāje 'Abdallāh respond to his detractors in a debate, and the scholar agreed on one condition: that he be allowed to debate his opponents only with what he had in his two sleeve pockets (kumm). Nizām al-Mulk asked what the pockets contained, and Khwāje 'Abdallāh replied, "The Book of God," pointing to his right sleeve (kumm), "and the sunna of the Messenger of God," pointing to his left. From his right sleeve Khwāje 'Abdallāh then produced a copy of the Qur'an, and from his left the Sahihavn. Al-Maqdisī continues, "So the vizier looked at [Khwāje 'Abdallāh's opponents], seeking a response, and there was no one from among them who would debate him in this manner."⁷¹

⁶⁷ Al-Baghawī, Sharh al-sunna, 1:3-4.

⁶⁸ Ibn al-Athīr, Jāmiʿ al-uṣūl, 1:42.

⁶⁹ We must note that al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's function as a synecdoche in this context in no way resembles Hayden White's analysis of tropology in modernist European historical writing, where synecdoche describes a manner in which a historian can manipulate and transition between ideas. Rather, the Şalīhayn were quite literally a synecdoche for the Prophet's authentic legacy as valuated by Sunni Muslim scholars.

Al-Maqdisī's story makes clear use of the Sahāhayn as a synecdoche for the Prophet's sunna. Almost a century after their canonization, ⁷⁰ See 'Abdallāh al-Anşārī al-Harawī, Manāzil al-sā'irīn, ed. Ibrāhīm 'Atwī 'Awad ([Cairo]: Maktabat Ja'far al-Hadītha, [1977]) and idem, Dhamm al-kalām wa ahlihi, ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. al-'Azīz al-Shibl, 5 vols. (Medina: Maktabat al-'Ulūm wa al-Hikam, 1995).

⁷¹ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:250-1. It seems bizarre that someone could fit books as massive as the Sahihayn in their sleeve, but scholars routinely wrote out such books in print so small that they could fit into one volume. Even a much later hadīth scholar like Abū al-Hasan al-Sindī (d. 1773) used to produce one copy of Sahīh al-Bukhārī every year in one small volume; al-Mizjājī, Nuzhat rivād al-ijāza al-mustatāba, 262. We can reliably date al-Maqdisi's dramatic story to the late fifth/eleventh century when al-Magdisī was writing. We should certainly not treat it as a reliable transcript of an historical event, however, for the über-Sunni al-Maqdisī shared his teacher's leanings and furnished a highly partisan account of the debate. Moreover, although al-Maqdisī himself studied with Khwāje 'Abdallāh, he reports this story second-hand through "one of our colleagues (ashābinā)." There is no reason to suspect that al-Dhahabī was citing a forged source from a later period, however, since most of al-Maqdisī's prolific oeuvre has not survived for our examination. This absence of evidence should therefore not lead us to doubt al-Maqdisī's authorship. Even if al-Maqdisī himself creatively altered the report of his teacher's debate, we can nonetheless still date it to his career in the late fifth/eleventh century. For the most comprehensive list of al-Maqdisī's works, see al-Maqrīzī, Kitāb al-muqaffā al-kabīr, ed. Muhammad al-Yaʿlāwī, 8 vols. (Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1411/1991), 5:735-8.

al-Maqdisī and perhaps even Kh^wāje 'Abdallāh himself understood the symbolic power of al-Bukhārī and Muslim within the wider Sunni community. In the face of the Hanafī and Shāfi'ī schools' 'heretical' use of reason and indulgence in speculative theology, al-Maqdisī portrays Kh^wāje 'Abdallāh as standing by the two pure sources of the faith: God's revelation and its authoritative interpretation as transmitted through the Prophet's hadīths. The canonical text of the Qur'ān is small and easily manageable. The Prophet's sunna, however, is not. Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's books thus serve as its commonly acknowledged physical manifestation in the arena of debate. Just as they functioned as an authoritative reference and measure of authenticity, so did the Ṣahīḥayn serve as a symbolic convention as well.

b. Al-Ghazālī's Return to the Straight Path: The Ṣaḥīḥayn as Synecdoche

The seminal Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī jurist, theologian and mystic Abū Hāmid al-Ghazālī (d. 505/1111) has proven one of the most powerful and controversial figures in Islamic intellectual history. He became a central pillar of the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī orthodoxy, and has been honored as "the Proof of Islam (hujjat al-Islām)" by the multitude of later scholars who have shared his doctrinal leanings. Scholars from a wide range of temperaments, however, have also criticized him heavily for his laxity in using hadīths, his excessive mystical bent and his wholesale adoption of logic as a tool in Islamic thought. Al-Māzarī took al-Ghazālī to task for attributing to saints miracles that befitted the Prophet alone. The Mālikī Abū al-Walīd al-Ţurtūshī, who said he had met al-Ghazālī, described him as a great scholar who had foolishly "become a Sufi, departing from the sciences and the scholars, entering the sciences of inspiration (al-khawāțir), the mystics (arbāb al-qulūb), and the murmurings of the Devil."⁷² Ibn al-Jawzī (d. 597/1200) criticized him for ignorance in the science of narrating hadīths and for including forged reports in his Ihyā' 'ulūm al-dīn.73 Ibn al-Salāh (d. 643/1245) faulted al-Ghazālī for placing logic at the forefront of the Islamic sciences as the common language of scholarly discussion. Al-Dhahabī, who was one of ⁷² Al-Subkī, Ṭabaqāt, 6:243. For an excellent discussion of the controversy surrounding al-Ghazālī's career, see Kenneth Garden, "Al-Ghazālī's Contested Revival: Ihyā' 'ulūm al-dīn and its Critics in Khorasan and the Maghrib," (PhD diss., University of Chicago, 2005).

⁷³ Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 17:126.

al-Ghazālī's most outspoken critics, argued that his penchant for sciences originally foreign to Islam and straying into the realm of philosophical speculation plagued the scholar throughout his career.⁷⁴

In efforts to salvage al-Ghazālī's image from these serious critiques, narrative about the scholar's life became a microcosm of the Sunni romance of decline and salvation. One of the earliest attempts to repair al-Ghazālī's reputation and draw it closer to the conservative Sunni tradition as embodied in the study of hadīth is 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī's (d. 529/1134-5) biography of the scholar.⁷⁵ A hadīth-oriented Shāfi'ī who fondly and frequently identifies with the ahl al-hadīth, al-Fārisī nonetheless evinces profound admiration for al-Ghazālī. Yet his treatment of the great scholar, whom he had met more than once, focuses more on his concern for al-Ghazālī's failings.⁷⁶ Struggling to salvage al-Ghazālī's valuable works in fields such as jurisprudence and dogma, al-Fārisī limits his critique to al-Ghazālī's mystical and esoteric works. He states that al-Ghazālī went astray from the bases of Islam in books like his Persian ethical treatise Kemyā-ye sa'ādat (The Alchemy of Felicity).⁷⁷ Al-Fārisī argues that he should never have entered into such esoteric matters because they might confuse the masses of Muslims and negatively affect their conception of proper belief.⁷⁸

The chief thrust in rehabilitating al-Ghazālī, however, comes at the end of al-Fārisī's biography, where he portrays al-Ghazālī as returning to the sound path of Sunnism and affirms his own hadīth-oriented, Sunni identity. Al-Fārisī states that in the last years of his life, al-Ghazālī occupied himself with study of hadīth and poring over the Ṣahīhayn. Had he lived longer, al-Fārisī opines, al-Ghazālī would have become the master of this noble science. Playing on al-Ghazālī's honorary title, he adds, "It is these two [books, the Ṣahīḥayn,] that are the Proof of Islam (hujjat al-Islām)."⁷⁹

Establishing al-Ghazālī's repentance from his heretical musings in philosophy and Sufism by associating him with the Ṣaḥīḥayn became a central tool for rehabilitating his reputation. The Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī ⁷⁴ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar; 19:330–1, 327–9.

⁷⁵ This has survived in part in an abridgement of his history of Naysābūr and more fully in the works of Ibn Asākir, al-Dhahabī and al-Subkī.

⁷⁶ Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 55:202.

⁷⁷ 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 84.

⁷⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 19:326-7.

⁷⁹ 'Abd al-Ghaffir al-Farisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq, 84; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 6:210–11; Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 55:204.

Ibn 'Asākir of Damascus (d. 571/1176) opens his biography of al-Ghazālī with the statement that he had heard Sahīh al-Bukhārī from one Muhammad b. 'Ubaydallāh al-Hafşī.⁸⁰ The Shāfi'ī biographer Abū Sa'd 'Abd al-Karīm al-Sam'ānī (d. 562/1166) of Merv included a report in his entry on al-Ghazālī that portrays him inviting one 'Umar b. Abd al-Karīm al-Rawwāsī (d. 503/1109) to stav at his house in Tūs in order to provide extended private lessons on the Sahīhayn. But even avid defenders of al-Ghazālī, such as al-Subkī, considered this report to be a blatant forgery.⁸¹ Al-Sam'ānī most probably included it in his zealous efforts to affirm al-Ghazālī's devotion to the hadīth tradition. Although the Hanbalī Ibn al-Jawzī is extremely critical of al-Ghazālī, he also notes that late in life he occupied himself with learning the "sahīh collections (al-sihāh)."⁸² The great apologist for the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī tradition, al-Subkī (d. 771/1370), leaves us the most exhaustive defense of al-Ghazālī's legacy in his two-hundred page biography of the scholar in the Tabagāt al-shāfi'iyya al-kubrā. Al-Subkī's defense of al-Ghazālī centers on the same theme advanced by al-Fārisī: al-Ghazālī's evident recantation from the unrestricted use of speculative theology in the last years of his life and simultaneous decision to devote himself to the study of the Sahīhayn. The Hanafī hadīth scholar and theologian Mullā 'Alī Qārī provides an even more dramatic depiction of al-Ghazālī's final return to the straight path: al-Ghazālī died with copy of Sahīh al-Bukhārī on his chest.83

c. Al-Dhahabī's Narrative of Islamic History: The Ṣaḥīḥayn as Synecdoche

The Salafī-oriented Shāfi'ī scholar Shams al-Dīn Muḥammad al-Dhahabī (d. 748/1348) shines as one of the most intelligent and influential figures in Islamic intellectual history. A member of the remarkable Damascus circle of Ibn Taymiyya, Jamāl al-Dīn al-Mizzī and Ibn Kathīr, his works and those of his associates have exercised an inordinately powerful effect on the course of Sunni thought. Through his many studies on the ḥadīth sciences and remarkable biographical dictionaries, al-Dhahabī elaborated an independent ḥadīth-oriented vision of Islamic history that angered more staunch devotees of the ⁸⁰ Ibn 'Asākir, Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq, 55:200.

⁸¹ Al-Subkī, Tabaqāt, 6:215.

⁸² Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 17:126.

⁸³ Mulla Alī Qārī, Sharh al-Fiqh al-akbar, 30.

legal and theological schools as much as it provided them indispensable benefit.⁸⁴ Al-Dhahabī rejected the tradition of speculative theology as well as what he perceived as the over-involved and self-indulgent complexities of the Sunni scholarly edifice. In his biography of al-Ghazālī he urges a ḥadīth and piety-based minimalism, telling the reader that all a Muslim requires to attain success and salvation are the Qur'ān, the Ṣaḥāḥayn, al-Nasā'ī's Sunan and al-Nawawī's two pietistic works, Riyād al-ṣāliḥīn (The Gardens of the Righteous) and the Kītāb al-adhkār (Book of Prayers).⁸⁵

Al-Dhahabī's Tadhkirat al-huffāz (Aide-Mémoire of the Hadīth Masters) provides a concise glimpse into the scholar's conception of Islamic civilization's historical course. Unlike his gigantic $T\bar{a}r\bar{i}kh$ al-islām (History of Islam) or his expansive Siyar a'lām al-nubalā' (The Lives of the Noble Figures), the Tadhkira consists of only a few volumes devoted solely to a chronological treatment of those figures who emerged as prominent participants in the Sunni hadīth tradition. In rare comments at the end of some outstanding generations, al-Dhahabī includes his own evaluations of the umma's unfolding history. At the end of the first generation to succeed the Companions, for example, he describes how at this time Islam had become powerful and glorious, "having conquered the lands of the Turks in the east and Andalusia in the west."⁸⁶

After the fifth generation, consisting of scholars like Ibn Jurayj and Abū Ḥanīfa who died between 140 and 150 AH, al-Dhahabī writes, "Islam and its peoples were endowed with total might and profuse knowledge, the standards of jihād spread wide and the sunna (sunan) widespread." He adds that "heresy (bid'a) was suppressed, and those constantly speaking the truth were many. The servants [of God] were plentiful in number and the people were living at the height of prosperity with security...."⁸⁷ But after the civil war between al-Amīn and al-Ma'mūn, the two sons of the Abbasid caliph Hārūn al-Rashīd, the strength of the state waned. Accompanying this political division, the

⁸⁴ For a harsh criticism of al-Dhahabī by one of his students, Tāj al-Dīn al-Subkī, who also relied on him heavily in his Tabaqāt al-shāfi ʿiyya, see al-Subkī, "Qā'ida fī al-jarḥ wa al-ta'dīl," in *Arba' rasā'il fī 'ulūm al-ḥadīt*ḥ, ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda, 6th edition (Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1419/1999), 37 ff. For praise of al-Dhahabī from Indian Ḥanafīs, see al-Laknawī, al-Raf' wa al-takmīl, 286. See also, Makdisi, "Hanbalite Islam," 240.

⁸⁵ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 19:340.

⁸⁶ Al-Dhahabī, Ťadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 1:56.

⁸⁷ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 1:179.

state of the faith deteriorated. The power of the Shiites and Mu'tazilites increased and the Baghdad Inquisition occurred.

The star of Shiism rose and revealed its enmity (abdā ṣafhatahu), the dawn of speculative theology broke, the philosophy (hikma) of the ancients, the logic of the Greeks and astrology were all translated into Arabic. A new science thus emerged for the people, abhorrent, destructive, incongruous with the knowledge of Prophecy and not in accordance with the unity of the believers that had held the umma in well-being.⁸⁸

With the narrative of entropy and decline into religious ruin set, al-Dhahabī bemoans the weakening of scholarship since the heady days of Ibn Ḥanbal's and 'Alī b. al-Madīnī's greatest generation. Al-Dhahabī specifically complains about the state of Islamic knowledge in his own time, condemning blind imitation (taqlīd) in law and the obsession with empty speculative theology (kalām). In such times, he concludes, "may God bless that individual who devotes himself to his task, who shortens his tongue, draws near to reading his Qur'ān, cries over his time (zamānihi) and pores over the Ṣaḥūḥayn."⁸⁹

In his grief over the deterioration of scholarship and piety, al-Dhahabī thus calls for a return to the twin roots of Islam: the Qur'ān and the sunna of the Prophet. The route to salvation, if only on the individual level, is to embrace the holy book and those volumes that had come to represent synecdochically the Prophet's true legacy, the Sahāhayn of al-Bukhārī and Muslim.

Conclusion

In its roles as a measure of authenticity, authoritative reference for non-specialists and exemplum, the Sahāhayn canon functioned as Canon 1: a criterion between truth and falsehood. Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's books, however, played another crucial role beyond the limited circles of jurists and hadīth scholars. The two collections came to synecdochically represent the Prophet's legacy itself within the wider Sunni community. Ironically, in their denial of the existence of a hadīth canon, both Wheeler and Weiss alluded to the important function that the major Sunni collections served in their capacity as Canon 2: they delimited ⁸⁸ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 1:240.

⁸⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:86.

the vast expanse of the Prophet's sunna and embodied it in a manageable form.⁹⁰ Whether the canonical unit of the Five Books or just the Ṣaḥīḥayn, this circumscription drew the boundaries of the greater Sunni community. Loyalty to the canon meant loyalty to the umma.

The Sahīhayn's synecdochic representation of the Prophet rendered the books invaluable in both scholarly and lay interaction with the heritage of Muhammad. In the narratives that hadīth-oriented Sunni scholars developed to describe the historical course of Islamicate civilization, al-Bukhārī and Muslim became a trope for the straight path of adherence to the Prophet's sunna in the face of the ever-multiplying threats of heresy and iniquity. In the Sunni narrative of decline from the halcyon days of the righteous early community, the Sahīhayn represented salvation through a return to their teachings. More importantly, by the seventh/thirteenth century al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections had taken on prominent roles in political, calendrical and supplicatory rituals. Again, the two works symbolized the Prophet's legacy. For Mawla Isma'il they symbolized loyalty to the Prophet and the 'Alawid state that governed in his name. For the scholars who read the Sahīhavn during Rajab, Shaʿbān and Ramadan in Timbuktu, Cairo, Mecca or Damascus, the Sahīhayn imbued a set period of the year with the religious significance of the Prophet's persona. In all these instances of ritual use, but perhaps most palpably in their roles as tools of supplication, the Sahīhavn synecdochically represented the Prophet's access to divine blessing. Like relics or Muhammad's descendents, the hadīth collections personified the Prophet's role as the intercessor between humanity and the divine.

⁹⁰ Wheeler, 59; Weiss, The Search for God's Law, 260, cf. 266.

CHAPTER TEN

CONCLUSION

Instead of summarizing the results of this study in abstract form (see the Thesis section in the Introduction), we conclude in a manner more useful to students of Islamic civilization and its magnificent tradition of hadīth scholarship. As the present study proceeded, teachers, scholars and students consistently posed the same questions about the Ṣahīhayn canon and its historical development. I have thus attempted to use these questions as a framework for summarizing the conclusion of this study.

I. Why the Sahihayn and Not Other Books?

Asking why one text achieves membership in the canon and another does not poses trenchant questions about the forces that drive intellectual history and about the possibility of objective scholarly evaluation. Can historians always explain choices made in the past through a materialist lens, or can historical actors establish and act on sets of aesthetics independent of material surroundings? One might contend that there is nothing in the writings of Shakespeare that makes them intrinsically better than the works of other playwrights or poets. The canonical status of Romeo and Juliet might ultimately hinge on the number of copies of the text that were produced at some crucial point in time, the nature of the network that distributed and performed the play, the charisma of those scholars who promoted its study or its resonance with some great social issue of the day. Another, better play written by a nowunknown litterateur may have disappeared into history for similar reasons. Canonicity, from this perspective, is the product of material forces and the accidents of history. It is not a matter of objective quality.

This perspective robs the critic or the scholar of his right to aesthetic evaluation; eminently a creature of the material world around him, he is no more able to escape these constraints than the texts he purports to judge. Is this perspective accurate, or must we allow for the serendipitous variable of scholarly preference? Should we acknowledge that a well-respected critic or sincere scholar could rise above the material constraints of his day and pronounce an influential verdict on a book based on purely aesthetic grounds? It seems that the Sahīhayn canon was the product of both the material accidents of history and the explicit judgments of influential Muslim scholars as to which hadīth collections provided the best understanding of the Prophet's charismatic legacy.

CONCLUSION

To isolate the factors that shaped the Sahīhayn canon, let us review the fate of four hadith collections written by prominent transmission-based Sunni scholars of the sahīh movement between 250/865 and 350/960 in the Khurāsān region: the Sahīhayn, the Sahīh of Ibn Khuzayma (d. 311/ 923) and the Sahīh of Ibn Hibbān (d. 354/965). All four of these hadīth scholars were Sunnis who compiled comprehensive legal and doctrinal references on hadīth restricted to only what they considered authentic reports. All four had comparable visions of what Islam and the sunna of the Prophet 'should' be. By the eighth/fourteenth century, all four collections had won approval from the Sunni scholarly community. As our judge of canonicity, let us turn to al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī, whose seminal study of the Sahīhayn in fact sparked their canonization. While al-Hākim viewed al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's collections as the pinnacle of critical stringency and excellence in hadith evaluation, he dismissed both the Sahīh of his teacher Ibn Hibbān and that of his exemplar Ibn Khuzayma.

Ibn Hibbān's work seems to have been the victim of the accidents of history. Al-Hākim condemned the work of his teacher, a belated participant in the *sahī*h movement, due to the presence of unknown transmitters in its isnāds. As we know, however, early members of the *Ṣahī*hayn Network had also been unable to identify some of al-Bukhārī's transmitters. Only after several generations of study were these 'unknown' narrators identified. For al-Hākim, the absence of unknown transmitters in the *Ṣahī*hayn proved central to his claims on the books' authority. Had Ibn Hibbān lived a century earlier and produced his *Ṣahī*h at the same time as al-Bukhārī, perhaps scholars could have identified his unknown transmitters as well.

In the case of Ibn Khuzayma's Ṣaḥīḥ, however, we cannot explain its exclusion from the canon as the result of material forces or ideological pressures. Influential scholars who evaluated Ibn Khuzayma's Ṣaḥīḥ simply did not approve of his quality selections. Ibn Khuzayma was the axis of transmission-based jurisprudence, theology and hadīth study in Khurāsān during the late third/ninth and early fourth/tenth centuries. Our earliest sources on the period accord him accolades that dwarf those of al-Bukhārī and Muslim.¹ Yet when al-Ḥākim was asked about whether or not Ibn Khuzayma was a reliable judge of the authenticity of Prophetic reports, he replied, "That I do not say."² Al-Ismā'īlī had preferred al-Bukhārī's legal analysis to Muslim's relative impartiality, and Ibn 'Uqda had favored Muslim's focus on Prophetic ḥadīths to al-Bukhārī's insistence on providing incomplete reports as legal commentary. Yet both these critics explicitly stated that al-Bukhārī and Muslim provided the community with eminently reliable representations of the Prophet's sunna. Ibn Khuzayma's Ṣaḥīḥ never attracted the scholarly interest heaped on the Ṣaḥīḥayn, and its exclusion from the Six Book canon seems to be the result of his failure to inspire the same confidence in the community that canonized al-Bukhārī and Muslim.

The reason why the Sahīhayn, not other canonical hadīth books, played such a salient role in ritual and narrative grew out of the unique status they had achieved by the dawn of the fifth/eleventh century. In Islam, an object becomes religious through a perceived link to God and His Prophet. As the community of God's final messenger, guarded against communal error by God Himself, the umma can further enunciate His will through claims of consensus ($ijm\bar{a}^c$). Goldziher thus astutely recognized that $ijm\bar{a}^c$ was the bedrock on which Sunnism was founded.³ Claims based on the umma's consensus underpinned the Sahīhayn canon, and no other book after the Qur'ān could boast such recognition. As objects endowed with religious significance, the Sahīhayn were ideally suited to dramatize religious meaning in acts of ritual or represent it in historical narrative.

II. What Forces Led to the Canonization of the Sahihayn?

We have asserted that canons form at the nexus of text, authority and communal identification. By authorizing texts, communities express, delineate and affirm their identities or boundaries. The creation of a canon thus stems from a twofold need to embody authority in text and delineate community through text. We have also contended that the

¹ Al-Hākim, Tārīkh Nīshābūr, 120.

² Al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 313.

³ Berkey, Formation of Islam, 189–90; Goldziher quoted in Makdisi, "Hanbalite Islam," 253. This observation is reminiscent of the Azhar adage that ijmā^c is 'al-rukn al-rakīn yastanidu ilayhi al-dīn.'

CONCLUSION

communal drama in which the canonization of the Ṣaḥīḥayn played a salient role was the articulation of Sunnism. Scott C. Lucas has suggested that discovering how such initially controversial figures (from a Sunni perspective) as al-Bukhārī and Abū Ḥanīfa achieved 'Sunni' status remains an important but unanswered question in the study of this community's history.⁴ We might rephrase the question to ask how Sunnism adapted to adopt these figures into its fold.

Sunnism began as the exclusive worldview of the transmission-based scholars, whose fixation with hadīths and their literal interpretation was intractably rigid. The über-Sunni credo of Ibn Hanbal, Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī or Abū Naşr al-Wā'ilī brooked no school of thought that had either elaborated a more varied set of interpretive tools for understanding the cosmos, like the Mu'tazilites and Ash'arīs, or defined the Prophet's sunna by means other than a stubborn obsession with hadīths, like the Hanafīs.

To explain how the conservative ethos of these 'people of the sunna and community (ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a)' expanded to include the relatively diverse four schools of Sunni law as well as the Ash'arī and Māturīdī schools of theology, it may be useful to conceive of Sunnism more as a rhetorical mantra than a rigid doctrine. As it solidified in the fourth/tenth and early fifth/eleventh centuries, Sunnism certainly required the espousal of certain specific beliefs: the proper ranking of the Four Rightly Guided caliphs (Abū Bakr, 'Umar, 'Uthmān then 'Alī) and the belief that the Qur'ān was uncreated, for example. Beyond such limited dogmatic tenets, however, we can envision Sunnism as an austere rhetorical call to stand fast by the Qur'ān, the Prophet's sunna and the ways of the early community in the face of foreign innovations in faith, thought and practice.

As a rhetorical mantra, Sunnism eventually proved charismatic and flexible enough that differing schools of law or theology were able to take it up in order to affirm their identification with a perceived traditionalist orthodoxy—even though their own doctrines or practices might at times differ significantly from it. The theological and epistemological school of Abū al-Hasan al-Ash'arī (d. 324/935–6) epitomizes this rhetorical flexibility. Although this scholar publicly repented his Mu'tazilite rationalist ways and embraced the traditionalist beliefs of Ibn Hanbal and the ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a, the school that developed from his writings

⁴ Personal communication.

(and perhaps his writings themselves) continued to delve deeper into speculative theology and Hellenistic epistemology.⁵

While the über-Sunni strain of the transmission-based school was parochially limited, the legal and theological tradition that coalesced around the teachings of al-Shāfi'ī was more open to methods of analogical reasoning and eventually Hellenistic logic and speculative thought. Just as al-Shāfi'ī himself had accommodated analogical legal reasoning (qiyās) in the transmission-based methodology, so too later Shāfi'ī/Ash'arīs like Abū Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī or al-Juwaynī were able to elaborate systems of legal theory or theology derived significantly from Mu'tazilite rationalism while making convincing arguments for their loyalty to the ḥadīth-centric Sunni worldview. An Ash'arī who had written extensively on speculative theology, al-Juwaynī could when necessary also avow his membership in the ahl al-sunna by trumpeting the mantra that "the foremost [calling] is following the Salaf and rejecting religious innovation (bid'a)....²⁶

Eventually, the Hanafī school could also imitate the Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarī orthodoxy and take up this elastic Sunni mantra. The Hanafī interpretive tradition had initially been anathema to the ahl al-sunna wa al-jamāʿa. Original 'Sunni' scholars had in fact reviled early pivots of the school like Abū Hanīfa and Muḥammad b. al-Hasan al-Shaybānī (d. 189/805) as heretical Jahmī rationalists.⁷ When a mid-third/ninth century Hanafī scholar named Ibn al-Thaljī (d. 265/879) dared to use Prophetic reports to buttress the position of his school against that of its ahl al-sunna opponents, Ibn Hanbal and his followers devastatingly dismissed him as an 'unbeliever.'⁸ The situation had changed dramatically by the eighth/fourteenth century, when the Sunni edifice became established in its most concretely permanent state. By that time some Hanafīs had recast Muḥammad b. al-Hasan al-Shaybānī as a proto-Sunni who had advocated the literal interpretation of the Qurʾān and ḥadīth on issues of God's attributes.⁹

364

⁵ Abū al-Hasan al-Ash'arī, Maqālāt al-islāmiyyīn, ed. Helmut Ritter (Istanbul: Dār al-Funūn, [1928]), 280–1.

⁶ See, for example, al-Juwaynī, al-Aqīda al-Nizāmiyya fi al-arkān al-islāmiyya, ed. Muhammad Zāhid al-Kawtharī (Cairo: Maktabat al-Azhariyya li'l-Turāth, 1412/1992), 23, 32.

⁷ Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī, for example, is quoted as calling Abū Ḥanīfa, Muḥammad b. Hasan al-Shaybānī and Abū Yūsuf 'Jahmī;' al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:176.

⁸ Ibn al-Nadīm, The Fihrist, 510–11; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 2:425–5.

⁹ Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, 2:449; Ibn Abī al-Izz al-Hanafī (d. 792/1390), Sharh al-Aqīda al-Tahāwiyya, 215.

CONCLUSION

This notion of Sunnism as a rhetorical touchstone within arm's reach of a variety of interpretive schools explains the tremendous, almost inconsistent, diversity within the later Sunni tradition. A phenomenon unimaginable in the fourth/tenth-century world of the ahl al-hadīth and ahl al-ra'y is exemplified by Mullā 'Alī Qārī (d. 1014/1606), a loyal Ḥanafī who, in the space of one book, quotes Ibn Ḥanbal to condemn speculative theology and logic, embraces the Ash'arī figurative explanation of God's attributes and describes the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī Sufi 'Abd al-Karīm al-Qushayrī as being on the path of the Salaf.¹⁰

The development and function of the Sahīhayn canon mirror the development of Sunni identity. What began as the limited interest of a network of Shāfi'ī scholars developed into a strong and shared identification with these two hadith collections among Shafi'i and Hanbali students of al-Hākim al-Navsābūrī. Representatives from both these schools agreed on the Sahīhayn as a common ground for identifying the Prophet's authentic legacy. The other schools of Sunni Islam gradually adopted this convention of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as a measure of authenticity, authoritative reference and exemplum. Finally, even the Hanafis acceded to identifying with the Sahihayn as the common language for Sunni discussions of hadīth. Although the Shāfi'īs, Mālikīs, Hanbalīs and Hanafīs had relied on their own bodies of hadīths in their elaboration of law and dogma, they all acknowledged the Sahīhavn as rhetorically paramount in interactions between the schools. In the seventh/thirteenth and early eighth/fourteenth centuries, when the popular religious institutions of Sunnism such as Sufi brotherhoods were coalescing, the Sahīhayn too became vehicles for public ritual activity.

By acknowledging the Ṣaḥīḥayn as authoritative, the collection of legal and theological schools within Sunni Islam turned the two works into touchstones of communal identification. In order to understand how the forces of a developing sense of communalism created the canon, we must quickly review how the nature and needs of the Muslim scholarly community developed from al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's lifetime to the mid-fifth/eleventh century, when the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon found widespread use and acceptance.

¹⁰ Mullā 'Alī Qārī, Sharḥ al-fiqh al-akbar, 25–6, 28, 35, 63. For an expression of Mullā 'Alī's loyalty to the Ḥanafī legal school, see his Tashyī' fuqahā' al-ḥanafīyya li-tashnī' sufahā' al-shāfī iyya, Ms. 444, Yahya Tavfik Collection, Süleymaniye Library, Istanbul, fols. 82b–84b.

CHAPTER TEN

In the years after the deaths of the Shaykhayn, Abū Zur'a and Abū Hātim al-Rāzī continued to ply their scholarly trade in their native Rayy. The two scholars were very conservative members of the transmission-based ahl al-hadīth, drawing equally from the scholarship of Ibn Hanbal and al-Shāfi'ī. Although their study of legal texts like al-Muzanī's Mukhtaşar or Ibn Hanbal's responsa certainly informed the two Rāzīs' legal and doctrinal opinions, their views were ultimately shaped by their own study and interpretation of hadīths back to the Prophet. Like the other major transmission-based scholars of their time, such as Abū Dāwūd, each scholar constituted his own school of hadīth criticism. When Muslim brought his freshly penned Ṣahīh to Abū Zur'a, he looked through it with the eye of a scholar confidently following his own methodology of evaluating the authenticity of Prophetic reports.

Two hundred years later, the scene of Sunni scholarship had transformed dramatically. Unlike the two Rāzīs, scholars like the Shāfi'ī/ Ash'arī Abū Ishāg al-Shīrāzī were no longer willing to draw indifferently from what had become the very distinct Hanbalī and Shāfi'ī legal schools. Yet despite this solidification of boundaries, the Sunni universe had expanded beyond the excusive circle of self-sufficient, über-Sunni hadīth-based jurists to include figures like al-Juwaynī, a practitioner of dialectical theology and a jurist loyal to a specific body of substantive law. Abū Zur'a and Abū Hātim al-Rāzī had personally vouched for the strength of their hadīths with the confidence their critical expertise inspired in their followers, but in the expanded Sunni world of the fifth/eleventh century a more institutionalized convention was required for discussing attributions to the Prophet. There existed a real need for a means to compel others to acknowledge a representation of the Prophet's authoritative legacy. The Sahihayn provided this common measure of authenticity. Unlike the Rāzīs, al-Shīrāzī and al-Juwaynī were unable to critically vet their own corpora of hadīths; they needed to turn to authoritative references to provide commonly accepted reports.

In the fifth/eleventh century, and later when the Hanafī school adopted the canon, the Ṣaḥīḥayn acted to both facilitate and define the expanded Sunni community. The two books provided a common source and reference through which different schools could address one another in debates and polemics. More importantly, however, the Ṣaḥīḥayn also functioned as a mantra of communalism. When the Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarīs Abū Isḥāq al-Isfarāyīnī and al-Juwaynī, the Ḥanbalī/über-Sunni Abū Naṣr al-Wāʾilī, and the Mālikī Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī proclaimed independently that 'the community of Muhammad (al-umma)' had agreed on the Ṣaḥīḥayn as totally authentic vessels for the Prophet's authoritative legacy, they affirmed their own loyalty to that shared Sunni community. More importantly, they acknowledged the membership of others who made that claim. When the Hanafī 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Bukhārī attested that al-Bukhārī's opinion on the authenticity of a hadīth was absolutely definitive, he too took up this canonical mantra of Sunnism. When the Mamluks salaried scholars to read the Ṣaḥīḥayn for three months in the mosques of Cairo or placed al-Bukhārī's collection at the vanguard of their army, the two books embodied Sunni ritual and political communalism.

CONCLUSION

Although the pressures of communal identification create the canon, it is the canon that then defines the community. As evident in al-Silafi's declaration that anyone who disagrees with the Five Book hadīth canon places himself outside 'the Abode of Islam,' the canon could certainly delineate the boundaries of the Sunni pale. Although the permissibility of criticizing the Sahīhayn constituted the norm for centuries, the perceived fragility of the Sunni community in early modern India led Shāh Walī Allāh to equate belittling al-Bukhārī and Muslim with "not following the path of the believers." The ability of texts to determine and shape community, however, is predicated on the compelling power of those books. Neither al-Silafī nor Shāh Walī Allāh could have made their statements before the canonization of the Sahīhayn at the dawn of the fifth/eleventh century. The relationship between canon and community is dialogic, but only after the community brings the canon into existence.

III. Why Did the Canon Form at the Beginning of the 5th/11th Century?

That the Ṣaḥīḥayn canon formed and found its immediate application in the early fifth/eleventh century is not accidental. The emergence of the canon as an institution was both a part and product of the coalescence of the new Sunni order in this period, one that was characterized by the institutionalization of education, modes of patronage and clearly delineated schools of thought. The frustrating ambiguity of the fourth/tenth century, with its fluctuating and languishing categories of the ahl al-ḥadīth and ahl al-ra'y, and the regional laws school, faded as more concrete divisions solidified. The two strands of the transmission-based school, the conservative über-Sunnis and the more moderate strain associated with the Shāfiʿī tradition, gelled into the guild-like

CHAPTER TEN

Hanbalī and Shāfiʻī schools. By approximately 425/1035 the Ash'arī school of theology had blossomed into a mature form. By 480/1090 the Mālikīs, Hanafīs, Shāfiʻīs and Hanbalīs had all composed definitive texts on legal theory, substantive law and hadīth and had staked their dogmatic positions in relation to one another. The proliferation of madrasas, founded and funded by wealthy patrons often associated with the Seljuq state, furnished a new institutional setting for the study of the religious sciences. Unlike the merchant and landlord scholars of previous generations, the salaried teachers and stipended students in these madrasas could pursue scholarship in a professional setting.

The institutionalization of Sunnism that spread rapidly from the fifth/eleventh century on occurred on a grand and massively important scale. As Marshall Hodgson recognized, it was in the period from 945 to 1250 CE that Islamicate civilization grew from its adaptive adolescence into a viable institutional framework for a world-civilization.¹¹ Richard Bulliet has seconded this emphasis on the theme of institutionalization in the fifth/eleventh-century emergence of Sunnism. He explains that this development was "actually the first stage in the dissemination of religious institutions and the standardization of Sunni religious norms that becomes the hallmark of later Islamic history."¹² In particular, Bulliet highlights the transition from the cultivation of hadīths with living isnāds (Bulliet's 'orality')¹³ to the study of hadīth collections and the appearance of the madrasa system as the twin faces of the revolution that redefined Sunni Islam in the late fourth/tenth and fifth/eleventh centuries. He links this institutionalization of education, in both the transition from living isnāds to books and the spread of the madrasa, with the formation of the Sunni hadith canon, since madrasas relied on these collections as part of their curricula.¹⁴

¹¹ Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, 2:3.

¹² Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge, 126-7.

¹³ I believe that the term 'living isnad' more accurately describes the phenomenon that Bulliet addresses, namely a focus and reliance on direct chains of transmission back to the Prophet as opposed to collections of hadīths compiled by authors and then transmitted. A shift to employing books of hadīths did not obviate the oral nature of study. Even today, the study and transmission of these texts is an oral activity based on the communicative act of hearing the work read.

¹⁴ Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge, 149.

CONCLUSION

Madrasa curriculum, however, cannot tell us why the Sahihayn achieved canonical status in this period. In cities like Qazvīn, hadīth study generally continued in large mosques, not madrasas. Furthermore, madrasas from Egypt to India utilized a large and varied selection of books for instruction. None of these, however, attained the ubiquitous and unparalleled status of the Sahīhayn. Instead, we must look to the needs created by the Sunni scholarly community's act of self-delineation and its search for the tools required to facilitate internal coherence. Al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's books had received concerted study in the long fourth century because they provided a network of influential Shāfi'ī scholars with the ideal vehicles for expressing the nature and quality of their command of the Prophet's legacy. Al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī exploited this network's assiduous study of the Sahīhavn to transform al-Bukhārī and Muslim into widely recognized stamps of authenticity. This kanon, he claimed, met the authenticity requirements of both the Sunnis and the single greatest threat to their transmission-based worldview: the Mu'tazilite attempt to limit the role of Prophetic hadīths in elaborating law and dogma.

While the needs and contributions of the Sahihayn Network and al-Hākim in particular produced the canon, they cannot explain its wider proliferation. The canon flourished among al-Hakim's students and other major participants in the Sunni orthodoxy of the fifth/eleventh century because the Sahīhavn fulfilled specific needs created by its solidification. The need for hadīths and hadīth collections that could function as epistemologically certain loci of consensus, felt generally in the fourth/tenth century, became more pronounced when distinct legal schools that shared a common Sunni worldview required a common convention for their ceaseless debates over the proper interpretation of the Prophet's sunna. With the institution of the madrasa and the division of labor among Sunni scholars in the mid fifth/eleventh century, accepted references for hadīth criticism also became necessary for nonhadīth specialists. The two books provided a common language and reference for discussing hadīths among the Mālikī, Shāfi'ī and Hanbalī schools in the fifth/eleventh century, with the Hanafi school adopting this convention only in the early eighth/fourteenth century.

The adoption of the canon as a common convention for hadīth study was certainly related to the shift from the living $isn\bar{a}d$ to the transmission of books. It seems, however, that this shift occurred after the canonization of the Sahīhayn. In their biographical dictionaries, al-Khalīlī (d. 446/1054) and al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī (d. 463/1071), two scholars who readily employed the canon, still focused much more on living isnāds than books. Our sources for the second half of the fifth/eleventh century, however, indicate that circa 465/1072 a marked shift occurred toward noting the hadith books that scholars studied as opposed to their living isnāds to the Prophet. In his history of Naysābūr, 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī (d. 529/1134-5) mentions only ten people studying the Sahīhavn between 385/995 and 465/1072, but between 465/1072 and 545/1150 (some material was added after the author's death by al-Sarīfīnī [d. 641/1243-44]) he mentions fifty-five (a 450% increase). Between 385/995 and 465/1072 he mentions only eight other hadīth collections, such as the Sunans of al-Nasā'ī and Abū Dāwūd, being studied. Between 465/1072 and 545/1150 he mentions twenty (a 150% increase). In his Iraq-Khurāsān-centric al-Muntazam, Ibn al-Jawzī mentions only nine instances of a scholar studying a hadīth book in the two hundred years between 285/898 and 485/1092. In the period of only eighty years between 485/1092 and 565/1170 he mentions seventeen (a 190% increase). Yet we know that despite these statistically dramatic changes, a strong attachment to the living isnād endured. Well into the 500s/1100s, scholars like Ibn Funduq al-Bayhaqī (d. 565/1169-70) continued to define hadīth scholarship as the living transmission of individual hadīths from the Prophet as opposed to the study of hadīth collections.

Although it is difficult to date precisely two such intangible events, it seems that the emergence of the $Sah\bar{u}hayn$ canon in the early fifth/eleventh century preceded the first indications of a shift from living isnāds to the transmission of books by at least fifty years. We can see this clearly in the case of scholars who employed the canon while still depending wholly on their own living isnāds to the Prophet. Scholars like Abū Bakr al-Bayhaqī (d. 458/1066) and al-Khatīb did not need hadīth books to provide the content of their hadīth works; these they filled with their own full-length living isnāds. They did need collections like the Ṣahīḥayn, however, to guarantee the authenticity of these hadīths. The canon formed because scholars needed a stamp of approval for hadīths, and this could only come from consensus on a hadīth collection.

CONCLUSION

IV. Did the Canon Emerge from Ferment and Strife?

Studies of canons and canonization have often identified periods of ideological ferment or strife as the seedbeds of scriptural canons.¹⁵ Just as a proclamation of orthodoxy arises as a response to perceived threats of interpretive plurality, so too a canon emerges as an attempt to dominate the textual landscape of a religious tradition. As a corollary, this emphasis on ideological ferment in canon studies has led to a focus on canons as "heavy weapons," tools for control and exclusion.¹⁶ Western scholars have thus not fully appreciated the capacity of canons to create common convention and bridge rifts. Menzies alone argued that canons may well form in the reconstructive wake of conflict.¹⁷ Indeed, just as the Şaḥīḥayn provided a common language for Sunnism, the canon resulted from the institutional consolidation of an expanded orthodoxy in the wake of tumultuous plurality.

The consistent intensification of the Sahīhayn canonical culture after the careers of Abū Mas'ūd al-Dimashqī and al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī in the late fourth/tenth and mid-fifth/eleventh centuries coincides with the consolidation of Sunnism. As Jonathan Berkey states, Sunnism of the fifth/eleventh century was engaged in a process of minimizing "sources of contention."¹⁸ The dogged creed of communalism which, according to Hodgson, characterized Sunnism after this period perfectly describes the canonical culture's goal of suppressing opinions that threatened the institutional roles of al-Bukhārī and Muslim. Sunni communalism demanded "loyalty to the community and its acknowledged symbols... even at the expense of all other values." Most assuredly, the canonical culture required Sunnis to affirm the community's consensus on the Şahīhayn at the expense of the established conventions of hadīth criticism and the historical record of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's precanonical images.¹⁹

¹⁵ Halbertal, 4–5; Hanaway, 3.

¹⁶ Hanaway, 3; Kermode, "Institutional Control of Interpretation," 77.

¹⁷ Menzies, 91.

¹⁸ Berkey, The Formation of Islam, 189–90.

¹⁹ Hodgson, TheVenture of Islam, 2:193.

CHAPTER TEN

V. Was the Canon a Response to Shiism or the Product of the Seljuq State?

Although the Ṣaḥīḥayn served as a unifying bond within the Sunni community, was this broad inclusivity the byproduct of an effort to exclude non-Sunnis? Many scholars have identified the emergence of institutional Sunnism in the fifth/eleventh century as a defensive reaction to the tremendous power of Shiism in the fourth/tenth century. Did the Imāmī Shiite Buyid dynasty's dominanation of the Abbasid caliphate in Iraq and Iran, and the meteoric rise of Fatimid power in Egypt, Syria and the Ḥijāz, catalyze the institutional consolidation of Sunnism? Was this reaction instigated and encouraged by the threatened Sunni Seljuq state, many of whose leading functionaries fell before the daggers of Ismā'īlī assassins?

Some scholars have deemphasized the place of state sponsorship in the consolidation of Sunnism. One of the architects of the notion of the 'Sunni revival,' George Makdisi, viewed it as a victory of traditionalism and credited it to the tremendous popular appeal of the Hanbalī school in Baghdad, not to the Seljuq state.²⁰

Others have understood the new Sunni order through a decidedly political lens. Hodgson associated it with Nizām al-Mulk's madrasa system, which epitomized the Seljuq-fostered framework that replaced the vanished Abbasid caliphal state with a new dispensation of uniformity. This state-sponsored madrasa system "carried on the task of maintaining essential unity in the community's heritage" as bequeathed by the Prophet and his Companions.²¹

The construct of a state-sponsored Sunni revival has been intimately bound to the Seljuqs' Shiite adversaries, both the ousted Buyids and the more immediately threatening Ismā'īlī Fatimids. Lapidus thus concluded that the fifth/eleventh-century institutionalization of a Sunni orthodoxy was a politically-led reaction to Shiite power. The Abbasid caliph al-Qādir, who promulgated the famously anti-Shiite Qādirī creed in the twilight shadows of Buyid suzerainty, the Seljuqs and their successor dynasties of the Ayyubids and Mamluks all promoted an institutionalized Sunni orthodoxy as part of a drive to unite society around a state-embraced Sunni cause. This was exemplified by Niẓām al-Mulk ²⁰ Makdisi, "Hanbalite Islam," 237-8.

²¹ Hodgson, The Venture of Islam, 2:48, 192.

CONCLUSION

and Malikshāh's efforts to mollify through patronage all the major non-Shiite factions in the various feuds on the Baghdad-Khurāsān circuit: the Shāfi'ī/Ash'arīs, Ḥanbalīs and Ḥanafīs.²² Bulliet, however, rejects the equation of the Sunni revival with a reaction to Shiism. Instead, we should view it as an attempt to define Sunnism according to "centrally espoused dogma" (he thus admits that it is at least in some way the result of state policy).²³ Jonathan Berkey follows Bulliet in downplaying the threat of Shiism or an anti-Shiite Seljuq policy as an engine for the crystallization of Sunnism. Bulliet and Berkey both point out that the Seljuqs often adopted a conciliatory attitude toward the powerful Imāmī Shiite interests in cities like Baghdad. For example, Nizām al-Mulk and his master Malikshāh both married their daughters to Shiite nobles and appointed Shiite ministers.²⁴

Neither Bulliet nor Berkey, however, pays sufficient attention to the fact that it was the Ismā'īlīs and not the relatively harmless Imāmī Shiites who alarmed the Seljuq state and Sunni scholars alike. Sunni firebrands such as the caliph al-Qādir certainly condemned Imāmī Shiites, but, as Abū al-Ḥusayn Qazvīnī found himself insisting in his Ketāb-e naqd, it was the Ismā'īlīs whom the Sunnis truly feared. It was Ismā'īlī propaganda that proved so appealing to the intellectual elite in the major metropolises of the Seljuq realm, and Ismā'īlī assassins who represented the single greatest external danger to the stability of the Seljuq dynasty. This threat had earlier sparked an unlikely alliance between the Sunni caliph al-Qādir, his Shiite Buyid overlords and the Imāmī Shiite scholars of Baghdad. In 402/1011 they jointly promulgated an anti-Ismā'īlī manifesto directed at the encroaching Fatimid state.²⁵

While the consolidation of Sunnism in the fifth/eleventh century may well have been a response to the Fatimid threat and Ismāʿīlī propaganda, we cannot identify any direct effect on the formation of the hadīth canon. Shiism, whether Imāmī or Ismāʿīlī, never surfaces in the various discourses surrounding the authorization of the Ṣahīhayn. The canon was, in fact, a boon to Imāmī Shiites like Qazvīnī, who turned to al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's compelling authority in attempts ²² Lapidus, A History of Islamic Societies; 164, 173-4.

²³ Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge, 126–7.

²⁴ Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge, 148; Berkey, Formation of Islam, 191.

²⁵ D. Sourdel, "al-Kādir," *EI*².

to trump Sunni opponents by using their own proof texts against them. Ultimately, the $\underline{Sah\bar{h}hayn}$ were more a unifying element within Sunnism than a tool for excluding the Shiite other.

To the extent that the Ismāʿīlī threat and any resulting Seljuq patronage of non-Shiite schools helped bring Sunnism to institutional maturity, the canon can be seen as part of a response to Shiism. This perspective holds true, however, only at the most global level of analysis. Those scholars who participated in the various discourses that produced the hadīth canon did not exhibit any concern for a Shiite threat in their related writings or understand the Sahīhayn as a tool for excluding non-Sunnis. To the contrary, the earliest recorded usages of the canon are directed at either Mu'tazilites or adherents of other Sunni schools with an emphasis on the inclusive consensus that those who wielded the canon claimed it enjoyed. Abū Nu'aym al-Isbahānī, a member of the Sahīhayn Network who was very familiar with al-Hākim's work, thus did not refer to al-Bukhārī and Muslim in his manual for debating Imāmī Shiites. Although Abū Nu'aym refers to hadīths he argues are agreed on by all Muslims, citing the Sahīhayn would have had no proof value whatsoever for his Shiite opponents.

VI. Was the Sahīhayn Canon the Product of or Limited to a Specific Region?

The Sahāhayn canon germinated in the scholarly circles of Naysābūr, Jurjān and Baghdad during the first half of the long fourth century. Its articulation and early usage took place in the writings and debates of scholars traveling between the great urban centers of the Nile-Oxus Islamicate heartlands. Beyond these early stages, however, the history of the Sahāhayn canon does not diverge markedly from the course charted by Islamic history in general. Where Sunnism flourished, the canon followed.

Roy Mottahedeh has pointed out the prominence of Khurāsānī scholars in the articulation of the Sunni ḥadīth tradition in the third/ ninth century.²⁶ Richard Bulliet extends this geographical focus in both chronology and import, arguing that the institutions that characterized the Sunni revival in the great imperial center of Baghdad, such as the madrasa, were truly imports from the Iranian east.²⁷

²⁶ Roy Mottahedeh, "The Transmission of Learning. The Role of the Islamic Northeast," Madrasa, eds. Nicole Grandin and Marc Gaborieau (Paris: Éditions Arguments, 1997), 68.

The hadīth canon, however, was not the product of eastern Iran alone. Certainly, figures central to the canonization of the two works such as al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī resided mostly in Khurāsān. The Ṣaḥīḥayn Network, however, that readied the two books for canonization, and the cadre of Shāfiʿī/Ashʿarī and Ḥanbalī scholars who first promoted the canon, were first and foremost participants in the highly mobile and cosmopolitan scholarly culture that dominated Islamic civilization from the third/ninth to the sixth/twelfth centuries. Khurāsān was only one province in this wider world. Al-Dāraquṭnī never voyaged east of Baghdad, Abū Isḥāq al-Isfarāyīnī divided his career between the Abbasid capital and Khurāsān, and both Abū Naṣr al-Wāʾilī and al-Juwaynī spent significant portions of their careers in the Hijāz.

Furthermore, the expanded Sunni community to which the Şahīhayn canon proved so useful in the mid-fifth/eleventh century and beyond was just as present in North Africa, Baghdad, Egypt, or Isfahan as eastern Iran. Scholars in any city on the great scholarly/mercantile circuit that ran from Mecca to Transoxiana or westward to Andalusia would have appreciated the need for a common measure of authenticity, an authoritative reference or a standard of excellence in hadīth study. The Ṣahīhayn canon was a product of these far-flung urban centers and dusty roads of the dominant Hijāz—Baghdād—Khurāsān—Transoxiana circuit of the fourth/tenth and fifth/eleventh centuries.

Oddly, the tremendous geographical distance between Andalusia and the central Islamicate heartlands proved unimportant in the spread and usage of the canon. While the rugged mountains separating Jurjān from Naysābūr restricted the movement of information on the Şahāhayn in the first half of the fourth/tenth century, the vast expanses of desert, plain and ocean between Cordova and Baghdad were of little significance in the history of the canon. Not only did Andalusian scholars who had voyaged east, such as Qāsim b. Aşbagh of Cordova and Abū al-Walīd al-Bājī of Badajoz, participate visibly in the Şahāhayn Network and early applications of the canon respectively, the Şahāhayn attracted significant attention in Andalusia itself. Ṣahāḥ al-Bukhārī first arrived in Andalusia not long after it achieved fame in the East. Abū Muḥammad ʿAbdallāh b. Ibrāhīm al-Aşīlī (d. 392/1002), a judge in Saragossa, received the book from Abū Zavd al-Marwazī in Mecca and brought it back to Andalusia.²⁸ His teacher, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Muhammad al-Qābisī (d. 403/1012), also brought the collection back to the North African city of Qayrawān.²⁹ Their student al-Muhallab b. Abī Şufra Ahmad al-Marīyyī (d. 435/1044), a judge in the Andalusian town of Almeria, wrote a commentary on Sahīh al-Bukhārī that was in fact the first such work devoted to the book anywhere since al-Khattābī had written his A lām al-sunan fifty years earlier.³⁰

²⁷ Bulliet, Islam: The View from the Edge, 146.

Two generations later, al-Jayyānī (d. 498/1105) participated in the study and development of the Sahīhayn canon without ever leaving Andalusia.³¹ He collected six separate transmissions of al-Bukhārī's Sahih through the author's senior student, al-Firabri, as well as another prominent transmission from Ibrāhīm b. Ma'gil al-Nasafī. Al-Javyānī had the two most famous transmissions of Sahih Muslim as well (those of al-Qalānisī and Ibn Sufyān).32 In addition, he had copies of al-Hākim's Tārīkh Navsābūr and his Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth. Although he was writing only a few years after al-Khatīb al-Baghdādī's death, al-Jayyānī also had a copy of the massive Tārīkh Baghdād.³³ Some of the most influential studies of the Sahīhayn, such as al-Jayyānī's study of al-Bukhārī's teachers and al-Māzarī's and al-Qādī 'Iyād's commentaries on Sahih Muslim, came from the Maghrib. Although he was famously unaware of al-Tirmidhī's existence, Ibn Hazm rated the Sahīhavn as the two best collections of hadīth. After madrasas were founded in the Maghrib, the Sahāhayn became standard texts for hadīth study among the majority Mālikī school.³⁴

To the extreme east of the classical Islamic world, the Sahihayn canon was at the vanguard of hadīth scholarship in South Asia from the seventh/thirteenth century on. The first Indian to leave any trace of studying the Sahīhavn was also the first renowned Indian hadīth scholar in general. A native of Lahore, al-Hasan b. Muhammad al-Saghānī ²⁸ Al-Humaydī, Jadhwat al-muqtabis, 240; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 16:560. See also Maribel Fierro, "The Introduction of hadīth in al-Andalus," Der Islam 66 (1989): 87.

²⁹ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:159.

 ³⁰ Al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:579.
 ³¹ Al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 4:22.

³² Al-Jayyānī, al-Tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fī al-musnad al-sahīh li'l-Bukhārī, 22; idem, al-Tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fī Ṣaḥīh al-imām Muslim, 35-41.

³³ Al-Jayyānī, al-Tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fī Sahīh al-imām Muslim, 30–34.

³⁴ See Wadād al-Qādī, "al-Madrasa fī al-Maghrib fī daw' Kitāb al-mīʿād li'l-Wansharī," in al-Fikr al-tarbawī al-islāmī (Beirut: Dār al-Magāșid al-Islāmiyya, 1401/ 1981), 147.

CONCLUSION

(d. 650/1252), penned a study of al-Bukhārī's teachers, a commentary on his Şahīḥ and a famous combined edition of the Şahīḥayn, the Mashāriq al-anwār.³⁵ Al-Ṣaghānī spent much of his time studying in the Hijāz and serving the Abbasid caliph al-Nāṣir, who sent him back to India from Baghdad as the Abbasid ambassador to the Delhi Sultanate. Otherwise, it was not until the 700s/1300s that any real study of the Ṣahīḥayn started in South Asia proper. According to Muhammad Ishaq, the first mention of the two works comes in the work of Makhdūm al-Mulk Sharaf al-Dīn sometime between 741/1340 and 786/1384.³⁶

This history of the Sahīhayn in South Asia reflects the study of hadīth in that region in general. Although there had been limited hadīth scholarship in Lahore under the Ghaznavids in the late fifth/eleventh and early sixth/twelfth centuries, it was the establishment of the Delhi Sultanate that marked the beginning of continuous Muslim scholarship in northern India. Even then, however, the study of hadīth was limited to al-Baghawi's Masābih al-sunna and al-Saghāni's Mashāriq al-anwār (in effect, the Sahīhayn), the two books that provided the narrow foundations of the hadīth curriculum in the new Nāsiriyya and Mu'izzī colleges in Delhi.37 Hadīth scholarship in northern India was thus built on al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's canonical status as manifested in al-Baghawī's and al-Saghānī's digests of two works. 'Abd al-Awwal al-Husaynī al-Zaydpūrī (d. 968/1560), who lived in Gujarat and Delhi, wrote the first Indian commentary on al-Bukhārī's collection: the Fayd al-bārī fi sharh Sahīh al-Bukhārī.³⁸ In the wake of 'Abd al-Hagg b. Savf al-Dihlawī (d. 1052/1642), the Indian scholar who truly replicated the intense hadīth scholarship of the Islamic heartlands in India, hadīth study flourished in the subcontinent. From that point onward, almost every major Indian hadīth scholar produced a commentary on al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's Sahīh. Many commentaries were written in Persian, with Sirāj Ahmad al-Mujaddadī (d. 1815) even translating Sahīh Muslim directly into Persian.³⁹ In light of the prominent place of the Sahīhayn in South Asian Islam, it is no surprise that the great Sufi scholar Nizām al-Dīn Awliyā' (d. 725/1325) rebutted a hadīth used against him in a debate by stating only the contents of the Sahīhayn are assuredly authentic.⁴⁰

³⁵ Ishaq, India's Contribution to the Study of Hadith Literature, 230.

³⁶ Ishaq, India's Contribution to the Study of Hadith Literature, 77.

³⁷ Ishaq, India's Contribution to the Study of Hadith Literature, 49.

³⁸ Ishaq, India's Contribution to the Study of Hadith Literature, 129.

³⁹ Ishaq, India's Contribution to the Study of Hadith Literature, 143.

⁴⁰ Amīr Hasan Sijzī, Nizam ad-din Awliya: Morals for the Heart: Conversations of Shaykh

CHAPTER TEN

Conclusion

The Muslim hadīth tradition and the manifold roles of hadīth in Islamic civilization can stretch the historian's analogical abilities to their limits. It is not difficult to imagine that reports from the Prophet Muhammad played a central role in defining Islamic doctrinal and legal thought. As different schools matured and competed, it was natural that the authenticity of hadīths became an issue of great communal import. Al-Bukhārī and Muslim remain enduring symbols of the system of hadīth criticism and authentication that Muslim scholars from Andalusia to Transoxiana developed on so daunting a scale and with such internal consistency that it deserves mention as a great accomplishment in intellectual history. Just as we admire the logical or ethical explications of Peripatetic philosophers regardless of the accuracy of their conclusions today, we need only shift our gaze slightly to examine in wonder the web of intersecting lines of transmission that weave downward and outward from the Prophetic singularity along the dome of time and space.

Yet beyond the role of hadīth in law and doctrine, it seems almost incomprehensible how such a large number of people from all reaches of society could devote themselves so totally to collecting and sifting through reports from the Prophet. Histories like al-Khaṭīb's Tārīkh Baghdād or al-Dhahabī's Tadhkirat al-huffāz are replete with normal individuals who traveled for months simply to collect an additional version of a Prophetic report for which they already possessed one narration. Even more shocking is the obvious fact that most of these hadīth collectors had little concern for the actual authenticity of these reports.

Perhaps, however, the question of the canonization of al-Bukhārī and Muslim reminds us that such a distant and fantastic past is not actually far removed from us today. Even today, historical authenticity is not prized by all equally. Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī understood that in making authenticity paramount, one may sacrifice the tools necessary for communal cohesion. As al-Albānī's conflict with the traditional schools of law demonstrates, there are real questions as to the extent to which the institutional needs of the community trump 'scholarly integrity' in the criticism of attributions to the Prophet. The Şaḥīḥayn canon was shaped by communal needs and priorities as they shifted over time. What does the Muslim community need today?

Nizam ad-din Awliya recorded by Amir Hasan Sijzi, trans. Bruce B. Lawrence (New York: Paulist Press, 1992), 200.

APPENDIX I

REFERENCES FOR SAHIHAYN NETWORK CHART

This appendix provides the references for the material presented in Chapter Four's Sahīhayn Network Chart. It is organized by the regions shown in the chart, with chronological distribution within each region.

Baghdad

Ibn Rumayh Abū Saʿīd Ahmad b. Muhammad al-Nasawī (d. 357/967–8): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:210–11; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:96.

Al-Dāraquṭnī, 'Alī b. 'Umar (d. 385/995): al-Ghassānī, Tanbīh, 39; Brown, "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon."

Al-Lālakā'ī, Hibatallāh b. al-Ḥasan b. Manṣūr (d. 418/1027– 28): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 14:71–2; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 28:456–7; idem, Tadhkirat al-ḥuļfāz, 3:189.

Al-Barqānī, Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. Muḥammad b. Aḥmad (d. 425/ 1033–34): Al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:137–40; Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam; 14:281–2, 333, 379, 15:242; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Tabaqāt al-fuqahā' al-shāfi iyya, 1:363–5; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 17:464–8; idem, Tadhkirat alhuffāz, 3:183.

Al-Dimashqī, Abū Masʿūd Ibrāhīm (d. 401/1010–11): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 6:170–1; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:180.

Khalaf b. Muḥammad al-Wāsiţī (d. 400/1010): al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 8:329–30; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:179–80; al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustaţrafa, 125.

Al-Khallāl, Abū Muḥammad al-Ḥasan b. Muḥammad Abī Ṭālib b. al-Ḥasan (d. 439/1047): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 7:437–8; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:205; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 29:471–2. Egypt and the Hijāz Ibn al-Sakan, Abū 'Alī Saʿīd b. 'Uthmān al-Bazzāz (d. 353/964): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:100; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:88–9. Abū Dharr al-Harawī, 'Abdallāh b. Aḥmad (d. 430/1038): 'Abd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, Tārīkh Naysābūr, 607; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:201–3, 244.

Jurjān

Muḥammad b. Muḥammad Abū Aḥmad al-Jurjānī (d. 373– 74/983–85): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 3:441; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:549.

Ibn 'Adī, 'Abdallāh Abū Aḥmad (d. 365/975–6): al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 291–2; al-Sahmī, Tārīkh Jurjān, 106; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat alḥuffāz, 3:102–3; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:241.

Al-Ismā'īlī, Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm Abū Bakr (d. 371/981–2): al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 291; al-Sahmī, Tārīkh Jurjān, 87; Ibn al-Jawzī, Muntazam, 14:281–2; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṭabaqāt al-fuqahā' al-shāfi 'iyya, 417– 418; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:106–7; al-Subkī, Ṭabaqāt alshāfi 'iyya, 3:8.

Al-Ghițrīfī, Abū Aḥmad Muḥammad b. Aḥmad (d. 377/977–8): al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 292; al-Sahmī, Tārīkh Jurjān, 488; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:43; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:120–22; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:614–5.

Naysābūr

Abū Bakr al-Faḍl b. al-ʿAbbās al-Ṣāʾigh al-Rāzī (d. 270/883): Abū Zurʿa al-Rāzī, Kitāb al-duʿafāʾ wa ajwibatuhu ʿalā asʾilat al-Bardhaʿī, 2:674; al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 12:363; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 2:133-4; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 20:149-50.

Ibn Rajā', Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Muḥammad al-Naysābūrī al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 286/899): Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 89; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 2:186; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 21:288.

Al-Bazzār, Abū al-Faḍl Aḥmad b. Salama al-Naysābūrī (d. 286/899): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 4:408; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 21:59–60; idem, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 2:156.

Ibn al-Jārūd, Abū Muḥammad 'Abdallāh b. 'Alī (d. 307/919– 20): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:12–3.

Al-Hīrī, Abū Jaʿfar Aḥmad b. Hamdān (d. 311/923–4): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 4:337–8; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 88; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 23:402–3; idem, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 2:232.

Abū 'Awāna, Ya'qūb b. Isḥāq al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 312/924–5–316): al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 23:525–6.

Al-Sarrāj, Abū al-ʿAbbās Muḥammad b. Isḥāq b. Ibrāhīm (d. 313/925): al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 310–11; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 1:264–7; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 23:462–4; idem, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 2:215.

Ibn 'Ammār al-Shahīd, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad b. Muḥammad (d. 317/929–30): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:37; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 23:546–7.

Al-Juwaynī, Abū 'Imrān Mūsā b. al-'Abbās al-Naysābūrī (d. 323/ 934–5): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:27; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 24:139–40.

Al-Balādhurī, Abū Muḥammad Aḥmad b. Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ṭūsī (d. 329/940-1): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:72; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:169.

Al-Qurțubī, Abū Muḥammad Qāsim b. Aşbagh al-Mālikī (d. 340/951): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:49; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:192–3; al-Kattānī, al-Risāla al-mustatrafa, 20.

Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī (d. 349/960): Ibn Manda, Shurūț, 71; al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 8:70–2; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:80; Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 13.

Al-Umawī al-Qazvīnī, Abū al-Walīd Ḥassān b. Muḥammad b. Aḥmad (d. 344/955): al-ʿAbbādī, Kītāb Ṭabaqāt al-Fuqahāʾ aš-Šāfī ʿyya, 74; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 90; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:75; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:417–8.

Al-Ţūsī, Abū al-Naḍr Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Yūsuf (d. 344/955): al-ʿAbbādī, Kītāb Ṭabaqāt al-Fuqahāʾ aš-Šāfiʿiyya, 77; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:73; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:311–12; Mullā Khāțir, Makānat al-Ṣaḥīḥayn, 176.

Ibn al-Akhram, Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. Ya'qūb al-Naysābūrī (d. 344/955): al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 315; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:55; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 25:312–3; cf. Ibn Manda, Shurūt, 73.

Al-Hīrī, Abū Saʿīd Aḥmad b. Abū Bakr Muḥammad (d. 353/ 964): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:225–6; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:89; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:84. Abū al-Ḥasan al-Naysābūrī, Muḥammad b. al-Ḥasan (d. 355/ 966): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:68.

Al-Shārikī, Abū Hāmid Ahmad b. Muhammad b. Shārik al-Harawī (d. 355/966): al-ʿAbbādī, Kitāb Ṭabaqāt al-Fuqahāʾ aš-Šāfi iyya, 58; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 89; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:227-8.

Al-Zaghūrī, Abū 'Alī (d. 359/969–70): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 13:102; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣahīḥ Muslim, 71.

Al-Shammākhī, Abū 'Abdallāh al-Ḥusayn b. Aḥmad (d. 372/ 982): al-Khatīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 8:8–9; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 16:360–1.

Ibn Dhuhl, Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. al-'Abbās al-Harawī (d. 378/988): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 3:335–7; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:634–5; idem, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:141, 158.

Al-Māsarjisī, Abū 'Alī al-Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad (d. 365/976): 'Izz al-Dīn Ibn al-Athīr, al-Lubāb fī tahdhīb al-ansāb, 2:147–8; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:110–11; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:337–8.

Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad Abū Isḥāq al-Muzakkī (d. 362/ 973): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 6:165–7; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 26:289–90.

Abū Aḥmad Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Aḥmad al-Ḥākim (d. 378/988): al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī, Tārīkh Nīshābūr, 187; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:123–4.

Al-Jawzaqī, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. 'Abdallāh b. Muḥammad (d. 388/998): Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 89; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:146; idem, Siyar, 16:493–4.

Al-Armawī, Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad (d. 428/1036– 7): al-ʿAbbādī, Kītāb Ṭabaqāt al-Fuqahā' aš-Šāfi iyya, 100; ʿAbd al-Ghāfir al-Fārisī, 153; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 29:213.

Ibn Manjawayh, Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. 'Alī al-Iṣbahānī (d. 428/ 1036-7): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:191; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 29:208-10.

Isfahan

Abū al-Shaykh Abū Muḥammad ʿAbdallāh b. Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar al-Iṣbahānī (d. 369/979): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 10:117; Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ, Ṣiyānat Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim, 61; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:105–6; idem, Siyar, 16:276–80.

382

Al-Shīrāzī, Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. 'Abdān of Ahwāz (d. 388/998): al-Khalīlī, al-Irshād, 335; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:161. Ibn Manda, Muḥammad b. Ishāq (d. 395/1004–5): al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:320–4; idem, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:158.

Ibn Mardawayh, Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. Mūsā al-Iṣbahānī (d. 416/ 1025–6): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:169.

Abū Nuʿaym al-Iṣbahānī, Aḥmad b. ʿAbdallāh (d. 430/1038): al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 29:274–280; Ibn al-Najjār, Kītāb al-radd, 145; "Abū Nuʿaym al-Iṣbahānī," Dā`erat al-maʿāref-e bozorg-e eslāmī, 6:339. Al-Milanḥī, Sulaymān b. Ibrāhīm al-Iṣbahānī (d. 486/1093):

Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 17:6; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 33:17305; al-Albānī, Fihris makhţūţāt Dār al-Kutub al-Zāhiriyya, 550.

Transoxiana

Abd al-Ṣamad b. Muḥammad Ibn Ḥayyawayh (d. 368/978–9): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 11:43; al-Dhahabī, Siyar, 16:290–1.

Hamd b. Muḥammad Abū Sulaymān al-Khāṭṭābī (d. 388/998): Ibn al-Jawzī, al-Muntazam, 14:129; al-Subkī, Tabaqāt al-shāfi iyya al-kubrā, 3:284–90; al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:166–7; idem, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 3:149–150.

Abū Naşr Ahmad al-Kalābādhī (d. 398/1008): al-Khaṭīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 5:201; al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-huffāz, 3:154–5; idem, Tārīkh al-islām, 27:355.

'Umar b. 'Alī Abū Muslim al-Laythī al-Bukhārī (d. 466-8): al-Dhahabī, Tadhkirat al-ḥuffāz, 4:24.

APPENDIX II

THE QUESTION OF THE ATTRIBUTION OF THE $AHIHAYN

Several scholars have argued that the texts of the Ṣaḥīḥayn did not stabilize until some time after the deaths of their authors. In light of such realities as "organic texts, pseudepigraphy and long-term redactional activity," Norman Calder claimed, "Apparently the product of the devoted and orderly activity of a single person, works like the Ṣaḥīḥs of al-Bukhārī and Muslim should probably be recognized as emerging into final form at least one generation later than the dates recorded for the deaths of the putative authors...."¹ Based on his analysis of a partial fifth/eleventh-century manuscript of Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, Alphonse Mingana concluded that the text was still in a relatively fluid form at that point in time. Yet there is little available evidence suggesting that, beyond the normal permutations of manuscript transmission for texts as large and detailed as the Ṣaḥīḥayn, either al-Bukhārī's or Muslim's books were altered substantially after their deaths.

The Sahāhayn are two massive works, and the vagaries of manuscript transmission introduced the possibility of frequent variation even for a text transmitted intact from its author. Several generations of editors, such as Abū Dharr al-Harawī (d. 430/1038), al-Ṣaghānī (d. 650/1252) and the Egyptian Hanbalī al-Yūnīnī (d. 658/1260), thus played important roles in collating different transmissions of Sahāh al-Bukhārī into vulgate editions.² Such editorial review, however, was endemic to the pre-print world and does not reflect any instability specific to the Ṣahāhayn.

Mingana based his assertion that al-Bukhārī's $Sah\bar{h}$ remained in fluid form through the early fifth/eleventh century on his observation that two of the chapters of the manuscript that he examined were out of normal order and that each narration began with "al-Bukhārī informed us...," a feature not found in the dominant recensions of the text.³ Yet Mingana's partial manuscript of the Sahāh consisted of only three chapters. We have no evidence that the ordering of the remaining ninety-four chapters was irregular.

¹ Calder, Studies in Early Muslim Jurisprudence, 194.

² For discussions of these different editors and their contributions, see Mingana, An Important Manuscript of the Traditions of al-Bukhāri, 16–18; Rosemarie Quiring-Zoche, "How al-Buhārī's Ṣahīḥ was edited in the middle ages: 'Alī al-Yūnīnī and his Rumūz," Bulletin d'Études Orientales 50 (1998): 191–222; and Johann Fück, "Beiträge zur Überlieferungsgeschicte von Buhārī's Traditionssammlung," Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft 92 (1938): 60–82.

Besides Mingana's unconvincing evidence, there are other indications that al-Bukhārī's Sahīh varied slightly in content as it was transmitted from its author through his various students. We know from al-Kalābādhī that al-Bukhārī was transmitting his Sahīh during his own lifetime. Al-Kalābādhī informs us that al-Bukhārī had been narrating his Sahīh to students for at least eight years before his death.⁴ This is corroborated by al-Bukhārī's own student, al-Tirmidhī (d. 279/892), who mentions al-Bukhārī's Sahīh in his Jāmi. As the author was almost certainly making adjustments to his work throughout his life, it should not surprise us that the different narrations of the Sahīh from al-Bukhārī's students varied from one another. When compared with the enduring transmission of the Sahīh from al-Bukhārī's most famous student, al-Firabrī, his other student Hammād b. Shākir's (d. 290/902-3) recension of the text contained two hundred fewer narrations. Ibrāhīm b. Ma'qil al-Nasafī's (d. 295/907-8) was three hundred less.⁶ But according to Ibn Hajar's count, the Sahīh contains a total of 9,082 narrations of all sorts.7 We should thus not consider a variation of three hundred narrations, roughly 3% of the Sahāh, evidence of an incomplete or fluid text.

The other major piece of evidence suggesting that al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥāḥ was edited significantly after his death has been Abū Ishāq al-Mustamlī's (d. 376/986–7) statement that, upon examining his teacher al-Firabrī's copy of the Ṣaḥāḥ, he noticed that some sections were still in draft form. Specifically, several subchapter headings lacked ḥadīths, and several ḥadīths appeared with no subchapter headings. Al-Mustamlī explains that he and his fellow students therefore tried to arrange the unsorted material in its proper place (fa-aḍafnā baʿḍ dhālik ilā baʿḍ).⁸ Al-Bukhārī's

³ Mingana, An Important Manuscript of the Traditions of al-Bukhāri; 1, 6, 9, 14.

⁴ Al-Kalābādhī, Rijāl Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī, 1:24.

⁵ Jāmiʿ al-Tirmidhī: kitāb al-tahāra, bāb mā jāʾa fī al-istinjāʾ biʾl-ḥajarayn.

⁶ Al-'Irāqī, al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh, 26-7.

⁷ Ibn Hajar, Hady al-sārī, 648-53.

⁸ Al-Bājī, Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Bājī wa kitābuhu al-Ta'dīl wa al-tajrīh, 1:310-1.

 $Sah\bar{h}h$, however, contains ninety-seven chapters and approximately 3,750 subchapters. That al-Firabrī's copy of the text had what seems to be a relatively small number of missing subchapter headings does not call into question the general integrity of the text.

Evidence suggests that Muslim's Ṣaḥīḥ was also completed within his own lifetime, and there is little indication that the text mutated beyond the normal vagaries of transmission after his death. The earliest manuscripts of Muslim's collection include no subchapter titles, but we have no reason to consider that this was not the author's intention—especially considering Muslim's decidedly impartial approach to the legal implications of his hadīths.⁹ Otherwise, Muslim's students and contemporaries considered his collection complete at the time of his death. Abū Zurʿa al-Rāzī mentioned that Abū Bakr al-Faḍl al-Ṣāʾigh (d. 270/883) had composed a mustakhraj of the Ṣaḥīḥ during Muslim's lifetime. Muslim's colleagues Ibn Rajāʾ (d. 286/899) and Abū al-Faḍl Aḥmad b. Salama (d. 286/899) did the same.¹⁰ Presumably, *mustakhraj*s could only have been produced on the basis of completed template collections.

⁹ Al-Nawawī, Sharh Ṣahīh Muslim, 1:129.

¹⁰ Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī, Kitāb al-du'afā' wa ajwibatuhu 'alā as'ilat al-Bardha'ī, 2:674; Ibn al-Şalāh, Şiyānat Şahīh Muslim, 89; al-Khaţīb, Tārīkh Baghdād, 4:408; cf. al-Dhahabī, Tārīkh al-islām, 21:59–60.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Secondary Sources on Canonization

- Adams, Hazard. "Canons: Literary Criteria/Power Criteria." Critical Inquiry 14, no. 4 (1988): 748-764.
- Adriaanse, H.J. "Canonicity and the Problem of the Golden Mean." In Canonization and Decanonization, eds. A. van der Kooij and K. van der Toorn, 313–30. Leiden: Brill, 1998.
- Altieri, Charles. "An Idea and Ideal of a Literary Canon." In Canons, ed. Robert von Hallberg, 41–64. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1984.
- Aristotle, "Poetics." In The Norton Anthology of Theory and Criticism, ed. Vincent B. Leitch, 90–116. New York: W.W. Norton Co., 2001.
- Assman, Aleida and Jan Assman, eds. Kanon und Zensur. Munich: Wilhelm Fink Verlag, 1987.
- Balkin, J.M. and Sanford Levinson, eds. Legal Canons. New York: New York University Press, 2000.
- Blenkinsopp, Joseph. Prophecy and Canon: a Contribution to the Study of Jewish Origins. Notre Dame: University of Notre Dame Press, 1977.
- Burns, Gerald L. "Canon and Power in the Hebrew Scriptures." In Canons, ed. Robert von Hallberg, 65–84. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1984.
- Von Campenhausen, Hans. The Formation of the Christian Bible. Trans. John Austin Baker. London: Adam & Charles Black, 1972.
- Coats, George W. and Burke O. Long. Canon and Authority: Essays in Old Testament Religion and Theology. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1977.
- Countryman, L. Wm. "Tertullian and the Regula Fidei." The Second Century 2, no. 4 (1982): 208–227.
- Davidson, Donald. Inquiries into Truth and Interpretation. 2nd ed. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 2001.
- Fish, Stanley. "Not for an Age but for All Time: Canons and Postmodernism." Journal of Legal Education 43 (1993): 11–21.

Gamble, Harry. The New Testament Canon. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1985.

- Gorak, Jan., ed. Canon vs. Culture: Reflections on the Current Debate. New York: Garland, 2001.
 - —. Critic of Crisis: a Study of Frank Kermode. Columbia, Missouri: University of Missouri Press, 1987.

----. The Making of the Modern Canon. London: Athlone, 1991.

Halbertal, Moshe. People of the Book: Canon, Meaning and Authority. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1997.

Kermode, Frank. "The Canon." In The Literary Guide to the Bible, eds. Robert Alter and Frank Kermode, 600–11. Cambridge: Belknap Press, 1987.

----. The Classic. New York: Viking Press, 1975.

——. The Genesis of Secrecy: on the Interpretation of Narrative. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1979.

----. "Institutional Control of Interpretation." Salmagundi 43 (1979): 72-87.

- Lanne, Emmanuel. "La règle de la vérité." In Lex Orandi Lex Credendi, 57-70. Rome: Editrice Anselmiana, 1980.
- Levering, Miriam, ed. Rethinking Scripture: Essays from a Comparative Perspective. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1989.

- Levinson, Bernard M. "Paradoxes of Canon and Authorship in Ancient Israel." Numen 50 (2003): 1–51.
- Menzies, Allan. "The Natural History of Sacred Books: Some Suggestions for a Preface to the History of the Canon of Scripture." American Journal of Theology 1 (1897): 71–94.
- Metzger, Bruce M. The Canon of the New Testament. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1987.
- Pagels, Elaine. Beyond Belief: the Secret Gospel of Thomas. New York: Vintage Books, 2003.
- Sheppard, Gerald T. "Canon." In The Encyclopedia of Religion. Ed. Mircea Eliade. Vol. 3. New York: MacMillan, 1987.
- Smith, Jonathan Z. "Canons, Catalogues and Classics." In Canonization and Decanonization, ed. A. van der Kooij and K. van der Toorn, 295–312. Leiden: Brill, 1998.
 - ----. Imagining Religion. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1982.
- Stroumsa, Guy G. "The Body of Truth and its Measures: New Testament Canonization in Context." In Gnosisforschung und Religionsgeschichte, eds. Holger Preissler and Hubert Seiweret, 307–316. Marburg: Diagonal-Verlag, 1994.
- Timm, Jeffrey R. Texts in Context: Traditional Hermeneutics in South Asia. Albany: State University of New York, 1992.

Secondary Sources: the Canon in Islamic Tradition

- Al-Azmeh, Aziz. "The Muslim Canon from Late Antiquity to the Era of Modernism." In Canonization and Decanonization, ed. A. van der Kooij and K. van der Toorn, 253–66. Leiden: Brill, 1998.
- Brockopp, Jonathan. "Islam." In Sacred Texts and Authority, ed. Jacob Neusner, 31–60. Cleveland: Pilgrim Press, 1998.
- Hanaway, William, Jr. "Is There a Canon of Persian Poetry?" Edebiyât 4, no. 1 (1993): 3–12.
- Melchert, Christopher. "Ibn Mujāhid and the Establishment of the Seven Qur'anic Readings." Studia Islamica 91 (2000): 5–23.
- Rubanovich, Julia. "Literary Canon and Patters of Evaluation in Persian Prose on the Eve of the Mongol Invasions." Studia Iranica 32 (2003): 47–67.
- Wheeler, Brannon M. Applying the Canon in Islam: The Authorization and Maintenance of Interpretive Reasoning in Hanafi Scholarship. Albany: State University of New York Press, 1996.
- Widengren, Geo. "Holy Book and Tradition in Islam." In Holy Book and Holy Tradition, eds. F.F. Bruce and E.G. Rupp, 210–236. Manchester: University of Manchester Press, 1968.

Secondary Sources General

- ^{(Abd al-Ghanī, 'Abd al-Khāliq. Al-Imām al-Bukhārī wa Ṣaḥīḥuhu. Jedda: Dār al-Manāra, 1405/1985.}
- Abd al-Rauf, Muhammad. "Hadīth Literature—I: the Development of the Science of Hadīth." In TheCambridge History of Arabic Literature: Arabic Literature until the End of the Umayyad Period, eds. Beeston, A.F.L. et al., 271–298. London: Cambridge University Press, 1983.
- Abū Ghudda, 'Abd al-Fattāḥ. Tahqīq ismay al-Ṣahāḥayn wa ism Jāmi' al-Tirmidhī. Aleppo: Maktab al-Maṭbū'āt al-Islāmiyya, 1414/1993.
- Abū Zahra, Muhammad. Ibn Hanbal. Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-ʿArabī, [1965].
- ——. Ibn Taymiyya. Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-ʿArabī, [1964].
- ——. Mālik. Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-'Arabi, 2002.

—. Al-Shāfi'ī. Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-'Arabī, 1416/1996.

- Al-Ahdab, Khaldūn. Asbāb ikhtilāf al-muḥaddithīn. 2 vols. Jeddah: Dār Kunūz al-Ilm, 1422/2001.
- Al-Albānī, Muḥammad Nāṣir al-Dīn. Fihris makhtūtāt Dār al-Kutub al-Zāhiriyya. Ed. Mashhūr Ḥasan al-Salmān. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 2001.
- ^cAlī, Ibrāhīm Muhammad. Muhammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī: muhaddith al-'aşr wa nāşir al-sunna. Damascus: Dār al-Qalam, 1422/2001.
- Amin, Kamaruddin. "Nāşiruddīn al-Albānī on Muslim's Ṣaḥāħ: a Critical Study of his Method." Islamic Law and Society 11, no. 2 (2004): 149–76.
- Ansari, Zafar Ishaq. "Islamic Juristic Terminology before Sāfī: a Semantic Analysis with Special Reference to Kūfa." Arabica 19 (1972): 255–300.

Arberry, A.J. "The Teachers of Al-Bukhārī." Islamic Quarterly 11 (1967): 34-49.

- Al-'Awnī, al-Sharīf Hātim. Ijmā' al-muhaddithīn 'alā 'adam ishtirāt al-'ilm bi'l-samā' fī al-hadīth al-mu'an'an bayn al-muta'āşirīn. Beirut: Dār 'Ālam al-Fawā'id, 1421/2001.
- Baloch, N.A. "Impact of Imām al-Bukhārī's Work in Sind and Hind: Studies of his Jāmi' Sahīh with Special References to Atrāf." Hamdard Islamicus 22, no. 4 (1999): 59–67.
- Beardsley, Monroe C. Aesthetics: Problems in the Philosophy of Criticism. New York: Harcourt, Brace and World, 1958.
- Bedir, Murteza. "The Problem of Uşūl al-Shāshī." Islamic Studies 42, no. 3 (2003): 415-36.
- Bell, Catherine. Ritual: Perspectives and Dimensions. New York: Oxford University Press, 1997.
- Berkey, Jonathan P. The Formation of Islam. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2003.

—. The Transmission of Knowledge in Medieval Cairo: a Social History of Islamic Education. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1992.

- Bernand, Marie. "Hanafi Usūl al-Fiqh through a Manuscript of al-Gassās." Journal of the American Oriental Society 105, no. 4 (1985): 623–35.
- ——. "Le Kitāb al-radd ʿalā l-bidaʿ d'Abū Muṭīʿ Makhūl al-Nasafī." Annales Islamologiques 16 (1980): 39–126.
- —. "La Notion de Ilm chez les premiers Mu^ctazilites." Pts. 1 and 2. Studia Islamica 36 (1972): 23–46; 37 (1972): 27–56.
- Bojnūrdī, Kāzem, ed. Dā'erat al-ma'āref-e bozorg-e eslāmī. 13 vols. Tehran: Merkez-e Dā'erat al-Ma'āref-e Bozorg-e Eslāmī, 1368/[1989]—present.

Brockelman, Carl. Geschichte der aribischen Litteratur. 3 vols. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1937.

- Brown, Daniel W. Rethinking Tradition in Modern Islamic Thought. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1996.
- Brown, Jonathan A.C. "Criticism of the Proto-Hadith Canon: al-Dāraqutnī's Adjustment of the Sahīhayn." Journal of Islamic Studies 15, no. 1 (2004): 1–37.

——. "The Last Days of al-Ghazzālī and the 'āmm, khāşş and khāşş al-khawāşş of the Sufi World." The Muslim World 96, no. 1 (2006): 89–113.

- Brown, Peter. The Making of Late Antiquity. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1987.
- Bulliet, Richard W. Islam: The View from the Edge. New York: Columbia University Press, 1994.

-----. The Patricians of Nishapur. Cambridge: Harvard University Press, 1972.

- Burton, John. An Introduction to the Hadīth. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 1994.
- Calder, Norman. "Ikhtilâf and Ijmâ' in al-Shafi'i's Risâla." Studia Islamica 58 (1983): 55-81.
- -----. Studies in Early Muslim Jurisprudence. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1993.
- Chamberlain, Michael. Knowledge and Social Practice in Medieval Damascus, 1190–1350. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994.
- Commins, David Dean. The Salafi Islamic Reform Movement in Damascus, 1885-1914:

Religious Intellectuals, Politics and Social Change in Late Ottoman Syria. PhD Diss., University of Michigan, 1985.

Daftary, Farhad, ed. Intellectual Traditions in Islam. London: I.B. Tauris, 2000.

Dallal, Ahmad. "The Origins and Objectives of Islamic Revivalist Thought: 1750– 1850." Journal of the American Oriental Society 113, no. 3 (1993): 341–59.

Delafosse, Maurice. "Les débuts des troupes noires du Maroc." Hespéris 3 (1923): 1–12.

Dickinson, Eerik. The Development of Early Sunnite Hadīth Criticism. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 2001.

. "Ibn al-Şalāh al-Shahrazūrī and the Isnād." Journal of the American Oriental Society 122, no. 3 (2002): 481–505.

- Al-Durays, Khālid Manşur 'Abdallāh. Mawqif al-imāmayn al-Bukhārī wa Muslim min ishtirāţ al-laqyā wa al-samā' fī al-sanad al-mu'an'an bayn al-muta'āşirīn. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd and Sharikat al-Riyād, 1417/1997.
- Fattah, Halah. "'Wahhabi' Influences, Salafi Responses: Shaykh Mahmud Shukri and the Iraqi Salafi Movement, 1745–1930." Journal of Islamic Studies 14, no. 2 (2003): 127–148.
- Eickelman, Dale F. "The Art of Memory: Islamic Education and its Social Reproduction." In Comparing Muslim Societies, ed. Juan R.I. Cole, 97–132. Ann Arbor: University of Michigan Press, 1992.
- Ephrat, Daphna. A Learned Society in a Period of Transition: The Sunni 'Ulama' of Eleventh Century Baghdad. Albany: State University of New York Press, 2000.
- Van Ess, Josef. "Ibn Kullāb et la Mihna." Arabica 37 (1990): 173-233.
- —. "L'Autorité de la tradition prophétique dans la théologie mu'tazilite." In La Notion d'autorité au Moyen Age: Islam, Byzance, Occident, ed. George Makdisi et al., 211–226. Paris: Presses Universitaires de France, c. 1982.
- -----. Theologie und Gesellschaft im 2. und 3. Jahrhundert Hidschra. 6 vols. New York: Walter de Gruyter, 1997.
- Fadel, Muhammad. "Ibn Hajar's Hady al-Sārī: a Medieval Interpretation of the Structure of al-Bukhārī's al-Jāmi'al-Ṣaḥāḥ: Introduction and Translation." Journal of Near Eastern Studies 54 (1995): 161–195.
- Fierro, Maribel. "Bāținism in al-Andalus. Maslama b. Qāsim al-Qurțubī (d. 353/964), author of the Rutbat al-Hakīm and the Ghāyat al-Hakīm." Studia Islamica 84,2 (1996): 87–112.

---. "The Introduction of hadīth in al-Andalus." Der Islam 66 (1989): 69-93.

Fück, Johann. "Beiträge zur Überlieferungsgeschicte von Buhärt's Traditionssammlung." Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morgenländischen Gesellschaft 92 (1938): 60–82.

Garden, Kenneth. "Al-Ghazālī's Contested Revival: Ihyā' 'ulūm al-dīn and its Critics in Khorasan and the Maghrib." PhD diss., University of Chicago, 2005.

- Gellner, Ernest. Saints of the Atlas. London: Weidenfeld and Nicolson, 1969.
- Gilliot, Cl. "Le Traitement du hadīt dans le Tahdīb al-atār de Tabarī." Arabica 41, no. 3 (1994): 309–51.
- Gleave, Robert. "Between Hadīth and Fiqh: the 'Canonical' Imāmī Collections of Akhbār." Islamic Law and Society 8, no. 3 (2001): 350–382.
- Goldziher, Ignaz. Muslim Studies II. Trans. S.M. Stern and G.R. Barber. Chicago: Aldine Atherton, 1971.
- Al-Ghumārī, 'Abd al-Ḥayy b. al-Ṣiddīq. Iqāmat al-hujja 'alā 'adam ihāṭat aḥad min al-a'imma al-arba'a bi'l-sunna. Unpublished manuscript.

Al-Ghumārī, Ahmad b. al-Şiddīq. Fath al-malik al-ʿalī bi-şihhat hadīth bāb madīnat al-ʿilm ʿAlī. Ed. ʿImād Surūr. [n.p.]; [n.p.], 1426/2005.

Hallaq, Wael B. "The Authenticity of Prophetic Hadīth: a Pseudo-problem." Studia Islamica 89 (1999): 75–90.

—. Authority, Continuity, and Change in Islamic Law. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2001.

—. "From Geographical to Personal Schools?: A Reevaluation." Islamic Law and Society 8, no. 1 (2001):1–26.

- —. A History of Islamic Legal Theories. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1997.
- Hāshim, al-Husaynī 'Abd al-Majīd. Al-Imām al-Bukhārī muḥaddith^{an} wa faqīh^{an}. Cairo: Mişr al-'Arabī li'l-Nashr wa al-Tawzī', [1966].
- Haykel, Bernard. "Reforming Islam by Dissolving the Madhāhib: Shawkānī and His Zaydī Detractors in Yemen." In Studies in Islamic Legal Theory, ed. Bernard Weiss, 337–364. Leiden: Brill, 2002.
- Heck, Paul L. "The Epistemological Problem of Writing in Islamic Civilization: al-Khatīb al-Baģdādī's (d. 463/1071) Taqyīd al-'ilm." Studia Islamica 94 (2002): 85–114.
- Heer, Nicholas, ed. Islamic Law and Jurisprudence. Seattle: University of Washington Press, 1990.
- Helali Müller, Asma. "Étude sur la tradition prophétique : La question de l'authenticité du I/VII^{ème} au VI/XII^{ème} siècle." PhD diss. École Pratique des Hautes Études, 2004.
- Hodgson, Marshall. The Venture of Islam. 3 vols. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1974.
- Hoffman-Ladd, Valerie H. "Devotion to the Prophet and His Family in Egyptian Sufism." International Journal of Middle East Studies 24 (1992): 615–637.
- Horii, Satoe. "Reconsideration of Legal Devices (hiyal) in Islamic Jurisprudence: the Hanafīs and their "Exits" (makhārij)." Journal of Islamic Law and Society 9, no. 3 (2002): 312–357.
- Hunwick, John O. Timbuktu and the Songhay Empire: al-Sa dī's Ta'rīkh al-sūdān down to 1613 and other Contemporary Documents. Leiden: Brill, 1999.
- Hurvitz, Nimrod. The Formation of Hanbalism: from Piety to Power. London: Routledge-Curzon, 2002.
- Al-Huwaynī, Abū Ishāq. "Shurūț al-Bukhārī wa Muslim." Lecture from www.islamway. com last accessed 2/03/2004.
- Al-Idilbī, Şalāh al-Dīn b. Ahmad. Kashf al-ma'lūl mimmā summiyā bi-silsilat al-ahādīth alsahīha. Amman: Dār al-Bayāriq, 1421/2001.
- Ishaq, Muhammad. India's Contribution to Hadith Literature. Dhaka: University of Dacca, 1955.
- Al-Jază'irī al-Dimashqī, Ţāhir (d. 1338/1920). Tawjīh al-nazar ilā uşūl al-athar. Ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda. 2 vols. Aleppo: Maktabat al-Matbū'āt al-Islāmiyya, 1416/1995.
- Jum'a, 'Alī. Al-Imām al-Shāfi'ī wa madrasatuhu al-fiqhiyya. Cairo: Dār al-Risāla, 1425/2004.
- Juynboll, G.H.A. The Authenticity of the Tradition Literature. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1969.
- -----. Muslim Tradition. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983.
- —. Studies on the Origins and Uses of Islamic Hadith. London: Variorum, 1996.
- Al-Kattānī, Muḥammad b. Jaʿfar (d. 1927). Al-Risāla al-mustațirafa fi bayān mashhūr kutub al-sunna al-mushariafa. 2nd edition. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1400/[1980].
- Khalafallah, Haifa G. "Rethinking Islamic law: Genesis and Evolution in the Islamic Legal Method and Structures: the Case of a 20th Century 'Alim's Journey into his Legal Traditions. Muhammad al-Ghazali (1917–1996)." PhD diss., Georgetown University, 2000.
 - —. "Muslim Women: Public Authority, Scriptures and 'Islamic Law.'" In Beyond the Exotic: Women's Histories in Islamic Societies, ed. Amira Sonbol, 37–52. Syracuse: Syracuse University Press, 2005.
- Khalidi, Tarif. Arabic Historical Thought in the Classical Period. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1994.
 - —. "The Idea of Progress in Classical Islam." Journal of Near Eastern Studies 40, no. 4 (1981): 277–89.

- Al-Kattānī, Yūsuf. Madrasat al-imām al-Bukhārī fī al-Maghrib. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār Lisān al-ʿArab, [198–].
- Kohlberg, Etan. A Medieval Muslim Scholar at Work: Ibn Țāwūs and His Library. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1992.
- Krentz, Edgar. The Historical Critical Method. Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1975.
- Al-Laḥḥām, Badī al-Sayyid. Al-Imām al-hāfiz Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūţī wa juhūduhu fi al-hadīth wa 'ulūmihi. Damascus: Dār Qutayba, 1415/1994.
- Lammens, Henri. Islām: Beliefs and Institutions. Trans., Sir E. Denison Ross. New York: E.P. Dutton and Co., [1926].
- Lapidus, Ira. A History of Islamic Societies. New York: Cambridge University Press, 1988.
- Leach, Edmund. Culture and Communication. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1976.
- Librande, Leonard. "The Supposed Homogeneity of Technical Terms in Hadith Study." The Muslim World 72 (1983): 34–50.
- Lucas, Scott C. Constructive Critics, Hadith Literature, and the Articulation of Sunni Islam. Leiden: Brill, 2004.

Madelung, Wilferd. "The Origins of the Controversy Concerning the Creation of the Koran." Orientalia Hispanica Vol. 1, ed. J.M. Barral, 504–525. Leiden: Brill, 1974.

-. Religious Trends in Early Islamic Iran. Albany: Bibliotheca Persica, 1988.

- Mahmūd, 'Abd al-Majīd. Abū Ja far al-Ţaḥāwī wa atharuhu fi al-ḥadīth. Cairo: al-Maktaba al-'Arabiyya, 1395/1975.
- Makdisi, George. "Ash'arī and the Ash'arites in Islamic Religious History." Parts 1 and 2. Studia Islamica 17 (1962): 37–80; 18 (1963): 19–39.
- —. "Hanbalite Islam." In Studies on Islam, ed. and trans. Merlin L. Swartz, 45–76. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1981.

—. "Law and Traditionalism in the Institutions of Learning of Medieval Islam." In Theology and Law in Islam, ed. G.E. von Grunebaum, 75–88. Wiesbaden: Otto Harrassowitz, 1971.

—. "Muslim Institutions of Learning in Eleventh-Century Baghdad." Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 24, no. 1 (1961): 1–56.

—. The Rise of Colleges: Institutions of Learning in Islam and the West. Edinburgh: Edinburgh University Press, 1981.

—. "The Significance of the Sunni Schools of Law in Islamic Religious History." International Journal of Middle East Studies 10 (1979): 1–8.

- Malamud, Margaret. "Sufi Organizations and Structures of Authority in Medieval Nishapur." International Journal of Middle East Studies 26, no. 3 (1994): 427-442.
- Martin, Richard C., Mark R. Woodward and Dwi S. Atmaja. Defenders of Reason in Islam: Mu'tazilism from Medieval School to Modern Symbol. Oxford: Oneworld, 1997.
- Melchert, Christopher. "The Adversaries of Ahmad ibn Hanbal." Arabica 44 (1997): 234-253.
- ——. "Bukhārī and Early Hadith Criticism." Journal of the American Oriental Society 121 (2001): 7–19.
- —. The Formation of the Sunni Schools of Law, 9th to 10th Centuries CE. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 1997.

- Meri, Josef W. The Cult of Saints among Muslims and Jews in Medieval Syria. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002.
- Metcalf, Barbara Daly. Islamic Revival in British India: Deoband, 1860–1900. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1982.

- Mingana, Alphonse. An Important Manuscript of the Traditions of al-Bukhāri. Cambridge: W. Heffer and Sons, 1936.
- Mottahedeh, Roy. "The Transmission of Learning. The Role of the Islamic Northeast." In Madrasa, eds. Nicole Grandin and Marc Gaborieau, 63–72. Paris: Éditions Arguments, 1997.
- Motzki, Harald, ed. The Biography of Muhammad. Leiden: E.J. Brill, 2000.

- Mullā Khāțir, Khalīl Ibrāhīm. Makānat al-Ṣaḥīḥayn. Jeddah: Dār al-Qibla li'l-Thaqāfa al-Islāmiyya, 1415/1994.
- Al-Mūsawī, 'Abd al-Husayn Sharaf al-Dīn. Abū Hurayra. Beirut: Dār al-Zahrā', 1397/ 1977.
- Nafi, Basheer M. "Taşawwuf and Reform in Pre-Modern Islamic Culture: in Search of Ibrāhīm al-Kurānī." Die Welt des Islams 42, no. 3 (2002): 307–55.
- Najmī, Mohammad Şādeq. Sayrī dar Şahīhayn: sayr va barrasī dar do ketāb-e mohemm va madrak-e ahl-sonnat. [Tehran]: Daftar-e Enteshārāt-e Eslāmī, 1379/[2001].
- Peters, Rudolph. "Idjithād and Taqlād in 18th and 19th Century Islam." Die Welt des Islams 20, no. 3-4 (1980): 131-146.
- Pfeiffer, Rudolph. History of Classical Scholarship: from the Beginnings to the End of the Hellenistic Age. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1968.
- Prior, Joseph G. The Historical Critical Method in Catholic Exegesis. Rome: Pontificia Università Gregoriana, 1999.
- Al-Qādī, Wadād. "Al-Madrasa fī al-Maghrib fī daw³ Kitāb al-mī'ād li'l-Wansharī." In al-Fikr al-tarbawī al-islāmī. Beirut: Dār al-Maqāşid al-Islāmiyya, 1401/1981.
- Al-Qanūbī, Saʿīd b. Mabrūk. Al-Sayf al-hādd fī al-radd 'alā man akhadha bi-hadīth al-āhād fī masā'il al-i'tiqād. 3rd edition. Oman: n.p., 1418/[1997-8]).
- Al-Qāsimī, Muḥammad Jamāl al-Dīn. Ḥayāt al-Bukhārī. Ed. Maḥmūd al-Arnā'ūṭ. Beirut: Dār al-Nafā'is, 1412/1996.
- Quine, Willard Van Orman. Ontological Relativity and Other Essays. New York: Columbia University Press, 1969.
 - -----. Word & Object. Cambridge, Massachusetts: MIT Press, 1980.
- Quiring-Zoche, Rosemarie. "How al-Buhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ was edited in the middle ages: ʿAlī al-Yūnīnī and his Rumūz." Bulletin d'Études Orientales 50 (1998): 191–222.
- Rapoport, Yossef. Marriage, Money and Divorce in Medieval Islamic Society. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 2005.
- Rice, Eugene F. and Anthony Grafton. The Foundations of Early Modern Europe, 1460–1559. 2nd ed. New York: W.W. Norton & Co, 1994.
- Richards, D.S., ed. Islamic Civilization 950-1150. Oxford: Cassirer, 1973.
- Ridā, 'Abd al-Hādī. "Amālī Nizām al-Mulk al-wazīr al-saljūqī fī al-hadīth." Ma'had al-Makhtūtāt al-'Arabiyya 5, no. 2 (1959): 349–378.
- Robson, James, trans. An Introduction to the Science of Tradition. London: Luzac and Co., 1953.
- ——. "The Transmission of Muslim's Şaḥīḥ." Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (1949): 46–61.
- Rubin, Uri. The Eye of the Beholder: The Life of Muhammad as Viewed by the Early Muslims. Princeton: Darwin Press, 1995.
- Saad, Elias N. Social History of Timbuktu: the Role of Muslim Scholars and Notables 1400–1900. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press, 1983.
- De. Somogyi, J. "Adh-Dhahabi's record of the destruction of Damascus by the Mongols in 699–700/1299–1301." Goldziher Memorial 1 (1948): 353–86.
- Spectorsky, Susan. "Hadīth in the Responses of Ishāq b. Rāhwayh." Islamic Law and Society 8, no. 3 (2001): 407–431.
- Speight, R. Marston. "Some Formal Characteristics of the Musnad Type of Hadīt Collections." Arabica 49, no. 2 (2003): 376–382.

SELECT BIBLIOGRAPHY

Sezgin, Fuat. Buhârî'nin Kaynakları. İstanbul: İbrahim Horoz Basimevi, 1956.

- Siddiqi, Muhammad Zubayr. Hadith Literature. Ed. Abdal Hakim Murad. Cambridge: Islamic Text Society, 1993.
- Smith, Jonathan Z. To Take Place: Toward Theory in Ritual. Chicago: University of Chicago Press, 1987.
- Spellberg, Denise. "Nizām al-Mulk's Manipulation of Tradition." Muslim World 78, no. 2 (1988): 111–117
- Stern, S.M. "The early Ismā'īlī missionaries in North-West Persia and in Khurāsān and Transoxania." Bulletin of the School of Oriental and African Studies 23 (1960): 56–90.
- Stewart, Devin. Islamic Legal Orthodoxy: Twelver Shiite Responses to the Sunni Legal System. Salt Lake City: University of Utah Press, 1998.
- Taylor, Christopher S. In the Vicinity of the Righteous: Ziyara and the Veneration of Muslim Saints in Late Medieval Egypt. Leiden: Brill, 1999.
- Tokatly, Vardit. "The A'lām al-hadīth of al-Khattābī: a commentary on al-Bukhārī's Sahīh or a polemical treatise?" Studia Islamica 92 (2001):53–91.
- Le Tourneau, Roger. "Le Maroc sous le règne de Sidi Mohammad b. Abd Allah (1757–1790)." Revue de l'Occident Musalman 1 (1966) : 8–133.
- Traboulsi, Samer. "An Early Refutation of Muhammad Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb's Reformist Views." Die Welt des Islams 42, no. 3 (2002): 373–415.
- Trimingham, J. Spencer. The Sufi Orders in Islam. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1998.
- Tsafrir, Nurit. The History of an Islamic School of Law: The Early Spread of Hanafism. Cambridge, Mass.: Harvard University Press, 2004.
- Voll, John O. "Abdallah b. Salim al-Basri and 18th Century Hadith Scholarship." Die Welt des Islams 43, no. 3 (2002): 356–372.
- —. "Foundations for Renewal and Reform: Islamic movements in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries." In The Oxford History of Islam, ed. John Esposito, 509–47. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 1999.
- ——. "Hadith Scholars and Tariqahs: an Ulama Group in the 18th century Haramayn and their Impact in the Islamic World." Journal of African and Asian Studies 15 (1980): 264–73.
- Weisman, Itzchak. "Between Şūfī Reformism and Modernist Rationalism: a Reappraisal of the Origins of the Salafiyya from the Damascene Angle." Die Welt des Islams 41, no. 2 (2001): 206–236.
- Weiss, Bernard G. The Search for God's Law: Islamic Jurisprudence in the Writings of Sayf al-Dīn al-Āmidī. Salt Lake City: University of Utah Press, 1992. —, ed. Studies in Islamic Legal Theory. Leiden: Brill, 2002.
- White, Hayden V. Metahistory: The Historical Imagination in Nineteenth-Century Europe. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University Press, 1973.
- Wilson, N.L. "Substance without Substrata." Review of Metaphysics 12, no. 4 (1959): 521–539.
- Al-Zuhaylī, Wahba. Uşūl al-fiqh al-islāmī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr al-Mu'āşir, 1406/ 1986.

Primary Sources: General

- Al-'Abbādī, Abū 'Āşim Muḥammad b. Aḥmad (d. 458/1066). Kitāb Tabaqāt al-Fuqahā' aš-Šāfi'iyya. Ed. Gösta Vitestam. Leiden: Brill, 1964.
- 'Abd al-Wahhāb, Abū Muḥammad b. 'Alī al-Mālikī (d. 422/1031–2). Al-Ishrāf 'alā nukat masā'il al-khilāf. Ed. al-Habīb b. Tāhir. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999.
- ——. Kītāb al-talqīn fī al-fiqh al-mālikī. Ed. Muḥammad Thālith Saʿīd al-Ghānī. 2 vols. Mecca: al-Maktaba al-Tijāriyya, 1415/1995.

Abū 'Awāna, Ya'qūb b. Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 312/924–5). Musnad Abī 'Awāna. 5 vols. in 2 with 3 missing. Hyderabad: Maṭba'at Jam'iyyat Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-'Uthmāniyya, 1362/[1942]–1385/1965.

—. Al-Qism al-mafqūd min Musnad Abī 'Awāna. Ed. Ayman 'Ārif al-Dimashqī. Cairo: Maktabat al-Sunna, 1995.

Al-Alā'ī, Şalāḥ al-Dīn Khalīl b. Kaykaldī (d. 761/1359). Jāmiʿ al-taḥṣīl fī aḥkām al-marāsīl. Ed. Ḥamdī ʿAbd al-Majīd al-Salafī. Baghdad: al-Dār al-ʿArabiyya li'l-Ṭibāʿa, 1398/1978.

—. Al-Naqd al-şahīh li-mā u'turida 'alayhi min ahādīth al-Maşābīh. Ed. Mahmūd Sa'īd Mamdūh. Beirut: Dār al-Imām Muslim, 1410/1990.

- Al-Albānī, Muḥammad Nāşir al-Dīn (d. 1999). Da'īf al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb. 2 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1421/2000.
 - —. Fatāwā al-shaykh al-Albānī. Ed. 'Akāsha 'Abd al-Mannān al-Ṭayyibī. Cairo: Maktabat al-Turāth al-Islāmī, 1414/1994.
 - —. "Hadīth al-Bukhārī, recorded 5/1990." Lecture from www.islamway.com/?iw_s=Scholar&iw_a=lessons&scholar_id=47, last accessed 5/28/2004.
 - —. Mukhtaşar Şahīh al-Bukhārī. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1394–1399/[1973– 1978].

—. Mukhtaşar Şahīh al-Bukhārī. 4 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 1422/2002.

- and Muhammad Zahīr al-Shāwīsh, eds. Musājala ilmiyya bayn al-imāmayn al-jalīlayn al-Izz b. Abd al-Salām wa Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ. Damascus: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, [1960].
- —. "Question and Answer with Muhammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī." Two-part lecture from www.islamway.com/?iw_s=Scholar&iw_a=lessons&scholar_id=47, last accessed 4/15/2002.

-. Sahīh al-Targhīb wa al-tarhīb. 3 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 2000.

- —. "Silsilat as'ilat Abī Ishāq al-Huwaynī li'l-shaykh Muhammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī." Lecture from www.islamway.com/?iw_s=Scholar&iw_a=lessons&scholar_id=47, last accessed 2/13/2002.
- —. Silsilat al-aḥādīth al-da'īfa wa al-mawdū'a. 13 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1422/2002.
- —. Silsilat al-ahādīth al-sahīha. 6 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 1416/1996.

----. "Tarjamat al-shaykh al-Albānī." Seven-part autobiographical lecture from www.islamway.com/?iw_s=Scholar&iw_a=lessons&scholar_id=47, last accessed 6/3/2004.

- Anon. Hudūd al-Alam: the Regions of the World. Ed. and trans. V. Minorsky. London: Oxford University Press, 1937.
- Al-Anşārī, Zakariyyā b. Muḥammad (d. 926/1520). Fatḥ al-bāqī bi-sharḥ Alfiyyat al-Irāqī. Ed. Thanā'allāh al-Zāḥidī. Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 1420/1999.
- Al-Ash'arī, Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī b. Ismā'īl (d. 324/935–6). Maqālāt al-islāmiyyīn. Ed. Helmut Ritter. Istanbul: Dar al-Funūn, [1928].
- Al-'Atțār, Rashīd al-Dīn Yaḥyā b. 'Alī al-Misrī (d. 662/1264). Kitāb Ghurar al-fawā'id almajmū'a fi bayān mā waqa'a fi Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim min al-aḥādīth al-maqtū'a. Ed. Ṣalāḥ al-Amīn Ballāl. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 1421/2000.
- Al-'Aynī, Badr al-Dīn Maḥmūd b. Aḥmad (d. 855/1451). 'Umdat al-qārī bi-sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī. Ed. Idārat al-Ţibā'a al-Munīriyya et al. 25 vols in 12. Beirut: Muḥammad Amīn Damaj, [1970].
- Al-Azīmābādī, Abū Ţayyib Shams al-Ḥaqq (d. 1911). Raf^c al-iltibās 'an ba'd al-nās. Ed. Muhammad 'Azīz al-Salafī. Cairo: Dār al-Ṣahwa, 1405/1985.
- Al-Baghawī, Abū Muhammad al-Husayn b. Masʿūd (d. 516/1122). Maṣābīḥ al-sunna. 2 vols in 1. Beirut: Dār al-Qalam, [197–].
- —. Sharh al-sunna. Ed. Shuʿayb Arnāʾūț and Zuhayr al-Shāwīsh. 14 vols. [Beirut]: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1390/1971.
- Al-Barbahārī, Abū Muḥammad al-Ḥasan b. 'Alī (d. 329/940-1). Sharh al-sunna.

Ed. Khālid b. Qāsim al-Raddādī. Beirut: Dār al-Ṣumayʿī; Riyadh: Dār al-Salaf, 1421/2000.

- Al-Bājī, Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Qurtubī (d. 474/1081). Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf al-Bājī wa kitābuhu al-Ta'dīl wa al-tajrīh li-man kharraja lahu al-Bukhārī fi al-Jāmi' al-şaḥīh. Ed. Abū Lubāba Husayn. 3 vols. Riyadh: Dar al-Liwā', 1406/1986.
 - —. Ihkām al-fuṣūl fī ahkām al-uṣūl. Ed. Abdel Magid Turki. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1407/1986.
- . Al-Ishāra fī uṣūl al-fiqh. Ed. ʿĀdil Aḥmad ʿAbd al-Mawjūd and ʿAlī Muḥammad ʿAwad. Riyadh: Maktabat Nizār Muṣṭafā al-Bāz, 1418/1997.
- —. Kitāb al-hudūd. Ed. Nazīh Hammad. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Zu'bī, 1392/1973.
- —. Al-Muntaqā sharh Muwatta' Imām dār al-hijra sayyidinā Mālik b. Anas. 7 vols. in 4. [Cairo]: Dār al-Fikr al-'Arabī, [1982].
- Al-Balkhī, Abū al-Qāsim 'Abdallāh al-Kaʿbī (d. 319/931). Qubūl al-akhbār wa maˈrifat al-rijāl. Ed. Abū 'Amr al-Ḥusaynī b. Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1421/2000.
- Al-Bannānī, Fath Allāh b. Abī Bakr. Rafd al-qārī bi-muqaddimat Iftitāh Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī. Rabat: al-Maţbaʿa al-Maghribiyya al-Ahliyya, 1347/[1928–9].
- Al-Bāqillānī, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. al-Tayyib (d. 403/1013). Al-Tamhīd. Ed. Maḥmūd Muḥammad al-Khadīrī and Muḥammad 'Abd al-Hādī Rīdah. Cairo: Dār al-Fikr al-'Arabī, 1947.
- ——. Al-Taqrīb wa al-irshād al-ṣaghīr. Ed. 'Abd al-Hamīd b. 'Alī Abū Zayd. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1413/1993.
- Al-Barqānī, Abū Bakr Ahmad b. Muhammad (d. 425/1033-4). Al-Juz' al-awwal min al-takhrīj li-şahīh al-hadīth 'an al-shuyūkh al-thiqāt 'alā shart kitāb Muhammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī wa kitāb Muslim b. al-Hajjāj al-Qushayrī aw ahadihimā. Ed. Abū 'Abd al-Bārī Ridā Būshāma al-Jazā'irī. Riyadh: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999.
- Su'ālāt al-Barqānī wa ajwibat al-Dāraqutnī 'anhā. MS Ahmet III 624. Topkapı Sarayı Library, Istanbul. Fols. 104a–119a.
- Al-Başırī, Abū al-Husayn Muḥammad b. 'Alī (d. 436/1044). Kitāb al-mu'tamad fi uşūl al-fiqh. Ed. Muhamed Hamidullah et als. 2 vols. Damascus: Institut Français de Damas, 1964.
- Al-Bațalyawsī, Abū Muḥammad ʿAbdallāh b. al-Sayyid (d. 521/1127). Kītāb al-tanbīh ʿalā al-asbāb allatī awjabat al-ikhtilāf bayn al-muslimīn. Ed. Ahmad Hasan Kahīl and Hamza ʿAbdallāh al-Nashartī. Cairo: Dār al-Iʿtiṣām, 1398/1978.
- Al-Bayhaqī, Abū Bakr Ahmad b. al-Husayn (d. 458/1066). Ithbāt 'adhāb al-qabr. Ed. Sharaf Mahmūd al-Quḍāt. Amman: Dār al-Furqān, 1403/1983.
 - . Kītāb al-asmā' wa al-ṣifāt. Ed. 'Abdallāh b. Muḥammad al-Ḥāshidī. 2 vols. Jedda: Maktabat al-Sawādī, 1413/1993.
- —. Al-Khilāfiyyāt. Ed. Mashhūr b. Hasan Āl-Salmān. Riyadh: Dār al-Şumay'ī, 1415/ 1995.
- ——. Al-Madkhal ilā al-Sunan al-kubrā. Ed. Muḥammad Diyā' al-Raḥmān al-A'ẓamī. 2nd ed. 2 vols. Riyadh: Adwā' al-Salaf, 1420/[1999–2000].
- —. Ma'rifat al-sunan wa al-āthār. Ed. Sayyid Kusrawī Ḥasan. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1412/1991.
- ——. Al-Sunan al-kubrā. Ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aṭā. 11 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1420/1999.
- Al-Buhūtī, Mansūr b. Yūnus (d. 1051/1641). Al-Rawd al-murbi'. Ed. Bashīr Muḥammad 'Awn. Damascus: Maktabat Dār al-Bayān, 1420/1999.
- Al-Bukhārī, 'Alā' al-Dīn 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Aḥmad (d. 730/1329–30). Kashf al-asrār 'an uşūl Fakhr al-Islām al-Bazdawī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-'Arabī, 1394/1974.
- Al-Bukhārī, Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl (d. 256/870). Khalq af'āl al-'ibād. Ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Umayra. Riyadh: Dār al-Ma'ārif al-Su'ūdiyya, 1398/1978.
- ——. Kītāb raf^c al-yadayn fī al-şalāt. Ed. Badī^c al-Dīn al-Rāshidī. Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 1416/1996.

—. Sahīh al-Bukhārī. 3 vols. Cairo: Thesaurus Islamicus Foundation, 2000.

- Al-Dāraqutnī, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. 'Umar (d. 385/995). Dhikr aqwām akhrajahum al-Bukhārī wa Muslim b. al-Hajīgī fi kitābayhimā wa akhrajahum Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān Aḥmad b. Shu'ayb al-Nasā i fi Kitāb al-du'afā'. MS Ahmet III 624. Topkapı Sarayı Library, Istanbul. Fols. 253a–4b.
 - —. Dhikr asmā' al-ṣaḥāba alladhīna ṣaḥḥat al-riwāya 'anhum wa laysū fī al-Ṣaḥīḥayn. MS 7159. Maktabat al-Asad, Damascus, 197b–198b.
 - —. Dhikr asmā' al-tābi'īn. Ed. Burhān al-Danawī and Kamāl Yūsuf al-Hūt. 2 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Kutub al-Thaqāfiyya, 1985.
 - —. Al-Ilal al-wārida fi al-ahādīth al-nabawīyya. Maḥfūẓ al-Raḥmān al-Salafī. 11 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Ṭayba, 1422/2001.
 - —. Kūtāb al-duʿafāʾ wa al-matrūkīn. Ed. Ṣubḥī al-Badrī al-Sāmarrāʾī. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Risāla, 1404/1984.
 - —. Kītāb fihi arbaʿūn ḥadīth^{en} min musnad Burayda b. ʿAbdallāh b. Abī Burda ʿan jiddihi ʿan Abī Mūsā al-Ashʿarī. Ed. Muḥammad b. ʿAbd al-Karīm b. ʿUbayd. Mecca: Maʿhad al-Buḥūth al-ʿIlmiyya, 1420/[2000].
 - —. Kītāb al-ilzāmāt wa al-tatabbu'. Ed. Muqbil b. Hādī al-Wādi'ī. Medina: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, [1978].
 - —. Sunan al-Dāraquṭnī. Ed. 'Abdallāh Hāshim al-Madanī. 4 vols. in 2. Cairo: Dār al-Maḥāsin li'l-Ţibā'a, 1386/1966.
- Al-Dhahabī, Shams al-Dīn Muḥammad b. Aḥmad (d. 748/1348). Juz' fihi tarjamat al-Bukhārī. Ed. Hāshim Ibrāhīm b. Manşūr al-Hāshimī al-Amīr. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Rayyān, 1423/2002.
 - Juz'ān 'an al-imām Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj. Ed. Abū Yaḥyā 'Abdallāh al-Kandarī and Abū Aḥmad Hādī al-Murrī. Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1416/1996.
 - —. Maʿrifat al-ruvāt al-mutakallam fihim bimā lā yūjibu al-radd. Ed. Abū ʿAbdallāh Ibrāhīm Saʿīdāy. Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, 1406/1986.
 - —. Mīzān al-i'tidāl fī naqd al-rijāl. Ed. 'Alī Muḥammad al-Bajāwī. 4 vols. [Beirut]: Dār Iḥyā' al-Kutub al-'Arabiyya, n.d. Reprint of the Cairo edition published by 'Īsā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1963–4. Citations are to the Beirut edition.
 - —. Al-Mukhtaṣar al-muḥtāj ilayhi min Tārīkh Ibn al-Dubaythī. Ed. Muṣṭafā ʿAbd al-Qādir ʿAṭā. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1417/1997.
 - —. Al-Mūqiza fī 'ilm mustalaḥ al-ḥadīth. Ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda. Aleppo: Maktab al-Maṭbū'āt al-Islāmīya, 1405/[1984–1985].
 - —. Siyar a'lām al-nubalā'. Ed. Shu'ayb Arnā'ūţ et al. 3rd ed. 25 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1412–1419/1992–1998.
 - —. Tadhkirat al-huffāz. Ed. Zakariyyā 'Umayrāt. 4 vols in 2. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1419/1998.
 - —. Tārīkh al-Islām wa wafāyāt al-mashāhīr wa al-aʿlām. Ed. Bashshār ʿAwwād Maʿrūf, Shuʿayb Arnāʾūț and Ṣāliḥ Mahdī ʿAbbās. 53 vols. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Risāla, 1409/1988–1424/2004.
- Al-Dihlawī, 'Abd al-Ḥaqq b. Sayf al-Dīn (d. 1052/1642). Muqaddima fi uşūl al-ḥadīth. Ed. Sulaymān al-Ḥusaynī al-Nadawī. Laknow: Dār al-'Ulūm, [1984].
- Al-Dihlawī, Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz (d. 1239/1824). Bustān al-muhaddithīn fī bayān kutub alhadīth wa ashābihā al-'uzz al-mayāmīn. Ed. and trans. Muḥammad Akram al-Nadwī. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 2002.
- Al-Dihlawī, Shāh Waliyyallāh (d. 1762). The Conclusive Argument from God. Trans. Marcia K. Hermansen. Islamabad: Islamic Research Institute, 2003.
- —. Hujjat Allāh al-bāligha. 2 vols in 1. Cairo: Dār al-Turāth, [1978].
- -----. Risālat sharh tarājim abwāb Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī. Beirut: Dār al-Hadīth, 1407/1986.
- Al-Dimashqī, Abū Masʿūd Ibrāhīm b. Muḥammad (d. 401/1010-1). Atrāf al-Bukhārī wa Muslim, MS 1164. Maktabat al-Asad, Damascus.
- ——. Kītāb al-ajwiba. Ed. Ibrāhīm b. 'Alī Āl Kulayb. Riyadh: Dār al-Warrāq, 1419/ 1998.
- Al-Fārisī, Abū al-Hasan 'Abd al-Ghāfir (d. 529/1134-5), selections made by Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm al-Ṣarīfīnī (d. 641AH). Tārīkh Naysābūr al-muntakhab min al-Siyāq. Ed. Muḥammad Kāzim al-Hamūdī. Qom: Jamā'at al-Mudarrisīn, 1403/1983.

- Al-Ghaznawī, Ahmad b. Muhammad (d. 593/1196-7). Uşūl fiqh al-Ghazawī. Ed. Muhammad Tuʿma al-Quḍāt. Amman: author, 1421/2001.
- Al-Ghazālī, Abū Hāmid Muhammad (d. 505/1111). Al-Mankhūl min ta līqāt al-uşūl. Ed. Muhammad Hasan Hītū. [Damascus?]: n.p., [1970].
 - -----. Al-Mustașfā. Ed. Muhammad Yūsuf Najm. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Ṣādir, 1995.
- Al-Ghazālī, Muḥammad (d. 1996). Al-Sunna al-nabawiyya bayn ahl al-fiqh wa ahl al-hadīth. Cairo: Dār al-Shurūq, 1989.
- ——. Turāthunā al-fikrī. 5th edition. Cairo: Dār al-Shurūq, 1424/2003.
- Al-Ghumārī, Abū al-Fadl 'Abdallāh b. al-Şiddīq (d. 1993). Al-Khawāţir al-dīniyya. 2 vols. in 1. Cairo: Maktabat al-Qāhira, 1425/2004.
- Al-Ghumārī, Abū al-Fayd Ahmad b. al-Şiddīq (d. 1960). Al-Mughīr 'alā ahādīth al-Jāmi' al-şaghīr. Beirut: Dār al-Rā'id al-'Arabī, 1402/1982.
- Al-Hamawī, Yāqūt b. 'Abdallāh (d. 626/1229). Mu'jam al-buldān. 6 vols. Tehran: Maktabat al-Asadī, 1965.
- Al-Hanafi, Muhammad b. 'Alā' Ibn Abī al-'Izz (d. 792/1390). Sharh al-'Aqīda al-Tahāwiyya. Ed. Muhammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī. Amman: al-Dār al-Islāmī, 1419/1998.
- Al-Harawī, Abū al-Fayd Muhammad b. Muhammad al-Fārisī al-Hanafī (d. 837/1434). Jawāhir al-uşūl fi ʿilm ḥadūth al-Rasūl. Ed. Abū al-Maʿālī Aṭhar al-Mubārakfūrī. Medina: al-Maktaba al-ʿIlmiyya, [1973?].
- Al-Humaydī, Abū 'Abdallāh Muhammad b. Futūh (d. 488/1095). Jadhwat al-muqtabis fi dhikr wulāt al-Andalus wa asmā' ruwāt al-hadīth wa ahl al-fiqh wa al-adab. Ed. Muhammad b. Tāyit al-Ţanjī. Cairo: Maktabat al-Nashr al-Thaqāfī al-Islāmī, 1371/[1952].
- ——. Al-Jam' bayn al-Ṣaḥīḥayn. Ed. 'Alī Ḥusayn al-Bawwāb. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1419/1998.
- Al-Husaynī, Abū al-Mahāsin Muhammad b. 'Alī (d. 756/1355). Dhayl Tadhkirat al-huffāz. Ed. Zakariyyā 'Umayrāt. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1419/1998.
- Ibn 'Abd al-Barr Yūsuf Abū 'Umar (d. 463/1070). Jāmi' bayān al-'ilm wa fadlihi. Ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān Muḥammad 'Uthmān. 2 vols. Medina: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, [1968].
- ——. Al-Tamhīd li-mā fī al-Muwațța' min al-ma'ānī wa al-asānīd. Ed. Muṣṭafā b. Aḥmad al-'Alawī and Muḥammad 'Abd al-Kabīr al-Bakrī. 2nd ed. 26 vols. [Rabat]: Wizārat 'Umūm al-Awqāf wa al-Shu'ūn al-Islāmiyya, 1402/1982, 1st edition 1387/1967.
- Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb, Muḥammad (d. 1792). Mu'allafāt al-shaykh al-imām Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Wahhāb. Ed. Ṣāliḥ b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān al-Aṭram and Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Razzāq al-Duwaysh. Vol. 3. Riyadh: Jāmiʿat Muḥammad b. Suʿūd al-Islāmiyya, 1398/[1977].
- Ibn Abī Hātim 'Abd al-Rahmān al-Rāzī (d. 327/938). Bayān khata' Muhammad b. Ismā īl al-Bukhārī. Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-ʿUthmāniyya, 1961.
- ——. 'Ilal al-ḥadīth. 2 vols. Baghdad: Maktabat al-Muthannā, [1971].
- ——. Al-Jarh wa al-ta'dīl. 6 vols. Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif, 1371/1952–1373/ 1953.
- Ibn Abī al-Wafā', Abū Muḥammad Muḥyī al-Dīn 'Abd al-Qādir (d. 775/1374). Al-Hāwī fī bayān āthār al-Ṭaḥāwī. Ed. Yūsuf Aḥmad. 3 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Imiyya, 1419/1999.
- —. Al-Jawāhir al-mudiyya fi tabaqāt al-hanafiyya. Ed. 'Abd al-Fattāh Muhammad al-Halw. 5 vols. Gīza: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1398–1408/1978–1988.
- Ibn Abī Ya'lā, Abū al-Husayn Muhammad (d. 525/1131). Țabaqāt al-hanābila. Ed. Abū Hāzim Usāma b. Hasan and Abū al-Zahrā' Hāzim 'Alī Bahjat. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1997.
- Ibn 'Adī, Abū Ahmad 'Abdallāh al-Jurjānī (d. 365/975-6). Asāmī man rawā 'anhum Muhammad b. Ismā il al-Bukhārī min mashāyikhihi alladhīna dhakarahum fi Jāmi ihi al-ṣaḥīh. Ed. Badr b. Muḥammad al-ʿAmmāsh. Medina: Dār al-Bukhārī, 1415/[1994–5]. —. Al-Kāmil fi duʿafāʾ al-rijāl. 7 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1405/1985.

Ibn 'Ammār, Abū al-Fadl al-Shahīd (d. 317/929–30). 'Ilal al-ahādāth fī kitāb al-ṣahāh li-Muslim b. al-Ḥajjāj. Ed. 'Alī b. Ḥasan al-Ḥalabī. Riyadh: Dār al-Hijra, 1412/ 1991.

—. Ilal al-aḥādīth fī kitāb Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim. 593 Catalogue of Arabic Manuscripts (Yahuda Section) in the Garrett Collection, Princeton University Library.

- Ibn al-'Arabī, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. 'Abdallāh (d. 543/1148). Kitāb al-qabas fī sharḥ Muwatta' Mālik b. Anas. Ed. Muḥammad 'Abdallāh Walad-Karīm. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1992.
- —. Ṣaḥīḥ al-Tirmidhī bi-sharḥ al-imām Ibn al-ʿArabī al-Mālikī. 13 vols. in 5. Cairo: Maţbaʿat al-Mişriyya bi'l-Azhar, [1350/1931].
- Ibn 'Asākir, 'Alī b. al-Ḥasan (d. 571/1176). Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq. Ed. Muḥibb al-Dīn Abū Saʿīd 'Umar al-'Amrawī. 80 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1995–present.
- Ibn al-Athīr, Majd al-Dīn al-Mubārak b. Muḥammad (d. 606/1210). Jāmi^c al-uṣūl fī aḥādīth al-rasūl. Ed. 'Abd al-Qādir al-Arnā²ūț. 15 vols. [n.p.]: Dār al-Malāḥ 1389/1969.
- Ibn Barhān, Ahmad b. 'Alī al-Baghdādī (d. 518/1124). Al-Wuşūl ilā al-uşūl. Ed. 'Abd al-Ḥamīd 'Alī Abū Zayd. 2 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1404/1984.
- Ibn Batţāl, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Khalaf al-Qurţubī (d. 449/1057). Sharh Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī. Ed. Abū Tamīm Yāsir b. Ibrāhīm. 10 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 1420/2000.
- Ibn Daqīq al-ʿĪd, Muḥammad b. ʿAlī (d. 702/1302). Al-Iqtirāḥ fī bayān al-isțilāḥ. Ed. Qaḥtān ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Dūrī. [Baghdad]: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa al-Shu'ūn al-Dīniyya, 1982.
- Ibn al-Farrā' Abū Ya'lā Muhammad b. al-Husayn al-Hanbalī (d. 458/1066). Kītāb almu'tamad fī uşūl al-dīn. Ed. Wadī' Zaydān Haddād. Beirut: Dār al-Mashriq, 1974.
- ——. Al-Jāmi' al-şaghīr. Ed. Nāşir b. Su'ūd al-Salāma. Riyadh: Dār Aţlas, 1421/ 2000.
- ——. Al-Masā'il al-'aqdiyya min kitāb al-riwāyatayn wa al-wajhayn. Ed. Su'ūd b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Khalaf. Riyadh: Adwā' al-Salaf, 1419/1999.
- —. Al-Udda fi uşūl al-fiqh. Ed. Aḥmad b. ʿAlī Sīr al-Mubārak. 3 vols. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1400/1980.
- Ibn Funduq, 'Alī Abū al-Ḥasan Bayhaqī (d. 565/1169–70). Tārīkh-e Bayhaq. Ed. Ahmad Bahmanyār. Tehran: Khāp-khāne-ye Kānūn, 1317/[1938].
- Ibn Fūrak, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Ḥasan (d. 406/1015). Kitāb al-hudūd fi al-uṣūl. Ed. Mohamed al-Sulaymani. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1999.
- -----. Muğarrad maqālāt al-Aš'arī: exposé de la doctrine d'al-Aš'arī. Ed. Daniel Gimaret. Beirut: Dar al-Machreq Sarl, 1987.
- Ibn Hajar, Shihāb al-Dīn Abū al-Fadl Ahmad b. 'Alī al-'Asqalānī (d. 852/1449). Al-Durar al-kāmina fī a'yān al-mi'a al-thāmina. Ed. 'Abd al-Wārith Muḥammad 'Alī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1418/1997.
 - . Fatḥ al-bārī sharḥ Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī. Ed. ʿAbd al-ʿAzīz b. ʿAbdallāh b. Bāz and Muḥammad Fuʾād ʿAbd al-Bāqī. 16 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1418/ 1997.
 - —. Hady al-sārī. Ed. Muḥammad Fu'ād ʿAbd al-Bāqī and ʿAbdallāh b. ʿUbaydallāh b. Bāz. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1418/1997.
 - —. Intiqād al-i'tirād fī al-radd 'alā al-'Aynī fī sharh al-Bukhārī. Ed. Hamdī b. 'Abd al-Majīd al-Salafī and Subhī b. Jāsim al-Sāmarrā'ī. 2 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Rushd, 1413/1993.
 - —. Lisān al-mīzān. 6 vols. Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-'Uthmāniyya, 1330/ [1912].

—. Al-Wuqūf ʿalā mā fī Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim min al-mawqūf. Ed. ʿAbdallāh al-Laythī al-Anṣārī. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Kutub al-Thaqāfiyya, 1406/1986.

- —. Al-Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Ṣalāḥ. Ed. Masʿūd 'Abd al-Ḥamīd al-'Adanī and Muḥammad Fāris. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1414/1994.
- —. Nuzhat al-nazar fî tawdīḥ Nukhbat al-fikar fî muṣṭalaḥ ahl al-athar. Ed. 'Abd al-Samī' al-Anīs and 'Iṣām Fāris al-Ḥarstānī. Amman: Dār 'Iṣām, 1419/1999.
- —. Al-Qawl al-musaddad fi al-dhabb 'an al-Musnad li'l-imām Aḥmad. Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-'Uthmāniyya, 1386/1967.
- —. Tahdhīb al-tahdhīb. Ed. Muṣṭafā ʿAbd al-Qādir ʿAṭā. 12 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1415/1994.
- Ibn Hajar al-Haythamī, Ahmad b. Muhammad (d. 974/1567). Al-Fatāwā al-hadīthiyya. 2nd ed. Cairo: Maţbaʿat Muştafā al-Bābī al-Halabī, 1390/1970.
- Ibn Hanbal, Abū 'Abdallāh Ahmad (d. 241/855). Kītāb al-'ilal wa ma'rifat al-rijāl. Ed. Țal'at Qūj Yikīt and Ismā'īl Ūghlī. 2 vols. Istanbul: al-Maktaba al-Islāmiyya, 1987.
- Ibn Hazm, Abū Muhammad 'Alī b. Ahmad (d. 456/1064). Kitāb al-fisal fī al-milal wa al-ahwā' wa al-nihal. 5 vols. in 2. Baghdad: Maktabat al-Muthannā, [1964].
- —. [Two Hadīths from the Ṣaḥīḥayn—One from al-Bukhārī and One from Muslim—that Ibn Hazm Considers Forgeries]. MS Ahmet III 624. Topkapı Sarayı Library, Istanbul. Fols. 28b–29a.
- Ibn Hibbān al-Bustī, Muhammad Abū Hātim (d. 354/965). Kitāb al-majrūhīn min al-muhaddithīn al-du afā' wa al-matrūkīn. Ed. Mahmūd Ibrāhīm Zāyid. Aleppo, Dār al-Wa'ī, 1396/1976.
 - —. Ṣaḥīḥ Ibn Hibbān bi-tartīb al-Amīr 'Alā' al-Dīn al-Fārisī. Ed. Aḥmad Muḥammad Shākir. Cairo: Dār al-Maʿārif, [1952].
- Ibn al-'Imād, 'Abd al-Hayy b. Ahmad (d. 1089/1679). Shadharāt al-dhahab fi akhbār man dhahab. 8 vols. in 4. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Tijārī, [1960].
- Ibn Jamā'a, Badr al-Dīn Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm (d. 733/1333). Manhal al-rāwī fi 'ulūm al-ḥadīth al-nabawī. Ed. Muḥammad al-Sayyid Nūḥ. Mansoura, Egypt: Dār al-Wafā', 1402/1981.
- Ibn al-Jārūd, Abū Muhammad 'Abdallāh b. Alī al-Naysābūrī (d. 307/919–20). Kitāb al-muntaqā min al-sunan al-musnada 'an Rasūl Allāh (s). Ed. 'Abdallāh Hāshim al-Yamānī al-Madanī. Cairo: Maţba'at al-Fajjāla al-Jadīda, 1382/1963.
- Ibn al-Jawzī, Abū al-Faraj 'Abd al-Raḥmān (d. 597/1200). Kashf al-mushkil min hadīth al-Ṣahīḥayn. Ed. 'Alī Husayn al-Bawwāb. 4 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Watan, 1997.
 - . Kītāb al-mawdūʿāt. Ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān Muḥammad 'Uthmān. 3 vols. Medina: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, 1386–88/1966–68.
- ——. Al-Muntazam fī tārīkh al-umam w'al-mulūk. Ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aţā and Muştafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aţā. 19 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1412/1992.
- Ibn Kathīr Ismā'īl b. Abī Hafş (d. 774/1373). Al-Bā'ith al-ḥathīth sharḥ Ikhtişār 'Ulūm alhadīth. Ed. Aḥmad Muḥammad Shākir. Cairo: Dār al-Turāth, 1423/2003.
- ——. Al-Bidāya wa al-Nihāya. Ed. Fu'ād Sayyid et als. 15 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1405/1985.
- Ibn Khalfūn, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl (d. 636/1238–9). Al-Mu'lim bi-shuyūkh al-Bukhārī wa Muslim. Ed. Abū 'Abd al-Raḥmān 'Ādil b. Sa'd. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1421/2000.
- Ibn Khallikān, Abū al-'Abbās Shams al-Dīn Ahmad b. Muhammad (d. 681/1282). Wafayāt al-a'yān wa anbā' abnā' al-zamān. Ed. Ihsān 'Abbās. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr/ Dār Ṣādir, [1968–72?].
- Ibn Khuzayma, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Isḥāq (d. 311/923). Ṣaḥīḥ Ibn Khuzayma. Ed. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-Aʿẓamī. 5 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, [1970?].
- Ibn al-Madīnī, 'Alī (d. 234/849). Al-Ilal. Ed. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā A'ẓamī. [n.p.]: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1392/1972.
- Ibn Manda, Abū 'Abdallāh Muhammad b. Ishāq (d. 395/1004-5). Asāmī mashāyikh al-imām al-Bukhārī. Ed. Nazar Muḥammad al-Fāryābī. [Saudi Arabia]: Maktabat al-Kawthar, 1412/1991.

- —. Shurūț al-a'imma / Risāla fi bayān faḍl al-akhbār wa sharḥ madhāhib ahl al-āthār wa ḥaqīqat al-sunan wa taṣḥīḥ al-riwāyat. Ed. ʿAbd al-Raḥmān b. ʿAbd al-Jabbār al-Farīwāʾī. Riyadh: Dār al-Muslim, 1416/1995.
- Ibn Manda, Abū Zakariyyā Yahyā (d. 511/1118). Manāqib al-shaykh Abī al-Qāsim al-Tabarānī. MS Esad Efendi 2431. Süleymaniye Library, Istanbul.
- Ibn al-Mubrid, Jamāl al-Dīn Yūsuf b. 'Abd al-Hādī al-Hanbalī (d. 909/1503-4). Al-Ikhtilāf bayn ruwāt al-Bukhārī 'an al-Firabrī wa ruwāyāt 'an Ibrāhīm b. Ma'qil al-Nasafī. Ed. Şalāh Fathī Halal. Riyadh: Dār al-Wațan, 1420/1999.
- Ibn al-Murtadā, Ahmad b. Yahyā (d. 840/1437). Tabaqāt al-mu'tazila. Ed. Suzanna Diwald-Wilzer. Beirut: Dār Maktabat al-Hayāt, [198–].
- Ibn Nadīm, Abū al-Faraj Muhammad b. Ishāq (d. after 385–8/995–8). The Fihrist. Ed. and trans. Bayard Dodge. New York: Columbia University Press, 1970. Reprint Chicago: Kazi Publications, 1998. Citations are to Kazi edition.
- Ibn al-Najjār al-Baghdādī (d. 643/1245) and Ahmad b. Aybak Ibn al-Dimyāţī. Al-Mustafād min dhayl Tārīkh Baghdād. Ed. Mustafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Aţā. 5 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1417/1997.
- Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī, Muhammad b. Abī Bakr (d. 846/1438). Majmū 'fihi rasā il li'l-hāfiz Ibn Nāşir al-Dīn al-Dīmashqī. Ed. Abū 'Abdallāh Mish'al al-Muţayrī. Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1422/2001.
- Ibn Nuqta, Abū Bakr Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Ghanī al-Baghdādī. Kītab al-Taqvīd lima'rifat ruwāt al-sunan wa al-masānīd. Ed. Kamāl Yūsuf al-Hūt. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1408/1988.
- Ibn al-Qattān, Abū al-Husayn 'Alī b. Muhammad al-Fāsī (d. 628/1231). Bayān al-wahm wa al-īhām al-wāqi 'ayn fi kitāb al-Aḥkām. Ed. al-Husayn Ayat Saʿīd. 5 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Tayba, 1418/1997.

—. Al-Iqnā^c fī masā il al-ijmā^c. Ed. Hasan b. Fawzī al-Ṣaʿīdī. 2 vols. Cairo: al-Fārūq al-Ḥadīthiyya li'l-Ṭibāʿa wa al-Nashr, 1424/2004.

Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyya, Shams al-Dīn Muhammad (d. 751/1350). Al-Manār al-munīf fi al-sahāh wa al-da ff. Ed. 'Abd al-Fattāh Abū Ghudda. Aleppo: Maktab al-Matbū'āt al-Islāmiyya, 1970.

Mukhtaşar al-şawā'iq al-mursala. 2 vols in 1. Cairo: Maţba'at al-Madanī, [197–].
 Naqd al-manqūl wa al-maḥakk al-mumayyiz bayn al-mardūd wa al-maqbūl. Ed. Hasan al-Samāhī Suwaydān. Beirut: Dār al-Qādirī, 1990.

- Ibn Qudāma, Muwaffaq al-Dīn 'Abdallāh b. Ahmad (d. 620/1223). Al-Mughnī. Ed. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Muhsin al-Turkī and 'Abd al-Fattāh Muhammad al-Halw. 15 vols. Cairo: Hajr, 1406–1410/1986–1990.
- ——. Al-Muntakhab min al-Ilal li'l-Khallāl. Ed. Ţāriq b. 'Awḍallāh b. Muḥammad. Riyadh: Dār al-Rāya, 1419/1997.
- Ibn Qutayba, 'Abdallāh b. Muslim (d. 276/889). Al-Ikhtilāf fī al-lafz wa al-radd 'alā al-jahmiyya wa al-mushabbiha. Ed. Muḥammad Zāhid al-Kawtharī. Cairo: Maṭbaʿat al-Saʿāda, 1349/[1930].
- —. Ta'wīl mukhtalif al-ḥadīth. Ed. Muḥammad Zuhrī al-Najjār. Beirut: Dār al-Jīl, 1393/1973.
- Ibn Rajab, Zayn al-Dīn 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Aḥmad al-Ḥanbalī (d. 795/1392). Bayān fadl 'ilm al-salaf 'alā 'ilm al-khalaf. Ed. Muḥammad b. Nāşir al-'Ajmī. Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1416/1995.
 - . Fath al-bārī. Ed. Mahmūd b. Sha'bān b. 'Abd al-Maqṣūd et al. 10 vols. Medina: Maktabat al-Ghurabā' al-Athariyya, 1417/1996.

----. Sharh Ilal al-Tirmidhī. Ed. Nūr al-Dīn Itr. 2 vols. [n.p.]: [n.p], 1398/1978.

Ibn Rushayd, Muhammad b. Umar (d. 721/1321). Ijädat al-nasih fi al-ta'rif bi-sanad aljāmi' al-şahih. Ed. Muhammad al-Habib Ibn al-Khawja. Tunis: al-Dār al-Tūnisiyya, [1973]. — Al-Sanan al-abyan wa al-mawrid al-amʿan fī al-muḥākama bayn al-imāmayn fī al-sanad al-muʿanʿan. Ed. Muḥammad al-Ḥabīb Ibn al-Khawja. Tunis: al-Dār al-Tūnisiyya, 1397/1977.

- Ibn al-Sa'ātī, Aḥmad b. 'Alī (d. 694/1294–5). Nihāyat al-wuşūl ilā 'ilm al-uşūl. Ed. Sa'd b. Gharīr b. Mahdī al-Sulamī. 2 vols. Mecca: Jāmi'at Umm al-Qurā, 1418– 19/1997–99.
- Ibn al-Şalāḥ, Abū 'Amr 'Uthmān b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān (d. 643/1245). Adab al-fatwā wa shurūţ al-muftī. Ed. Rif'at Fawzī 'Abd al-Muţţalib. Cairo: Maktabat al-Khānjī, 1413/1992.

-. Fatāwā Ibn al-Ṣalāh. Cairo: Maktabat Ibn Taymiyya, [1980].

—. Muqaddimat Ibn Ṣalāḥ wa Maḥāsin al-iṣṭilāḥ. Ed. 'Ā'isha 'Abd al-Raḥmān. Cairo: Dār al-Ma'ārif, [1409/1989].

—. Risāla fī wasl al-balāghāt al-arba' fī al-Muwaṭṭa'. Ed. 'Abdallāh b. al-Ṣiddīq al-Ghumārī. Casablanca: Dār al-Ṭibā'a al-Ḥadīthiyya, 1400/1979.

— . Şiyānat Şaḥīḥ Muslim min al-ikhlāl wa al-ghalat. Ed. Muwaffaq b. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Qādir. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1408/1987.

—. Ţabaqāt al-fuqahā' al-shāfi iyya. Ed. Yaḥyā al-Zayn 'Alī Najīb. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1413/1992.

- Ibn Shāhīn, Abū Hafş 'Umar b. Ahmad (d. 385/996). Sharh madhāhib ahl al-sunna wa ma'rifat sharā'i al-dīn wa al-tamassuk bi'l-sunan. Ed. 'Ādil b. Muhammad. Cairo: Mu'assasat Qurţuba, 1415/1995.
- Ibn Taymiyya, Taqī al-Dīn Ahmad (d. 728/1328). Ahādīth mawdū a. MS Fatih 2266/6. Süleymaniye Library, Istanbul. Fols. 227b-229b
- ——. Ilm al-ḥadīth. Ed. Mūsā Muḥammad ʿAlī. [Cairo]: Dār al-Kutub al-Islāmiyya, 1404/1984.

—. Majmūʿ fatāwā shaykh al-Islām Ibn Taymiyya. Ed. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Muḥammad b. Qāsim al-ʿĀṣimī. 37 vols. Riyadh: Maṭābiʿ al-Riyāḍ, 1381–86/1961–67.

—. Raf al-malām ʿan al-aʾimma al-aʾlām. Ed. Muḥyī al-Dīn al-Khaṭīb. Cairo: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, 1387/[1967].

—. Sihhat usūl madhhab ahl al-madīna. Ed. Zakariyyā 'Alī Yūsuf. Cairo: Maţba'at al-Imām, [1964].

- Ibn al-Wazīr, Muḥammad b. Ibrāhīm (d. 840/1436). Kītāb tanqīḥ al-anzār fī ma'rifat 'ulūm al-āthār. Ed. Muḥammad Ṣubḥī b. Ḥasan Ḥallāq. Beirut: Dār Ibn Ḥazm, 1420/1999.
- Ibn Yusuf, Abdur-Rahman. Fiqh al-Imam: Key Proofs in Hanafi Fiqh. 2nd ed. California: White Thread Press, 2003.
- Al-'Irāqī, Zayn al-Dīn 'Abd al-Raḥīm b. al-Husayn (d. 806/1404). Al-Tabṣira wa al-tadhkira. Ed. Muḥammad b. al-Husayn al-'Irāqī al-Husaynī. Fez: al-Maṭba'a al-Jadīda, 1353/[1935]).
- —. Taqrīb al-asānīd fī tartīb al-masānīd. Ed. 'Abd al-Mun'im Ibrāhīm. Riyadh: Maktabat Nizār Mustafā al-Bāz, 1419/1998.

—. Al-Taqyīd wa al-īdāh li-mā utliga wa ughliga min Muqaddimat Ibn al-Ṣalāh. Ed. Muḥammad ʿAbdallāh Shāhīn. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1420/1999.

Al-Işbahānī, Abū Nu'aym Ahmad b. 'Abdallāh (d. 430/1038). Hilyat al-awliyā' wa tabaqāt al-aşfiyā'. 10 vols. Cairo: Maktabat al-Khānjī and Matba'at al-Sa'āda, [1351–1357/1932–1938].

——. Kitāb al-imāma wa al-radd 'alā al-rāfiḍa. Ed. 'Alī b. Muḥammad al-Faqīhī. Medina: Maktabat al-'Ulūm wa al-Hikam, 1415/1994.

——. Al-Musnad al-mustakhraj 'alā Ṣaḥīḥ al-imām Muslim. Ed. Muhammad Hasan Ismā'īl al-Shāfi'ī. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1417/1996.

- ——. Tārīkh Işbahān / Dhikr akhbār Işbahān. Ed. Sayyid Khusrawī Ḥasan. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1410/1990.
- Al-Ishbīlī, Abū Bakr Muḥammad b. Khayr (d. 575/1179). Fahrasat mā rawāhu 'an shuyūkhihi min al-dawāwīn al-muṣannafa fī durūb al-'ilm wa anwā' al-ma'ārif. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Tijārī, 1963.

- Al-Ishbīlī, Abū Muḥammad 'Abd al-Ḥaqq b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān Ibn al-Kharrāț (d. 582/1186). Al-Jam' bayn al-Ṣaḥīḥayn. Ed. Ḥamd b. Muḥammad al-Ghammās. 4 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Muḥaqqiq, 1419/1999.
- Iyad b. Mūsā al-Qādī (d. 544/1149). Ikmāl al-Mu'lim bi-fawā'id Muslim. Ed. Yaḥyā Ismā'īl. 9 vols. Mansoura, Egypt: Dār al-Wafā', 1419/1998.
- ——. Mashāriq al-anwār 'alā sihāh al-āthār. Ed. Bal'amshī Ahmad Yagan. 2 vols. [Rabat]: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa al-Shu'ūn al-Islāmiyya, 1402/1982.
- —. Tartīb al-madārik fi tagrīb al-masālik li-ma'rifat a'lām madhhab Mālik. Ed. Ahmad Bakir Mahmud. 5 vols. in 3. Beirut: Dar Maktabat al-Hayat, 1387/1967.
- Al-Jaşşāş Abū Bakr Ahmad b. 'Alī (d. 370/981). Uşūl al-Jaşşāş al-musammā al-Fuşūl fi aluşūl. Ed. Muhammad Muhammad Tāmir. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1420/2000.
- Al-Jawzaqānī, al-Husayn b. Ibrāhīm (d. 543/1148–9). Al-Abāţīl wa al-manākīr wa alşihāh wa al-mashāhīr. Ed. Muhammad Hasan Muhammad. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1422/2001.
- Al-Jawzaqī, Abū Bakr Muhammad b. 'Abdallāh (d. 388/998). Al-Jam' bayn al-Ṣaḥīḥayn. MS 118 Awqāf. Khizāna al-ʿĀmma Library, Rabat.
- Al-Jayyānī, Abū 'Alī al-Ḥusayn b. Muḥammad al-Ghassānī (d. 498/1105). Al-Tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fī al-musnad al-şahīḥ li'l-Bukhārī. Ed. Muḥammad Abū al-Faḍll. Casablanca: Maṭba'at al-Najāḥ al-Jadīda, 1419/1998.
- ——. Al-Tanbīh 'alā al-awhām al-wāqi'a fi Şaḥīḥ al-imām Muslim. Ed. Muḥammad Abū al-Faḍl. Rabat: Wizārat al-Awqāf wa al-Shu'ūn al-Islāmiyya, 1421/2000.
- —. Al-Ta'rīf bi-shuyūkh haddatha 'anhum Muḥammad b. Ismā'īl al-Bukhārī fi kitābihi wa ahmala ansābahum wa dhikhr mā yu'rafūn bihi min qabā'ilihim wa buldānihim. Ed. Muḥammad al-Sa'īd Zaghlūl. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1418/1998.
- Al-Juwaynī, Imām al-Haramayn 'Abd al-Malik (d. 478/1085). Al- Aqīda al-nizāmiyya fī al-arkān al-islāmiyya. Ed. Muḥammad Zāhid al-Kawtharī. Cairo: Maktabat al-Azhariyya li'l-Turāth, 1412/1992.
 - —. Al-Burhān fī usūl al-fiqh. Ed. 'Abd al-'Azīm al-Dīb. 2 vols. Cairo: Dār al-Anṣār, 1400/[1980].
 - —. Al-Kāfiya fi al-jadal. Ed. Fawqiyya Ḥusayn Maḥmūd. Cairo: Maṭbaʿat ʿIsā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1399/1979.
- [Pseudo-Juwaynī: book probably forged]. Risāla fī ithbāt al-istiwā' wa al-fawqiyya wa mas'alat al-harf wa al-şawt fī al-Qu'rān al-majīd wa tanzīh al-Bārī 'an al-hasr wa al-tamthīl wa al-kayfiyya. Ed. Ahmad Mu'ādh 'Ulwān Ḥaqqī. Riyadh: Dār Ṭawīq, 1419/ 1998.
- —, and Jalāl al-Dīn Muḥammad al-Maḥallī (d. 864/1459) (annotation). Sharḥ al-Waraqāt fī ʿilm uṣūl al-fiqh. Cairo: Maktabat Muḥammad ʿAlī al-Ṣubayḥ, [1965].
- —. Textes apologétiques de Guwainī. Translated and ed. Michel Allard. Beirut: Dār al-Machreq, 1968.
- Al-Karkhī, Abū al-Hasan 'Ubaydallāh. Al-Uşūl allatī 'alayhā madār furū' al-hanafiyya. Cairo: al-Maţba'a al-Adabiyya, [n.d.].
- Al-Khalīlī, al-Khalīl b. 'Abdallāh (d. 446/1054). Al-Irshād fī ma'rifat 'ulamā' al-ḥadīth. Ed. 'Āmir Aḥmad Ḥaydar. Mecca: Dār al-Fikr, 1414/1993.
- Al-Khațīb al-Baghdādī, Abū Bakr Ahmad b. 'Alī (d. 463/1071). Al-Fawā'id al-muntakhaba al-sihāh wa al-gharā'ib. Ed. Khalīl b. Muḥammad al-'Arabī. Giza: Maktabat al-Taw'iyya al-Islāmiyya, 1415/1995.
- —. Al-Jāmiʿ li-ikhtilāf al-rāwī wa ādāb al-sāmiʿ. Ed. Maḥmūd Ṭaḥḥān. 2 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Maʿārif, 1403/1983.
- —. Al-Kīfāya fī ma'rifat usūl 'ilm al-riwāya. Ed. Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm Mustafā al-Damyātī. 2 vols. Cairo: Dār al-Hudā, 1423/2003.
- Kītāb al-faqīh wa al-mutafaqqih. Ed. ʿĀdil b. Yūsuf al-ʿAzzāzī. 2 vols. Riyadh: Dār Ibn al-Jawzī, 1417/1996.
- —. Kitāb mūdiķ awhām al-jam' wa al-tafrīq. 2 vols. Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif, 1378/1959.

—. Majmūʿat rasāʾil fīʿulūm al-ḥadīth. Ed. Ṣubḥī al-Badrī al-Sāmarrāʾī. Medina: al-Maktaba al-Salafiyya, 1389/1969.

- ——. Tārīkh Baghdād. Ed. Mustafā 'Abd al-Qādir 'Atā. 14 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1417/1997.
- Al-Khaţtābī, Hamd Abū Sulaymān (d. 388/998). A lām al-hadīth fī sharh Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī. Ed. Muhammad b. Sa'd b. Āl-Su'ūd. 4 vols. Mecca: Umm al-Qurra University, 1409/1988.

-. Ma'ālim al-sunan. 2nd ed. 4 vols. Beirut: al-Maktaba al-'Ilmiyya, 1401/1981.

- Al-Kirmānī, Muḥammad b. Yūsuf al-Baghdādī and Mişrī (d. 786/1384). Al-Kawākib al-darārī fī sharh Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī. 25 vols. Cairo: al-Maṭbaʿa al-Bahiyya al-Miṣriyya, 1358/1939.
- Al-Lālakā'ī, Abū al-Qāsim Hibatallāh b. al-Hasan (d. 418/1027–8). Sharh uşūl i'tiqād ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a, and Karāmāt awliyā' Allāh. Ed. Ahmad b. Sa'd b. Hamdān al-Ghāmidī. 5 vols. Riyadh: Dār Ţayba, 1415/1994.
- Al-Laknawī, Abū al-Hasanāt Muḥammad 'Abd al-Hayy (d. 1304/1886–7). Al-Raf^c wa al-takmīl fī al-jarḥ wa al-ta'dīl. Ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda. 8th ed. Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1425/2004.

—. Zafar al-amānī. Ed. Taqī al-Dīn al-Nadawī. United Arab Emirates: Dār al-Qalam, 1415/1995.

- Al-Makkī, Taqī al-Dīn Abū al-Fadl Muḥammad b. Muḥammad b. Fahd al-Makkī (d. 871/1466). Lahz al-lihāz bi-dhayl Țabaqāt al-huffāz. Ed. Zakariyyā 'Umayrāt. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1419/1998.
- Mamdūh, Mahmūd Saʿīd. Tanbīh al-muslim ilā taʿaddī al-Albānī ʿalā Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim. [Cairo]: [n.p.], 1408/1987.

——. Al-Ta'rīf bi-awhām man qassama al-sunan ilā sahīh was da'īf. 6 vols. Dubai: Dār al-Buhūth li'l-Dirāsāt al-Islāmiyya wa Ihyā' al-Turāth, 1421/2000.

- Al-Maqdisī, Abū al-Fadl Muhammad b. Ţāhir (d. 507/1113). Kitāb al-jam' bayn kitābay Abī Naşr al-Kalābādhī wa Abī Bakr al-Işbahānī rahimahumā Allāh fī rijāl al-Bukhārī wa Muslim. 2 vols. in 1. Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-Nizāmiyya, 1323/[1905].
- and Abū Bakr Muḥammad al-Ḥāzimī (d. 584/1188–9). Shurāţ al-a'imma al-sitta wa shurāţ al-a'imma al-khamsa. Ed. Muḥammad Zāhid al-Kawtharī. Cairo: Maktabat al-Quds, 1387/[1967].
- Al-Maqdisī, Diyā' al-Dīn Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Wāhid (d. 643/1245). Al-Ahādīth al-mukhtāra. Ed. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abdallāh Duhaysh. 13 vols. Beirut: Dār Khidr, 1421/2001.
- Al-Maqrīzī, Taqī al-Dīn Ahmad b. 'Alī (d. 845/1441). Kītāb al-muqaffā al-kabīr. Ed. Muhammad al-Ya'lāwī. 8 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1411/1991.

—. Kitābal-sulūk li-ma'rifat duwal al-mulūk. Ed. Sa'īd 'Abd al-Fattāḥ 'Āshūr. 11 vols. in 4. Cairo: Maţba'at Dār al-Kutub, 1970.

- Al-Marwazī, Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. Naşr (d. 294/906). Ikhtilāf al-fuqahā'. Ed. Muḥammad Ṭāhir Ḥakīm. Riyadh: Uşūl al-Salaf, 1420/2000.
- ------. Al-Sunna. Ed. 'Abdallāh b. Muḥammad al-Baṣīrī. Riyadh: Dār al-'Āṣima, 1422/2001.
- Al-Mayyānishī, 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Majīd (d. 581/1185). Mā lā yasu'u al-muḥaddith jahlahu. Ed. Subḥī al-Sāmarrā'ī. Baghdad: Sharikat al-Ţibā'a wa al-Nashr al-Ahliyya, 1387/1967.

—. "——." In Khamas rasā'il fī 'ulūm al-ḥadīth, ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda. Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1423/2002.

- Al-Māwardī, Abū al-Hasan ʿAlī b. Muḥammad. Al-Hāwī al-kabīr fī fiqh madhhab al-imām al-Shāfi ī. Ed. ʿAlī Muḥammad Muʿawwaḍ and ʿĀdil Aḥmad ʿAbd al-Mawjūd. 20 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1414–16/1994–96.
- Al-Mawşilī, Abū al-Hafş 'Umar b. Badr (d. 622/1225). Al-Jam' bayn al-Ṣaḥīḥayn. Ed. Ṣāliḥ Aḥmad al-Shāmī. 2 vols. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1416/1995.
- Al-Maydānī, 'Abd al-Ghanī al-Ghunaymī al-Dimashqī. Kashf al-iltibās 'ammā awrada al-imām al-Bukhārī ʿalā baʿd al-nās. Ed. ʿAbd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda. Aleppo: Maktab al-Maṭbūʿāt al-Islāmiyya, 1414/1993.

Al-Māzarī, Abū 'Abdallāh Muḥammad b. 'Alī (d. 536/1141). Al-Mu'lim bi-fawā'id Muslim. Ed. Muḥammad al-Shādhilī al-Nayfar. 2nd ed. 3 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1992.

Al-Mişrī, 'Abd al-Ghanī b. Sa'īd (d. 409/1019). Bayān awhām al-Hākim fi al-Madkhal. Ms. Ahmet III 624. Topkapı Sarayı Library. Fols. 200a–206a.

- Al-Mizjājī, 'Abd al-Khāliq b. Abī Bakr (d. 1786–7). Nuzhat riyād al-ijāza al-mustatāba. Ed. Muştafā 'Abd al-Karīm Khatīb (Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1418/1997.
- Mullā 'Alī Qārī Nūr al-Dīn 'Alī b. Sultān al-Harawī (d. 1014/1606). Al-Asrār al-marfū'a fi al-akhbār al-mawdū'a al-ma'rūf bi'l-Mawdū'āt al-kubrā. Ed. Abū Hājir Muḥammad al-Sa'īd Zaghlūl. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1405/1985.
 - —. al-Maṣnūʿ fī ma'rifat al-ḥadīth al-mawdūʿ. Ed. ʿAbd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda. 6th ed. Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1426/2005.
 - ——. Mirqāt al-mafātīḥ sharḥ Mishkāt al-maṣābīḥ. 5 vols. Cairo: al-Maktaba al-Maymūnīyya, [1891].

—. Sharḥ al-Fiqh al-akbar. Ed. Marwān Muḥammad al-Sha"ār. Beirut: Dār al-Nafā'is, 1417/1976.

—. Sharh Musnad Abī Hanīfa. Ed. Khalīl Muḥyī al-Dīn Malīs. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, [n.d.].

—. Tashyī fuqahā al-hanafiyya li-tashnī sufahā al-shāfi iyya. MS 444. Yahya Tavfik Collection, Süleymaniye Library, Istanbul. Fols. 82b–84b.

- Al-Mundhirī, Zakī al-Dīn 'Abd al-'Azīm (d. 656/1258). Mukhtaşar Şaḥīḥ Muslim Ed. Muḥammad Nāşir al-Dīn al-Albānī. 3rd ed. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Ma'ārif, 1416/1996.
- Muslim b. al-Hajjāj al-Naysābūrī (d. 261/875). Kitāb al-tamyīz. Ed. Muḥammad Muṣṭafā al-A'ẓamī. Riyadh: Maṭba'at Jāmi'at al-Riyāḍ, [1395/1975].

— . Al-Munfaridāt wa al-waḥdān. Ed. ʿAbd al-Ghaffār Sulaymān al-Bandārī. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1408/1988.

- —. Şahīh Muslim. Cairo: Maktabat Muhammad 'Alī al-Şubayh, [1963].
- ——. Al-Ţabaqāt. Ed. Abū 'Ubayda Mashhūr b. Hasan b. Maḥmūd. 2 vols. Riyadh: Dār al-Hijra, 1411/1991.
- Al-Nasafî, 'Umar b. Muḥammad (d. 537/1142–3). Al-Qand fî dhikr 'ulamā' Samarqand. Ed. Yūsuf al-Hādī. Tehran: Āyene-ye Mīrāth, 1420/1999.
- Al-Nasā'ī, Ahmad b. Shu'ayb (d. 303/915). Tasmiyat mashāyikh Abī 'Abd al-Rahmān Ahmad b. Shu'ayb al-Nasā'ī/Dhikr al-mudallisīn. Ed. Hātim b. 'Ārif al-'Awnī. Mecca: Dār 'Ālam al-Fawā'id, 1423/[2002–3].

—. Thalāth rasā il ḥadāthiyya. Ed. Mashhūr Ḥasan Maḥmūd Salmān and 'Abd al-Karīm Aḥmad al-Warīkāt. Amman: Maktabat al-Manār, 1408/1987.

- Nāşir al-Dīn b. al-Munayyir, Ahmad b. Muhammad (d. 683/1284–5). Al-Mutawārī 'alā abwāb al-Bukhārī. Ed. Abū Hasan 'Alī 'Abd al-Hamīd. Beirut: al-Maktab al-Islāmī, 1411/1990.
- Al-Nāşirī, Abū al-'Abbās Ahmad b. Khālid (d. 1315/1897). Kitāb al-istisqā' li-akhbār duval al-Maghrib al-aqşā. Ed. Ja'far al-Nāşirī and Muḥammad al-Nāşirī. 9 vols. Casablanca: Dār al-Kitāb, 1956.
- Al-Nawawī, Muhyī al-Dīn Abū Zakariyyā Yahyā (d. 676/1277). Fatāwā al-Imām al-Nawawī. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1302/1982.

–. Sharh Ṣahīh Muslim. 15 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Qalam, 1407/1987.

- ——. Tahdhīb al-asmā' wa al-lughāt. 3 vols in 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, [1977].
- ——. Al-Taqrīb li'l-Nawawī. Cairo: Maktabat Muḥammad ʿAlī Ṣubayḥ, 1388/1968.
- Al-Naysābūrī, al-Hākim Muḥammad b. 'Abdallāh (d. 405/1014). Al-Madkhal ilā ma'rifat al-Iklīl. Ed. Ahmad b. Fāris al-Sulūm. Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1423/2003.
- -----. Al-Madkhal ilā al-ṣaḥāḥ. Ed. Rabīć b. Hādī ʿUmayr al-Madkhalī. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1404/1984.

—. Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth. Ed. Mu'azzim Husayn. Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif, 1385/1966.

—. Al-Mustadrak 'alā al-Ṣaḥīḥayn. Ed. Muqbil b. Hādī al-Wādi'ī. 5 vols. Cairo: Dār al-Ḥaramayn, 1417/1997.

— . Su'ālāt Mas'ūd b. 'Alī al-Sijzī ma'a as'ilat al-baghdādiyyīn 'an ahvāl al-ruvāt. Ed. Muwaffaq b. 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Qādir. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1408/1988.

— . Su'ālāt al-Hākim li'l-Dāraqutnī wa ajwibatuhu fi asāmī mashayakhihi min ahl al-Irāq. MS Ahmet III 624. Topkapı Sarayı Library, Istanbul. Fols. 268b–279a.

—, recension and translation by Mohammad b. Hosayn Khalīfe-ye Nīshābūrī (fl. 720/1320). Tārīkh Nīshābūr. Ed. Mohammad Redā Shafīʿī Kadkanī. Tehran: Āgāh, 1375/[1996].

—. Tasmiyat man akhrajahum al-Bukhārī wa Muslim wa mā infarada bihi kull minhumā. Ed. Kamāl Yūsuf al-Hūt. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Kutub al-Thaqāfiyya and Dār al-Jinān, 1407/1987.

- Al-Qābisī, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Muhammad (d. 403/1012). Muvaţiţa' al-imām Mālik. Ed. Muhammad b. 'Alawī b. 'Abbās al-Mālikī. Abu Dhabi: al-Majma' al-Thaqafī, 1425/2004.
- Al-Qādī 'Abd al-Jabbār, Abū al-Qāsim al-Balkhī and al-Hākim al-Jushamī (d. 415/1025). Fadl al-i'tizāl wa Ţabaqāt al-mu'tazila. Ed. Fu'ād Sayyid. Tunis: al-Dār al-Tūnisiyya, 1393/1974.
- Al-Qāsimī, Jamāl al-Dīn and Maḥmūd Shukrī al-Alūsī. Al-Rasā'il al-mutabādala bayn Jamāl al-Dīn al-Qāsimī wa Maḥmūd Shukrī al-Alūsī. Ed. Muḥammad b. Nāşir al-'Ajamī. Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 2001.
- Al-Qastallānī, Ahmad b. Muhammad b. Abī Bakr al-Shāfi'ī (d. 923/1517). Irshād alsārī li-sharh Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī. 10 vols. Beirut: Dār Ṣādir, [1971]. This is a reprint of an 1886–8 edition.
- Qazvīnī Rāzī, Nāşir al-Dīn 'Abd al-Jalīl Abū al-Husayn (fl. 560/1162). Kitāb-e naqd-e ma'refat beh ba'd-e mathāleb al-navāşeb fī naqd ba'd fadā'eh al-ravāfed. Ed. Jalāl al-Dīn Hosaynī Ormavī. [Tehran]: Chāp-khāne-ye Sepehr, 1331–1371/[1952].
- Al-Rāfi'ī, 'Abd al-Karīm b. Muḥammad (d. 623/1226). Al-Tadwīn fi akhbār Qazwīn. Ed. 'Azīz Allāh al-'Uṭāridī. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1987.
- Al-Rāmahurmuzī, al-Hasan b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān (d. 360/970–1). Al-Muḥaddith al-fāḍil bayn al-rāwī wa al-wā'ī. Ed. Muḥammad 'Ajjāj al-Khaṭīb. [Beirut]: Dār al-Fikr, 1391/1971.
- Rashīd al-Dīn Fadlallāh Ṭabīb (d. 718/1318). Jāmiʿ-e tavārīkh. Ed. Moḥammad Rūshan and Moṣtafā Mūsavī. 4 vols. Tehran: Nashr-e Elborz, 1373/[1994].
- ——. Vaqfnāme-ye rob'-e rashīdī. Ed. Mojtebā Mīnovī and Īrāj Afshār. Tehran: Ketābkhāne-ye Mellī, 1350/[1972].
- Al-Rāzī, Abū Zur'a 'Ubaydallāh b. 'Abd al-Karīm (d. 264/878). Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī wa juhūduhu fi al-sunna al-nabawiyya ma'a tahqīq kitābihi al-Du'afā' wa Ajwibatihi 'alā as'ilat al-Bardha'ī. Ed. Sa'dī al-Hāshimī. 3 vols. Medina, Cairo: Dār al-Wafā' and Maktabat Ibn al-Qayyim, 1409/1989.
- Rifāʿī, Yūsuf al-Sayyid Hāshim. Adillat ahl al-sunna wa al-jamāʿa, aw al-radd al-muḥkam al-manīʿ ʿalā munkarāt wa shubuhāt Ibn al-Manīʿ. [Cairo]: Maṭbaʿat al-Saʿāda, 1405/ 1985.
- Al-Şaghānī, al-Hasan b. Muhammad (d. 650/1252). Asāmī shuyūkh Abī 'Abdallāh Muhammad b. Ismā'īl b. Ibrāhīm b. al-Mughīra al-Bukhārī. Ed. 'Alī b. Muhammad al-'Imrān. [Mecca]: Dār 'Ālam al-Fawā'id, 1419/[1998].
- ——. Al-Durr al-multaqat fi tabyīn al-ghalat wa yalīhi Kītāb al-mawdū āt. Ed. 'Abdallāh al-Qādī. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1405/1985.
- —. Al-Jam' bayn al-Şahīhayn/Mashāriq al-anwār al-nabawiyya 'alā sihāh al-akhbar almuştafiyya. Ed. Ashraf b. 'Abd al-Maqşūd. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Kutub al-Thaqāfiyya, 1409/1989.

- Al-Sahmī, Hamza b. Yūsuf Abū al-Qāsim (d. 427/1035–6). Tārīkh Jurjān. Ed. Muḥammad 'Abd al-Muʿīd Khān et als. Hyderabad: Dāʾirat al-Maʿārif al-ʿUthmāniyya, 1387/1967.
- Al-Sakhāwī, Shams al-Dīn Abū al-Khayr Muhammad b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān (d. 902/1497). Al-Ajwiba al-'aliyya 'an al-as'ila al-damyāțiyya. Ed. Mish'al b. Bānī al-Muṭayrī. Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999.
 - —. Badhl al-majhūd fī khatm al-Sunan li-Abī Dāwūd. Ed. 'Abd al-Laṭīf al-Jīlānī. Riyadh: Adwā' al-Salaf, 2003.
 - —. Bughyat al-rāghib al-mutamannī fī khatm al-Nasā`ī. Ed. Abū al-Faḍl Ibrāhīm b. Zakariyyā. Cairo: Dār al-Kitāb al-Miṣrī, 1991.
 - ——. Al-Daw' al-lāmi' li-ahl al-qarn al-tāsi'. 12 vols. in 6. Beirut: Dār Maktabat al-Ḥayāt, [1966].
 - ---. Fath al-mughīth. Ed. 'Alī Ḥusayn 'Alī. 5 vols. Cairo: Maktabat al-Sunna, 1424/2003.
 - —. Al-Ghāya fī sharḥ al-Hidāya fī ʿilm al-riwāya. Ed. Abū ʿĀʾish ʿAbd al-Munʿim Ibrāhīm. [Cairo]: Maktabat Awlād al-Shaykh, 1422/2001.
- ——. Al-Qawl al-badī fī al-şalāt 'alā al-ḥabīb al-shafī'. Beirut: Maţba'at al-Inşāf, 1383/ 1963.
- Al-Sam'ānī, Abū al-Muzaffar Manşūr b. Muḥammad (d. 489/1096). Qawātiʿ al-adilla fī uşūl al-fiqh. Ed. 'Abdallāh b. Ḥāfiz al-Ḥakamī. 5 vols. Riyadh: Maktabat al-Tawba, 1418/1998.
- Al-Samarqandī, Abū al-Qāsim Ishāq b. Muhammad b. Ismā'īl (d. 342/953). Al-Radd 'alā ahl al-ahwā'/Risālat al-Sawād al-a'zam 'alā madhhab al-imām al-a'zam. MS Esed 1366/4. Süleymaniye Library, Istanbul. Fols. 38b–74b.
- Al-Şanʿānī, Muḥammad b. Ismāʿīl al-Amīr (d. 1182/1768). Hadīth iftirāq al-umma ilā nayyif wa sabʿīn firqa. Ed. Saʿd b. ʿAbdallāh al-Saʿdān. Riyadh: Dār al-ʿĀṣima, 1415/[1994].

—. Kītāb īqāz al-fikra li-murājaʿat al-fiţra. Ed. Muḥammad Ṣubḥī b. Ḥasan al-Ḥallāq. Beirut: Dār Ibn Hazm, 1420/1999.

—. Tawdīḥ al-afkār li-maʿānī Tanqīḥ al-anzār. Ed. Abū ʿAbd al-Raḥmān Ṣalāḥ Ibn ʿUwayḍa. 2 vols. in 1. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1417/1997.

—. Thamarāt al-nazar fī ʿilm al-athar. Ed. Rāʾid b. Ṣabrī b. Abī ʿAlafa. Riyadh: Dār al-ʿĀṣima, 1417/1996.

- Al-Sarakhsī, Muḥammad b. Aḥmad (d. c. 490/1096). Kītāb al-mabsūţ. 30 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Maʿrifa, [197–].
- —. Uşūl al-Sarakhsī. Ed. Abū al-Wafā' al-Afghānī. 2 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-'Ilmiyya, 1414/1993. Reprint of Hyderabad edition: Lajnat Iḥyā' al-Ma'ārif al-Nu'māniyya, 1953–.
- Al-Shāfi'ī, Muḥammad b. Idrīs (d. 204/819–20). Mawsū'at al-imām al-Shāfi'ī. Ed. 'Alī Muḥammad, 'Ādil Aḥmad et als. 2nd ed. 11 vols. Beirut: Dār Iḥyā' al-Turāth al-'Arabī, 1422/2001.
- —. Al-Risāla. Ed. Ahmad Shākir. Beirut: al-Maktaba al-Ilmiyya, [n.d.]. Reprint of the 1940 Cairo edition.
- —. Al-Umm. 7 vols. Cairo: [Dār al-Sha'b], [1968].
- Al-Shāshī, Ishāq b. Ibrāhīm Abū Ya'qūb al-Khurāsānī (d. 325/937). Usūl al-Shāshī. Delhi: Kotob-khāne-ye Rashīdiyya, [1963].
- Al-Shāshī, Abū 'Alī Ahmad b. Ishāq (d. 344/955–6). Usūl al-Shāshī. Ed. Muhammad Fayd al-Hasan al-Kankuhī. Beirut: Dār al-Kitāb al-'Arabī, 1402/1082.
- Al-Shāshī, Nizām al-Dīn (fl. 700's/1300's). Uşūl al-Shāshī: mukhtaşar fi uşūl al-fiqh al-islāmī. Ed. Muḥammad Akram Nadwī and Yūsuf al-Qaradāwī. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 2000.
- Al-Shawkānī, Muhammad b. 'Alī (d. 1250/1839). Al-Badr al-ţāli 'bi-maḥāsin man ba'd alqarn al-sābi'. Ed. Khalīl al-Manşūr. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1418/1998.

- Al-Shīrāzī, Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm b. 'Alī (d. 476/1083). Kitāb al-ma'ūna fī al-jadal. Ed. 'Abd al-Majīd Turkī. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1408/1988.
- Sharh al-Luma'. Ed. 'Abd al-Majīd Turkī. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1988.
 Al-Tabşira fi uşūl al-fiqh. Ed. Muḥammad Ḥasan Hītū. Damascus: Dār al-Fikr, 1400/1980.
- Sibț al-'Ajamī, Muwaffaq al-Dīn Abū Dharr Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm al-Ḥalabī (d. 884/1479– 80). Al-Tawdīh li-mubhamāt al-Jāmi' al-ṣahīh. Ed. Abū al-Mundhir al-Naqqāsh Ashraf Ṣalāh 'Alī. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1422/2001.
- Al-Sijistānī, Abū Dāwūd Sulaymān b. Ash'ath (d. 275/889). "Risālat al-imām Abī Dāwūd al-Sijistānī ilā ahl Makka fī waşf Sunanihi." In Thalāth rasā'il fī 'ilm mustalaḥ al-ḥadīth, ed 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda. Aleppo: Maktab al-Maṭbū'āt al-Islāmiyya, 1417/1997.
- Al-Sijzī, Abū Naşr 'Ubaydallāh b. Sa'īd al-Wā'ilī (d. 444/1052). Risālat al-Sijzī ilā ahl Zabīd fī al-radd 'alā man ankara al-ḥarf wa al-ṣawt. Ed. Muḥammad b. Karīm b. 'Abdallāh. Riyadh: Dār al-Rāya, 1414/1994.
- Sijzī, Amīr Hasan. Nizam ad-din Awliya: Morals for the Heart: Conversations of Shaykh Nizam ad-din Awliya recorded by Amir Hasan Sijzi. Trans. Bruce B. Lawrence. New York: Paulist Press, 1992.
- Al-Silafī, Abū Ṭāhir Aḥmad b. Muḥammad (d. 576/1180). Muʿjam al-safar. Ed. ʿAbdallāh ʿUmar al-Bārūdī. Beirut: Dār al-Fikr, 1414/1993.
- ——. Al-Wajīz fī dhikr al-majāz wa al-mujīz. Ed. Muḥammad Khayr al-Biqāʿī. Beirut: Dār al-Gharb al-Islāmī, 1411/1991.
- Al-Subkī, Tāj al-Dīn 'Abd al-Wahhāb b. 'Alī (d. 771/1370). "Qā'ida fī al-jarḥ wa alta'dīl." In Arba' rasā'il fī 'ulūm al-ḥadīth. Ed. 'Abd al-Fattāḥ Abū Ghudda, 19–65. 6th edition. Beirut: Dār al-Bashā'ir al-Islāmiyya, 1419/1999.
- ——. Țabaqāt al-shāfi iyya al-kubrā. Ed. Maḥmūd Muḥammad al-Ṭanāḥī and ʿAbd al-Fattāḥ Muḥammad al-Ḥalw. 10 vols. [Cairo]: ʿĪsā al-Bābī al-Ḥalabī, 1383/1964.
- Al-Subkī, Taqī al-Dīn ʿAlī b. ʿAbd al-Kāfī (d. 756/1356). Al-Sayf al-şaqīl fi al-radd ʿalā ibn al-Zafīl. Eds. Muḥammad Zāhid al-Kawtharī and ʿAbd al-Ḥafīẓ Saʿd ʿAṭiyya. [Cairo]: Maṭbaʿat al-Saʿāda, 1356/1937.
- Al-Suhrawardī, Abū Hafş 'Umar b. Muhammad (d. 632/1234). 'Awārif al-ma'ārif. Ed. Adīb al-Kamdānī and Muhammad Mahmūd al-Muştafā. 2 vols. Mecca: Al-Maktaba al-Makkiyya, 1422/2001.
- Al-Suyūtī, Jalāl al-Dīn (d. 911/1505). Dhayl Ṭabaqāt al-ḥuffāz. Ed. Zakariyyā 'Umayrāt. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-Ilmiyya, 1419/1998.
- . Jamʿ al-jawāmiʿ al-maʿrūf biʾl-Jāmiʿ al-kabīr. 29 vols. [Cairo]: Majmaʿ al-Buḥūth al-Islāmiyya, 1390/1970.
- —. Al-Nukat al-badī at 'alā al-Maudū 'āt. Ed. 'Āmir Aḥmad Ḥaydar. [n.p.]: Dār al-Janān, 1411/1991.
- . *Tadrīb al-rāwī fī shar*h Taqrīb al-Nawāwī. Ed. 'Abd al-Wahhāb 'Abd al-Laṭīf. 3rd ed. Cairo: Maktabat Dār al-Turāth, 1426/2005.
- Al-Țabarī, Abū Ja'far Muḥammad b. Jarīr (d. 310/923). Al-Tabṣīr fī ma'ālim al-dīn. Ed. 'Alī b. 'Abd al-'Azīz al-Thibl. Riyadh: Dār al 'Āṣima, 1416/1996.
- ——. Tahdhīb al-āthār wa tafşīl al-thābit 'an Rasūl Allāh min al-akhbār. Ed. Mahmūd Muhammad Shākir. 5 vols. Cairo: Maṭbaʿat al-Madanī, 1982.
- —. Tahdhīb al-āthār: al-juz' al-mafqūd. Ed. 'Alī Riḍā b. 'Abdallāh. Beirut: Maktabat al-Ma'mūn li'l-Turāth, 1995.
- Al-Taḥāwī, Abū Ja'far Aḥmad b. Muḥammad (d. 321/933). Mushkil al-āthār. 25 vols. Hyderabad: Dā'irat al-Ma'ārif al-'Uthmāniyya, [1968].
- ——. Sharh mushkil al-āthār. Ed. Shuʿayb Arnāʾūṭ. 16 vols. Beirut: Muʾassasat al-Risāla, 1415/1994.
- Al-ʿUqaylī, Abū Jaʿfar Muḥammad b. ʿAmr (d. 323/934). Kitāb al-ḍuʿafāʾ al-kabīr. Ed. ʿAbd al-Muʿựī Amīn Qalʿajī. 4 vols. Beirut: Dār al-Kutub al-ʿIlmiyya, 1404/1984.
- Al-Wādi'ī, Abū 'Abd al-Rahmān Muqbil b. Hādī. Al-Jāmi' al-sahīh mimmā laysa fī al-Sahīhayn. 6 vols. Cairo: Dār al-Haramayn, 1416/1995.

- Al-Wāsitī, Khalaf b. Muḥammad (d. 400/1010). Atrāf Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī wa Muslim. MS 1162. Maktabat al-Asad, Damascus.
- Yūsuf Efendizāde, Abū Muḥammad Abdallāh b. Muḥammad. Ināyat al-mālik al-mun im li-sharh Ṣahāh Muslim. MS 343-5 Hamidiye. Süleymaniye Library, Istanbul.
- Al-Zabīdī, Muhammad Murtadā (d. 1205/1791). Kitāb 'uqūd al-javāhir al-munīfa. Ed. Wahbī Sulaymān Ghāwjī al-Albānī. Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Risāla, 1406/1985.
- Al-Zayla'ī, Jamāl al-Dīn 'Abdallāh b. Yūsuf (d. 762/1361). Nasb al-rāya li-ahādīth al-Hidāya. Ed. Muḥammad 'Awāma. Jedda and Beirut: Mu'assasat al-Rayān and Dār al-Qibla al-Thaqāfiyya wa al-Islāmiyya, 1418/1997.
- Al-Zayyānī, Abū al-Qāsim (d. 1833). Al-Bustān al-zarīf fi davelat avelād mavelāya al-sharīf. Ed. Rashīd al-Zāwiya. Rabat: Maţbaʿat al-Maʿārif al-Jadīda, [1992].
- Al-Zurqānī, Muḥammad b. 'Abd al-Bāqī (d. 1122/1710). Sharh Muwatta' al-imām Mālik. 5 vols. [Cairo]: Maţba'at Muştafā al-Bābī al-Halabī, 1381/1961.

INDEX*

Abbreviations: M.: Muhammad b.: Ibn

'Authenticity Question' xxi Abān b. Taghlib (d. 140–1/757–9) 161 'Abbādī, Abū 'Āşim M. (d. 458/1066) 71 'Abd al-Ghanī b. Sa'īd al-Misrī (d. 409/ 1019) 158 'Abd al-Jabbār, al-Qādī (d. 415/1025) 187, 189; extensive hadīth transmission of 179; stance on hadīth 176 'Abd al-Khāliq, 'Abd al-Ghanī 289 'Abd al-Qāhir al-Baghdādī (d. 429/ 1037) 188 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. Mahdī (d. 198/ 814) 52, 82, 233, 282 Abd al-Rauf, M. 13, 54 300 'Abd al-Wahhāb al-Mālikī, al-Qādī (d. 422/1031-2) 193 'Abd b. Humayd (d. 249/863) 85 'Abdallāh b. Ahmad b. Hanbal (d. 290/903) 266 'Abdallāh b. Mas'ūd 49 'Abduh, M. (d. 1905) 305–306, 311, 321 'Abīd al-Bukhārī 345—see also Ismā'īl, Mawlā Abraham 110 Abū 'Alī al-Naysābūrī (d. 349/960) 150, 155, 214, 272, 279, 317; opinion on Sahīh Muslim 127 Abū 'Amr b. 'Alā' (d. 154/771 or 157/774) 266 Abū 'Aşim Dahhāk al-Nabīl (d. 212/ 827) 66 Abū 'Awāna Ya'qūb b. Ishāq al-Isfarāyīnī (d. 312/924-5) 105,

137, 218; legal thought of 113–114; mustakhraj of 113–114

- Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī, Sulaymān b. Ash^cath (d. 275/889) 9, 55, 59, 88–89, 106, 143, 172, 242,
 - 246-247, 352; Sunan of 108,
 - 124, 200, 323, 337; status of his
 - Sunan 148, 149; purpose of his
 - Sunan 57; khatm of his Sunan 339;
 - use of Sunan in takhrij 220;
 - evaluation of his Sunan 130; use of
 - weak hadīths 55n19; division of society 57; comparison with
 - al-Bukhārī and Muslim 213;
 - role in compiling fiqh of Ibn
- Hanbal 139 Abū Dharr al-Harawī (d. 430/1038) 134, 137, 138, 143, 157, 198, 225; life and works 121: ilzīmīt book
- life and works 121; ilzāmāt book of 118; as editor of Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī 121, 384
- Abū Ghudda, 'Abd al-Fattāḥ (d. 1997) 332; on 'an'an ḥadīth issue 82n119; rebuttal of al-Albānī 327–328
- Abū Hafş Ahmad b. Hafş al-Kabīr (d. 217/832) 238
- Abū Hanīfa, Nuʿmān b. Thābit
 (d. 150/767) 59, 73–74, 84, 144, 155, 357, 363, 364; attitude towards hadīth 49; hadīths of 60
- Abū Hātim al-Rāzī, M. b. Idrīs (d. 277/890) 81, 86, 87, 89, 91, 143, 148, 269, 271, 366; role in compiling fiqh of Ibn Hanbal 139
 Abū Hudhayl (d. 200/815) 178–179
 Abū Hurayra 49

^{* &#}x27;Al-' has been omitted from the beginning of entries.

I have tried to provide death dates for all the Islamic personalities after the generation of the Companions. Opinions often differ on death dates, so I have generally relied on Shams al-Dīn al-Dhahabī's and Ibn Ḥajar al-'Asqalānī's biographical resources. As in the body of text, I have followed the Hijrī/Common Era format, omitting Hijrī dates after 1700 CE.

- Abū Khaythama Zuhayr b. Harb (d. 234/848) 88-89 Abū Rayya, Mahmūd 306 Abū Thawr, (d. 240/854) 71 Abū 'Ubayd al-Qāsim b. Sallām (d. 224/839) 89 Abū Yūsuf, Ya'qūb b. Ibrāhīm al-Qādī (d. 182/798) 144 Abū Zahra, M. (d. 1974) 76n96 Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī, 'Ubaydallāh b. 'Abd al-Karīm (d. 264/878) 81, 86-89, 115, 143, 148, 269, 271, 363, 366, 386; alleged plagiarism of al-Bukhārī's al-Tārīkh al-kabīr 97; criticism of Muslim 132, 280–282; Kitāb al-du'afā' of 91–93; madhhab allegiance of 137; opinion of Muslim and al-Dhuhlī 86; opinion on the Muwatta' 195n157 Abū Zur'a Walī al-Dīn Ahmad (d. 826/1423) 297 Adāla (upstanding character) 316 'Adawī, 'Abd al-Salām b. Maḥmūd (d. 1033/1623) 339 Addition in Hadīth Criticism 171; Normative Matn, Isnād and Literal Matn 116–117; different standards on 295 Aeneid-see Virgil Aesthetics 214; and canonicity 360-361 Afghānī, Jamāl al-Dīn (d. 1897) 306 Agency, human, in history - 19 Āhād hadīth—see Hadīth Ahl al-hadīth 3, 76n96, 78, 85, 365–367; origins and definition of 50; approaches to God's attributes 75; dissolving of 137-138; opinion on al-Bukhārī and Muslim 86;-see also Sunnism, Über-Sunnis Ahl al-ra'y 365, 367; origins and definition of 50; dissolution of 137 - 38Ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a-see Sunnism Aḥmad b. Abī ʿĀṣim al-Nabīl 148 Ahmad b. 'Alī al-'Awālī 118 Ahmad b. Īsā al-Mişrī 92 Ahmad III (Ottoman Sultan) 344 Ājurrī, Abū Bakr (d. 360/971) 141 Ajwiba 'alā al-masā'il al-mustaghraba min al-Bukhārī 232n70 'Alā'ī, Şalāh al-Dīn Khalīl b. Kaykaldī (d. 761/1359) 285
- A lām al-hadīth fī sharh Sahīh al-Bukhārī 134 Alawid Dynasty 344–346 Albānī, M. Nāsir al-Dīn (d. 1999) life and works 301, 304, 321-334; critics of 325, 327–331; response to his critics 331-334; lectures of 17; Silsilat al-ahādīth al-da'īfa of 322, 324; use of Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb's books 311; view on weak hadīth 312; vision of hadīth criticism 324 Alexandria, Library of 99 'Alī b. Abī Ţālib (d. 40/660) 111: importance of hadith from 109 'Alī b. al-Madīnī (d. 234/849) 51, 66, 86-91, 147, 282; comparison with al-Bukhārī 269; role in Mihna 76-77; effect of the Mihna on his reputation 77n102; Kitāb al-ilal of 52, 95–96 (and n165); requirements for authenticity 70, 82n119 'Alī b. Hamshādh (d. 388/950) 61 Alp Arslan 353 'Alqama b. Qays (d. 62/681) 49 Alūsī, Mahmūd (d. 1853) 310 Alūsī, Mahmūd Shukrī (d. 1924) 310 Alūsī, Nu'mān (d. 1899) 310 Amma 57 'An'an hadīth 70–71 (and 70n74); Bukhārī's stance on 70-71; Muslim's stance on 82-83; later Muslim scholars debate over 82n119; stances stricter than al-Bukhārī 283;requirements for 215n15 Andalusia, role in Hadīth canon 375-376 Anşārī, Shaykh al-Islām Zakariyyā' b. M. (d. 926/1520) 254, 258 Anthropomorphism 110, 136, 224 Apollonius of Rhodes 100 Aqīt, Ahmad b. Ahmad (d. 991/1583) 343 Ardabīlī, Badr al-Dīn Mahmūd (d. 875/1471) 240 Aristotle, use of term canon 20; Poetics of 23, 247-248 Ark of the Covenant 345 Aşamm, Abū al-'Abbās (d. 346/957) 156 Aşamm, Abū Bakr (d. 201/816) 178 Asbāt b. Nasr 92 Aṣhāb al-hadīth—see ahl al-hadīth

Ash'arī, Abū al-Ḥasan (d. 324/ 935–6) 109, 190, 363—see also Ash'arism

- Ash'arism 136, 138, stance on lafz 198;—see also Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī school
- Aşīlī, Abū M. 'Abdallāh b. Ibrāhīm (d. 392/1002) 375
- Astarābādhī, Abū Sa'd 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. M. (d. 405/1015) 274, 340
- 'Ațā' b. Abī Rabāh (d. 114/732) 51
- Atrāf, discussion of 105, of the Şahāhayn—see also Dimashqī, Abū Mas'ūd and Wāsiţī, Khalaf
- 'Atțār, Rashīd al-Dīn (d. 662/1264) 294
- Aurangzeb (Mughal Emperor) 318
- Awārif al-maʿārif see Suhrawardī, 'Umar 'Awnī, Sharīf Hātim 70n74
- 'Awzā'ī, 'Abd al-Raḥmān (d. 157/ 773–4) 49, 143, 144; madhhab of 136
- 'Aynī, Badr al-Dīn (d. 855/1451) 258
- Azhar Mosque 17, 341
- Azmeh, Aziz 31

Baghawī, Abū al-Qāsim 'Abdallāh (d. 317/929–30) 62n45; as popular transmitter 90; last student of 90n153

- Baghawī, Abū M. al-Husayn (d. 516/ 1122) 249; Maşābīh al-sunna of 17; use of Şahīhayn in his Maşābīh 246; role of his Maşābīh in India 377; vision of history 351; Sharh al-sunna of 351
- Baghdad, strife between Shāfiʿī and Hanbalī madhhabs 191, 203; study of the Ṣaḥīḥayn in 131–135
- Bahr al-asānīd fī sahīh al-masānīd 56n24
- Bājī, Abū al-Walīd Sulaymān b. Khalaf (d. 474/1081) 121, 225–226, 234, 366; on requirement for isnāds to use hadīths 64; on al-Bukhārī's legal expertise 256; on origins of al-Bukhārī's Ṣaḥīḥ 277n44; on requirements for a mufī 243; requirement for reliance in the Ṣaḥīḥayn 243; study on al-Bukhārī's transmitters 122n69
- Bālawī, Abū M. 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. M. 119
- Balkhī, Abū al-Qāsim al-Kabī (d. 319/931), sources for his Qubūl al-akhbār 89; on the authority of hadīth 146; requirements for hadīth 180

- Balkhī, al-Ḥasan b. Shujā^c (d. 266/ 880) 87
- Balkin, J.M. 28
- Bannānī, Fath Allāh (d. 1934–5) 278
- Bāqillānī, Abū Bakr M. b. al-Ţayyib
 (d. 403/1013) 188, 193, 258; as seen by ḥadīth scholars 138
- Bāgūrī, Ahmad 240n104
- Baraka 342; definition of 346-348
- Barbahārī, al-Ḥasan b. ʿAlī (d. 329/
 - 940-1) 141-142
- Bardha'ī, Abū 'Uthmān Sa'īd b. 'Amr (d. 292/905) 91
- Barqānī, Abū Bakr Ahmad b. M. (d. 425/1033–4) life and works 131; mustakhraj of 108, 127, 133, 219; format of his mustakhraj 218
- Barqūq (Mamluk Sultan) 343
- Basmalah (saying bismilläh al-Rahmān al-Rahīm in prayer) 291, 296; debates over 257–258; out-loud or silent 114
- Başrī, 'Abdallāh b. Sālim
- (d. 1722) 308, 315, 343–344
- Başırī, Abū al-Husayn M. (d. 436/ 1044) 177, 187
- Bațalyawsī, 'Abdallāh b. M. (d. 521/ 1127) 276
- Bawraqī, M. b. Sa'īd 155
- Bayān wa al-tawdīh li-man khurrija lahu fī al-Ṣahīh wa qad mussa bi-tajrīh 297
- Baybars, al-Sayfī (Mamluk Sultan) 343 Bayhaqī, Abū Bakr Ahmad b. al-Hasan
- (d. 458/1066) 130, 132, 136,
- 168, 172, 188, 212, 291; life and
- works 219-220; definition of the
- hadīth canon 9n7; criticism
- of the Sahīhayn 257; as example
- of Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī school 219–220;
- interpretation of al-Hākim's requirements 165; Sunan al-kubrā
- of 60, 61, 220, 165; on al-Bukhārī
- and Muslim's requirements
- 169–170; on hadīth and law in his time 241; use of living isnāds 370;
 - use of Sahīhayn for takhrīj 219-220
- Baytār, 'Abd al-Razzāq (d. 1917) 310 Bazdawī, Abū al-Ḥasan 'Alī b. M.
- (d. 482/1089) 227 Bazzār, Aḥmad b. Salama (d. 286/899)
- 83, 87, 126, 269, 386
- Beardsley, Monroe 214

- Berkey, Jonathan 339, 371, 373 Bible, canonization of 34–35, 39 Bid'a (heretical innovation) 307, 311, 322, 352 Blenkinsopp, Joseph 23, 35, 39 Brown, Daniel 300 Bujayrī, Abū Hafs 'Umar b. M. (d. 311/924) 56 Bukhara 48n1 Bukhārī, 'Alā' al-Dīn 'Abd al-'Azīz b. Ahmad (d. 730/1329–30) 227, 255, 367; requirements for a mufti 242 Bukhārī, Abū 'Abdallāh M. b. Ismā'īl (d. 256/870) early biographies of 64-65; early sources on his life 274–275; life and works 65-69; teachers of 66; pilgrimage to Mecca 47-48; actual allegiance to the ahl al-hadīth 79–80; attitude towards Abū Hanīfa 72–74; opinion on $qiy\bar{a}s$ 72; unique legal opinions of 71-72; narration from weak transmitters 116; miraculous events surrounding his grave 275; negative portrayal by Hanafīs 237–238; opinions on his legal expertise 256; rejection of weak hadīths in law 54n17; view of use of hadith in law 54; requirements for authenticity 70-71; conflict over lafz issue 66-67, 78,270; Khalq af al al-ibad of/response to accusations on the lafz 78–81; effects of the lafz dispute on transmission of his works 127-128; conflict with al-Dhuhlī 66; canonical depiction of conflict with al-Dhuhlī 273, 281–282; biography in Khatīb's Tārīkh Baghdād 268-275; time in Naysābūr 66; expulsion from Naysābūr and Bukhara 67, 270; interaction with the Amīr of Bukhara 67–68; death of 68; early evaluation of 128; matn criticism of his Sahīh 296-297; Tārīkh al-kabīr of 68, 127, 135, 174, 178, 265, 268; early importance of his al-Tārīkh al-kabīr 96–97; exclusion of sahih hadith by author from the Sahih 94; Adab al-mufrad of 323, 329; maintaining his superiority to Muslim 278–280; showing his Sahih to leading scholars
- of his day 94n163; story of plagiarizing his Sahīh 94-96;see also Sahīh al-Bukhārī Bulliet, Richard 368, 373, 374 Bulgīnī, Abū Hafs 'Umar b. Raslān (d. 805/1402-3) 245, 254 Bulgīnī, Jalāl al-Dīn 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Umar (d. 824/1421) 297 Bundār, Muhammad b. Bashshār 87 Burns, Gerald 26-27, 39 Calder, Norman 336, 384 Campenhausen, Hans von 23 Canon, attempts at exhaustive definition of 21n3; Greek meaning of 20-21, 41; Aristotle's use of 20,23n8, 29; Epicurus' use of 21; Polycletus' use of 23; Paul's use of 21; Pliny the Elder's use of 23; as 'Deep canonicity' 28; as Canon 1 and Canon 2 25, 33, 335; as 'cultural canon' 28; as exemplum 247-251; as Kanòn tès alètheias 28, 41; as synecdoche 335-340; functions in ritual 338-339; Halbertal's discussion of 29-31; 'intense canonical process' 100; kanòn of authenticity 154; nature of 94; of Persian poetry 32; role of strife in formation of 371–372; 'canonical criticism' 24;-see also Ritual, Canonical Culture, Hadīth canon Canonical Culture 42–46, 262–263; definition of 44; function of 301;
- of the Sahīhayn 263–275; beginnings of Sahīhayn canonical culture 264–267; characteristics of Sahīhayn canonical culture 267–275; maintenance of Sahīhayn canonical culture 275–282 Canonical hadīth collections—see Hadīth canon Chamberlain, Michael 339, 347 Companions of the Prophet, analogy with transmitters of the
- analogy with transmitters of the Sahīhayn 290–291
- Consensus—see Ijmā^c
- Council of Trent (1546) 34
- Counter Canon 32
- Critical Inquiry (Chicago) 26
- Cultural canon-see Canon

Daghūlī, M. b. 'Abd al-Rahmān (d. 325/936–7) 96 Dalā'il al-nubuwwa 156 Dallal, Ahmad 319 Dānī, 'Uthmān b. Sa'īd (d. 444/ 1053) 283 Dāragutnī, 'Alī b. 'Umar (d. 385/ 995) 90, 122, 127, 130, 142, 153, 162, 242, 257, 263-265, 282, 291, 292n100, 293, 295, 333, 375; Sunan of 9, 201; attitude towards reason 138; books on the Sahīhayn 122-123; his sources for the Sahīhayn 131; use of Sahīhayn for takhrīj 217; correspondence with al-Hākim 155, 165–166; criticism of Muslim 132; exemption of hadīths he criticized from Ibn al-Şalāh's claim 254; ilzāmāt book of 118-119; Kitāb al-tatabbu' of 115, 267; criticism of the Sahihayn 117-120; lasting effect of his criticism on the Sahīhayn 296; on Ibn 'Adī and al-Ismāʿīlī 129 Dārimī, 'Abdallāh b. 'Abd al-Rahmān (d. 255/869) 87-88; status of his Sunan 148 Dārimī, 'Uthmān b. Sa'īd (d. 280/ 894) 200 Davidson, Donald 262 Dāwūd b. 'Alī al-Zāhirī (d. 270/ 884) 85 'Deep canonicity'-see Canon Deuteronomy 26, 99 Dhahabī, Abū 'Abdallāh Shams al-Dīn M. b. Ahmad (d. 748/1348) 90, 109, 113, 143, 274, 278, 281, 302, 327, 353; application of Principle Charity to transmitters in the Sahīhayn 290; on tadlīs in the Sahīhayn 286; criticism of al-Ghazālī 354; criticism of al-Hākim's Mustadrak 171; narrative of Islamic history 357-358; vision of law 356-357; opinion on Ibn Hanbal's Musnad 62n45, 230; opinion on reliability of Sunan Ibn Mājah 217; reliance on Tārīkh Samarqand 274; Siyar a Tām al-nubalā' of 17, 357; Tadhkirat al-huffaz of 17, 87, 357; Tārīkh al-islām of 65, 357 Dhikr akhbār Isbahān 221

- Dhikr al-şahāba alladhīna şahhat al-riwāya 'anhum wa laysū fī al-Ṣahīḥayn 123
- Dhuhlī, M. b. Yahyā (d. 258/873) 66, 80, 87, 88, 148, 281; as über-Sunni 77; conflict with al-Bukhārī 67; conflict with Muslim 85–86; portrayal of in Şahīhayn canonical culture 271, 273; stance on jahāla 163
- Dihlawī, 'Abd al-Haqq b. Sayf (d. 1052/1642) 377
- Dihlawī, Shāh 'Abd al-'Azīz (d. 1824) 278; on ritual power of the Sahīhayn 342
- Dihlawī, Shāh Walī Allāh (d. 1762) 37, 301, 334, 367; life and works 318–321; attitude towards the Ṣaḥāḥayn 320; teachers of 308; Hujjat Allāh al-bāligha of 37, 320; requirement for canonical texts 100–101
- Dimashqī, Abū Masʿūd Ibrāhīm b. M. (d. 401/1010–1) 119, 162, 267, 320, 371; life and study of the Şaḥīḥayn 132–134; criticism of Muslim 265n6; rebuttal of al-Dāraqutnī's criticism of Muslim 264–265; Kītāb al-ajwiba of 264–265
- Dirār b. 'Amr (fl. 195/810) 178 Divorce oaths 195n159

Ephrat, Daphna 138 Ess, Joseph van 178 Ezra 27

Fadā'il al-Shāfi'ī 155

- Fadl al-i'tizāl 176, 187
- Fadl b. al-ʿAbbās al-Ṣāʾigh (d. 270/
- 883) 91, 386
- Fārisī, Abū al-Hasan 'Abd al-Ghāfir (d. 529/1134–5) 189, 340, 370; treatment of al-Ghazālī 355
- Fāsī, Abū 'Alā' al-'Irāqī (d. 1770–1)336n4
- Fath al-bārī sharh Ṣahīh al-Bukhārī—see Ibn Ḥajar al-ʿAsqalānī
- Fatimids 372–374
- Fihrist-see Ibn al-Nadīm
- Firabrī, M. b. Yūsuf (d. 320/932) 86, 120–121, 129, 385
- Fish, Stanley 21, 28, 29, 41, 247
- Five Books-see Hadith canon

338 - 339Formative text 30, 149, 181, 229–239 passim; Sahīhayn as 106–107 Four Books-see Hadith canon Frazer, J.G. 18 Garden, Kenneth 354 Ghazālī, Abū Hāmid M. (d. 505/ 1111) 31, 216, 321; on requirement of isnāds for using hadīth 63; criticism of and rehabilitation of 354-356; criticism of the Sahihayn 258-259; on the requirements for a mufti 242; study of hadīth 355-356 Ghazālī, M. (d. 1996) 305–306, 307n22 Ghāzān Khān 36 Ghitrīfī, Abū Ahmad M. b. Ahmad (d. 377/987-8) 129-130, 135 Ghumārī, 'Abdallāh b. al-Şiddīg (d. 1993) 240n104, 328 Ghunjār, Abū 'Abdallāh M. b. Ahmad (d. 412/1021) 274 Gnosticism 27, 41 Goldziher, Ignaz 10–11; on criticism of the Sahihayn 300 Gorak, Jan 22, 23, 24 Gospels 39, 41 Haddād, Abū Nu'aym 'Abdallāh (d. 517/1123) 107-108 Haddad, Gibril Fouad 327 Hadīth, traditions vs. narrations 69, 177; āhād 52-53, 146; mustafīd 147; mashhūr 185; mawqūf 115–116; mutawātir 52–53, 147, 179, 184–185; mursal 115; shādhdh 249; study of 'ilal 52, 115–118; definition of sahih 52-54, 249; debate over proper translation of 'sahih' 52n10; musannaf collections 50–51; musnad collections 51; pinnacle of size of collections of 61; attitudes of madhhabs towards 252; 'ulūw in 107; authority of 145; breadth of hadīth literature 349-350; takhrīj of 211-239 passim; collections used for takhrij 212; difference between hadīth scholars and legal theorists on epistemology 53; end of possibility of finding sahih hadiths 172–173; limited number of authentic hadīths 280; first known use of takhrij 217; forgery of hadiths 155; in the Mu^ctazilite school 178–180; requirements of the Mu^ctazilites for 176–181; location of transmission of 369; number of hadīths in circulation 177n90, 336: narration from heretics 161n33. 249–251; prima facie compelling value 210; proof value and different functions of 183n116, 185; role in Salafi movements in 308, 311-312;—see also 'An'an hadīth, Hadīth collection, Hadīth criticism, Weak hadīth Hadīth Ghadīr Khumm 159, 160n30 Hadīth al-Kusūf 256 Hadīth al-Mi'rāj 303 Hadīth al-Ru'ya 223 Hadīth al-Tayr 159-160 Hadīth al-Turba 303, 313 Hadīth Umm Habība 304, 313 Hadīth: lā tajtami'u ummatī 'alā al-dalāla 144 Hadīth: lā wasiyya li-wārith 147n172 Hadīth canon, different permutations of 8-10, 9n7; Western discussions on formation of 10-14 Wheeler's discussion of 33-34; function of the Six Books 33; as synecdoche 336-339; status in the 4th/10th century 148; geographical limitation 374–377; in India 376–377; of role of Andalusia in 375-376; in historical writing 37; in ritual 336–349; Shiite hadīth canon 227 Hadīth collection, early writing and compilation of 50-51, 50n5; origins and definition of musannaf collections 50-51; musnad collections 51; pinnacle of size of collections of 61; sahih movement 54-56; after the sahīh movement 60; mega-compendia 9n7

Hadīth criticism, early development of 51–54; major early hadīth critics 52–53; authentication of isnāds 51–52; study of 'ilal 52, 115–118; systemization of 283–285; technical terms of 115–116; transmission criticism 116–117; among the Mu'tazilites 179–180; elements stricter than al-Bukhārī and

416

Folkert, Kendall W. 25, 31, 335,

Muslim 282–283; matn criticism of the Sahīhayn 110, 255-257, 287-291, 296, 300-304, 333;-see also Addition Hadith critics—see Hadith criticism Hadīth scholar, idealized vision of 45 Hākim, Abū 'Abdallāh M. b. 'Abdallāh (d. 405/1014) 51n8, 59, 97, 127, 133, 134, 177-178, 209, 215, 217, 249, 281, 283, 326, 340, 365, 369, 375; life and works 155–160; Madkhal ilā al-Iklīl of 161, 181; Madkhal ilā al-Sahīh of 157-158, 178; Ma'rifat 'ulūm al-hadīth of 17, 157, 350, 376; Mustadrak of 118, 181-183, 212; methodology in his Mustadrak 162; structure and composition of his Mustadrak 157-158; Tārīkh Naysābūr of 65, 189, 376; works on the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 119; on al-Bukhārī's methodology in his Sahīh 174; on Muslim's methodology in his Sahīh 174; on al-Bukhārī's time in Naysābūr 67; opinion of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 161; study of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's transmitters 122; question and answer session with 167; spread of his writings 158; on Addition 171; on jahāla 163; on narration from 161n33; vision of heretics history 350; link to Ash'arī scholars 193; accusations of Shiism 159-160; as pinnacle of Sahīhayn Network 154; crucial role of his Tārīkh Naysābūr in biographies of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 65, 274; father's relationship to Muslim 81; critics of 159; criticism of his definition of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's requirements 166n48, 167-168; criticism of his Mustadrak 165–166, 171; letter from al-Dāraquţnī 165–166; encounter with Badī al-Zamān al-Hamadhānī 197; evaluation of Ibn Hibbān's Sahīh 152, 361-362; praise for Ibn Khuzayma 125; evaluation of Ibn Khuzayma's Sahīh 151, 361-362

Hākim, Abū Ahmad M. b. M. (d. 378/ 988) 97, 128

- Halabī, Outb al-Dīn 'Abd al-Karīm (d. 735/1335) 286
- Halbertal, Moshe 29, 33, 40, 44, 46, 337
- Hallaq, Wael 136
- Hallberg, Robert von 26, 30, 33
- Hamawayh, Abū M. 121
- Hammād b. Abī Sulaymān (d. 120/ 738) 49
- Hammād b. Shākir (d. 290/902-3) 121, 385
- Hammām b. Munabbih (d. circa 130/ 747) 50n5
- Hanafi Madhhab, founding of 49; link to Mu'tazilism 136–137, 175; role in the Mihna 76–77; conflict with über-Sunnis 353–354; early use of hadīth 364; stance on authority of hadīth 147, 184–187; study of hadīth 136-137; absence from Sahīhayn Network 140–141; transmission of Sahihayn 140-141; study of the Sahihayn 226-227, 235; attitude towards the Sahīhayn canon 5, 237-239; function of canon in 33; negative portraval of al-Bukhārī 237-238; use of the Sahīhayn for takhrīj 235-238; stance on intoxicants 73; link to Seljuq state 3; rivalry with Shāfi'īs 4, 368
- Hanaway, William 32, 40
- Hanbalī Madhhab 132, 367-368; formation of 136–140; link to Seljug state 3; absence from the Sahīhayn Network 141; compromise on nature of Our'an 270n16; moderation of 192; formative text of 140, 191; important works of usul al-figh 191; stance on proof value of in hadīths 192–193; strife with Shāfi'ī school 191, 203; use of Sahihayn in takhrīj 223–225
- Hanbalī/über-Sunnis 154, 196-200, 202; conflict with Ash'arīs 192; stance on God's speech and attributes 198; link to Seljuq state 3
- Harawī, Abū al-Fayd M. b. M. al-Faşīh (d. 837/1434) 214n10
- Harnak, Adolf 23
- Hārūn al-Rashīd 357
- Hasan I (King of Morocco) 345

Hāwī al-kabīr fī fiqh madhhab al-imām al-Shāfi'ī 222 Hāwī al-usūl min akhbār al-rasūl 9n7 Hāwī fī bayān āthār al-Tahāwī 236 Haykān b. M. al-Dhuhlī (d. 267/ 881) 85 Hāzimī, Abū Bakr M. (d. 584/ 1188-9) 166, 168, 181; definition of hadīth canon 9n7; discussion of the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 213; evaluation of al-Bukhārī 248 Hebrew Bible, Greek edition of 99 Helali-Müller, Asma 52n10 Heretics, narration of hadīths from 161n33, 249-251 Hilyat al-awliyā' 221 Hīrī, Abū Jaʿfar Ahmad b. Hamdān (d. 311/923-4) 104 Hīrī, Abū Saʿīd Aḥmad b. M. (d. 353/ 964) 131 Historical Critical Method, principles of - 16 Hiyal (legal devices) 73, 73n85-86 Hodgson, Marshall 313, 350, 368, 371 Homer 41, 247-248; compilation of his epics 100; Iliad and Odyssey of 100, 247 Hujjat Allāh al-bāligha—see Dihlawī, Shāh Walī Allāh Hulwānī, al-Hasan b. 'Alī (d. 243/ 857-8) 87, 148; Sunan of 150 Humaydī, 'Abdallāh b. al-Zubayr (d. 219/834) 66 Humaydī, M. b. Futūķ (d. 488/ 1095) 229, 287 Hurayth b. Abī Waraqā' 270 Husayn b. Idrīs al-Anşārī 96 Huwaynī, Abū Ishāq 326 Ibādī perspective on the Sahīhayn 14 Ibn Abān, 'Īsā (d. 221/836) 75, 147, 184 Ibn 'Abbās, Abdallāh 53 Ibn 'Abd al-Barr, Abū Yūsuf 'Umar (d. 463/1070) 163n38, 215, 278, 296; Kitāb al-tamhīd of 150; methodology and goals of his Kitāb al-tamhīd 231-232, 234 Ibn 'Abd al-Salām, al-Izz (d. 660/ 1261-2) 216, 254 Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb, M. (d. 1792) 318, 322; rebuttals of 329n102; relationship with al-Ṣanʿānī 310; teachers of 308; 309

- Ibn Abī al-Wafā', Abū M. 'Abd al-Qādir (d. 775/1374) life and work 235, 320–321, 333; attitude towards the Şahīhayn canon 238–239; categorical rejection of Şahīhayn canonical culture 303–304
- Ibn Abī Hātim, 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. M. (d. 317/938) 64, 85, 91, 127, 147; Jarḥ wa al-ta'dīl of 65, 87–88; on al-Bukhārī and Muslim 66, 88; madhhab allegiance of 137, 139, 141; plagiarism of his Jarḥ wa al-ta'dīl 97; writings on the Jahmiyya 77
- Ibn Abī Shayba, Abū Bakr (d. 235/ 849) 89, 107
- Ibn Abī Yaʿlā, Abū al-Ḥusayn M. al-Ḥanbalī (d. 525/1131) 71, 141, 196
- Ibn 'Adī, Abū Aḥmad 'Abdallāh al-Jurjānī (d. 365/975–6) 86, 91, 93, 123–124; life and works 128–129; book on al-Bukhārī's teachers 65, 122; on al-Bukhārī's life 66–67; portrayal of al-Bukhārī in his Kāmil 89
- Ibn al-Akhram, Abū 'Abdallāh M. b. Ya'qūb (d. 344/955) 77, 126, 128, 172
- Ibn al-'Arabī, Abū Bakr M. b. 'Abdallāh (d. 543/1148) 166, 233–234
- Ibn al-Athīr, Majd al-Dīn al-Mubārak b M. (d. 606/1210) 63, 166; Jami^c al-uşūl of 337; vision of history of hadīth collection 352
- Ibn al-Athram, Abū Jaʿfar M. (d. 301/ 913–14) 200
- Ibn al-Farrā', Abū Ya'lā M. b. al-Ḥusayn al-Ḥanbalī (d. 458/1066) life and works 191–192; use of Ṣahīhayn in takhrīj 223–224
- Ibn al-'Imād, 'Abd al-Ḥayy b. Aḥmad (d. 1089/1679) 277, 304
- Ibn al-Jabbāb (d. 322/934) 60
- Ibn al-Jārūd, Abū M. 'Abdallāh b. 'Alī al-Naysābūrī (d. 307/919–20) 105, 123, 150; Muntaqā of 105, 226
- Ibn al-Jawzī, Abū al-Faraj 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Alī (d. 597/1200) 81, 90, 96, 138, 213, 252, 293, 333, 340, 356; Muntazam of 17, 159, 175–177, 370; criticism of al-Ghazālī 354; on al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's

418 requirements 169; opinion on Musnad Ahmad 230

- Ibn al-Jazarī, M. b. M. (d. 833/1429) 342
- Ibn al-Jiʿābī, M. b. ʿUmar (d. 355/ 966) 155
- Ibn al-Mubārak, 'Abdallāh (d. 181/ 797) 73–74
- Ibn al-Mudhhib, al-Hasan b. 'Alī
- (d. 444/1052–3) 62n45
- Ibn al-Mundhir, M. b. Ibrāhīm (d. 318/ 930–1) 217n23
- Ibn al-Muraḥḥal, Ṣadr al-Dīn M. (d. 716/1317) 303–304, 333
- Ibn al-Nadīm, Abū al-Faraj M. b. Ishāq (d. after 385–8/995–8) 90; Fihrist of 65; portrayal of al-Bukhārī and Muslim in the Fihrist 89
- Ibn al-Qațțān, Abū al-Husayn 'Alī b. M. al-Fāsī (d. 628/1231) 70n74, 163n38
- Ibn al-Salāh, Abū 'Amr 'Uthmān b. 'Abd al-Rahmān (d. 643/1245) 83, 140, 198, 215, 257–258, 281, 290, 291, 296, 302-3, 316, 320, 329; debate with al-'Izz b. 'Abd al-Salām 216; as seminal contributor to hadīth tradition 283; Muqaddima of 312; commentary on his Muqaddima 314; opinion on requirement for isnāds in using hadīth 64n50; call for end of authenticating hadīths 244-246; criticism of al-Ghazalī 354; defense of canonical culture 284–285; moratorium on criticizing the Sahīhayn 300–301; rebuttal of criticisms of the Sahīhayn 293-294; application of Principle of Charity to Muslim's Sahih 288, 294; role in the Sahīhayn canonical culture 263; on criticized transmitters in the Sahihayn 250; rebuttal of those who favor Muslim over al-Bukhārī 279; use of Sahihayn in fatwas of 246; opinion on the epistemological value of the Sahīhayn 253–254; reactions to his claims about the Sahīhayn 245–255; final scale for takhrīj 213-214; takhrīj of the Muwatta' 232
- Ibn al-Saqqā' (d. 371/981–2) 160 Ibn al-Thaljī, M. b. Shujā' (d. 265/
- 879) 364

- Ibn al-Turkumānī, 'Alī b. 'Uthmān (d. 747/1347) 235–236
- Ibn al-Wazīr, M. b. Ibrāhīm (d. 840/1436) 214, 314
- Ibn 'Ammār, Abū al-Fadl al-Shahīd (d. 317/929–30) 115, 153, 264, 282, 293; criticism of Muslim's *Şaḥī*_l 117
- Ibn 'Aqīl, Abū al-Wafā' 'Alī (d. 513/ 1119) 224
- Ibn 'Asākir, 'Alī b. al-Hasan (d. 571/ 1176) 219, 278, 281; biography of al-Bukhārī 67; on al-Ghazālī 356; Tārīkh madīnat Dimashq of 322
- Ibn 'Asākir, Abū al-Husayn Hibatallāh (d. 563/1167–68) 292
- Ibn Bābawayh, M. b. 'Alī (d. 381/ 991) 227
- Ibn Barhān, Aḥmad b. 'Alī (d. 518/ 1124) 250–241; rejection of status of the Ṣaḥīḥayn 253
- Ibn Bațta, Ubayallāh b. M. (d. 387/ 997) 62n45
- Ibn Daqīq al-Īd, M. b. 'Alī (d. 702/ 1302) 290, 302, 315
- Ibn Dayba', 'Abd al-Raḥmān b. 'Alī (fl. 900/1500) 280
- Ibn Funduq, Abū al-Hasan ʿAlī al-Bayhaqī (d. 565/1169–70) 61, 370
- Ibn Fūrak, Abū Bakr M. b. Hasan (d. 406/1015) 156, 188, 196, 219; life and works 190
- Ibn Hajar al-'Asqalānī, Abū al-Fadl Aḥmad b. ʿAlī (d. 852/1449) 69, 84n126, 109-110, 182, 193, 212, 245, 258, 259, 280, 284, 286, 291, 296, 297, 302, 315, 316, 320, 341; on ritual usage of Sahīh al-Bukhārī 341; Fath al-bārī of 17, 295; Hady al-sārī of 277; Nukat 'alā kitāb Ibn al-Salāh of 17; criticism of al-Hākim 168, 171-172; definition of sahih hadith 249; evaluation of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 248; rebuttal of al-Dāraqutnī; response to matn criticism 333; role in Sahīhayn canonical culture 263; takhrij of Musnad Ahmad 231
- Ibn Hajar al-Haythamī, Ahmad b. M. (d. 974/1567) 254, 308
- Ibn Hanbal, Abū 'Abdallāh Aḥmad (d. 241/855) 50, 55, 59, 66, 81, 85–91, 147, 196, 242, 266, 351,
 - 363, 365; as über-Sunni 77; role in

Mihna 76; stance on $ijm\bar{a}$ 145, 316; comparison with al-Bukhārī 269; Musnad of 51-52, 132, 139, 220; criticism of his Musnad 230, 333; takhrij of his Musnad 231; transmission of his Musnad 62n45; earliest information on stance on the lafz issue 79; various attributed stances on the lafz 78n105; position on the nature of the Qur'ān 138; figh of 366; 'ilal of 140; Kitāb al-masā'il of 139; legal opinions 139; Radd 'alā al-zanādiga wa of al-jahmiyya of 75; opinion on the top hadīth scholars of his day 86-87; study of 'ilal 52; use of weak hadīths 53n11, 59n35

- Ibn Hazm Abū M. 'Alī b. Ahmad (d. 456/1064) 158n19, 279, 297; evaluation of the Muwatta' 231; hadīth collections of 56n24; ranking of hadīth collections 214n13; rating of the Ṣaḥīḥayn 376
- Ibn Hibbān, Abū Hātim M. al-Bustī (d. 354/965) 91, 147; Kitāb al-majrūhān of 65, 88; Şahāh of 56, 212; reason for exclusion of his Şahāh from the canon 152, 361–362; vision of history 350; view of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 88
- Ibn Jamāʿa, Badr al-Dīn (d. 733/ 1333) 254, 317
- Ibn Jurayj (d. 150/767) 51, 357
- Ibn Kathīr, 'Imād al-Dīn Ismā'īl b. Abī Hafş (d. 774/1373) 82n119, 152, 254, 297; on ritual use of Ṣaḥīḥ al-Bukhārī 341; political ritual of the Ṣaḥīḥayn 344
- Ibn Khalfūn, Abū Bakr M. b. Ismāʻīl (d. 636/1238–9) 122n69
- Ibn Khuzayma, M. b. Ishāq (d. 311/ 923) 56, 123–124, 127, 128, 130, 143, 290; Sahīh of 124, 212; evaluation of his Sahīh 9n7, 151; status of his Sahīh 148; reason for exclusion of his Sahih from the canon 361–362; important position 125; role in hadīth canon 11; of mustakhraj of his Sahīh 105; opinion of al-Bukhārī 86; opinion on 'Alī b. Abī Ţālib 160; role in the Shāfi'ī school 138-140; study of transmitters used in his Sahīh 151n183

Ibn Māhān 131

- Ibn Maʿīn, Yaḥyā (d. 233/847) 55, 66, 87, 88, 90, 147, 269; role in Miḥna 76
- Ibn Mājah, M. b. Yazīd (d. 273/887) Sunan of 314, 323; status of his Sunan 216–217; weak hadīths in his Sunan 332
- Ibn Manda, M. b. Ishāq (d. 395/ 1004–5) 124, 141, 172, 269, 352; interpretation of al-Bukhārī's and Muslim's requirements 166; definition of the hadīth canon 9n7; study of al-Bukhārī's teachers 122; vision of the hadīth tradition 148–149
- Ibn Manjawayh, Abū Bakr Ahmad b. 'Alī al-Işbahānī (d. 428/1036–7) 122
- Ibn Mardawayh, Abū Bakr Aḥmad b. Mūsā (d. 416/1025–6) 135
- Ibn Nāșir al-Dīn al-Dimashqī (d. 846/ 1438) 281
- Ibn Nuqta, Abū Bakr M. b. 'Abd al-Ghanī (d. 629/1231) 289
- Ibn Qayyim al-Jawziyya, Shams al-Dīn M. (d. 750/1351) 118, 313; use of the Şaḥīḥayn canon 224–225, 313
- Ibn Qudāma, Muwaffaq al-Dīn 'Abdallāh b. Aḥmad (d. 620/1223) 230
- Ibn Qutayba, 'Abdallāh b. Muslim (d. 276/889) 50, 77, 193n156
- Ibn Rāhawayh, Ishāq (d. 238/853) 66, 81, 87–91; comparison with al-Bukhārī 269; opinion on Muslim 86; praise of in Naysābūr 125–126; role in composition of Şahīh al-Bukhārī 276–278
- Ibn Rumayh Abū Saʿīd Ahmad (d. 357/ 967–8) 131
- Ibn Rushayd, M. b. 'Umar (d. 721/ 1321) 70n74, 292n100
- Ibn Sa'd, Abū 'Abdallāh M. (d. 230/ 845) 51; Kitāb al-tabaqāt of 52
- Ibn Shāhīn, Abū Ḥafş ʿUmar b. Aḥmad (d. 385/996) 142
- Ibn Sīrīn, M. (d. 110/728) 64n50
- Ibn Sufyān 140
- Ibn Surayj, Abū al-Abbās Ahmad b. 'Umar (d. 306/918) 125, 139, 143; stance on ijmā^c 145
- Ibn Țāwūs, Radī al-Dīn (d. 664/1226) 229

- Ibn Taymiyya, Taqī al-Dīn Ahmad (d. 728/1328) 152, 184n117, 198, 254, 278, 320, 322, 356; criticism of 325; evaluation of al-Bukhārī 248; matn criticism by 333; use of Şaḥīḥayn in takhrīj 224–225, 313; role as inspiration of Salafī movements 312–313
- Ibn 'Uqda, Abū al-'Abbās Aḥmad b. Sa'īd (d. 332/944) 127, 150, 273 Ibn Ūrama, Abū Isḥāq b. Ibrāhīm
- (d. 266/880) 87 Ibn Wabb (Abdallāb (d. 197/813)
- Ibn Wahb, 'Abdallāh (d. 197/813) 234
- Ibn Wāra, M. b. Muslim al-Rāzī (d. 270/884) 91–94
- Ibrāhīm al-Nakha'ī (d. 95/714) 49
- Ibrāhīm b. M. b. 'Ar'ara (d. 231/846) 87
- Ibrāhīm b. Ţahmān (d. 168/784) 161
- Ibrāhīm b. 'Ulayya (d. 218/833) 183n116
- Iconoclasm in the Islamic tradition and hadīth scholarship 301-302
- Ifādat al-nasīh fi al-tā rīf bi-sanad al-Jāmi al-Ṣahīh 292n100
- Ihkām fī usūl al-ahkām 225
- Ihyā' ulūm al-dīn 216, 322
- Ijāza 325—see also Transmission
- $Ijm\bar{a}^{c}$ 324; origins of 144–145; nature of 202–204; affect on proof value of hadīth 145–147, 183–193; as foundation of Sunnism 362; exclusion of Shiites from 203
- Ijtihād 309
- Ikhtilāf al-fuqahā' 113
- Ikhtilāf al-lafz wa al-radd 'alā al-Jahmiyya 77
- Ikhtilāf bayn ruwāt al-Bukhārī 'an al-Firabrī wa riwāyat al-Nasafī 292n100
- 'Ilal-see Hadith criticism
- 'Ilal, book of 156
- Iliad-see Homer
- Ilm muktasab 185
- 'Ilm, definition of 49
- Ilzāmāt 115, 205; discussion of 118–120
- Imrān b. Hittān 116, 118, 250, 287
- India, hadīth study in 376-377
- Ingițā 115
- Intense canonical process 144-151
- Irāqī, Zayn al-Dīn 'Abd al-Rahīm b. al-Husayn (d. 806/1404) 152, 168, 212, 235, 237, 245, 247, 254, 258,

290, 292, 296, 297, 314; criticism al-Ghazālī's use of ḥadīth 321–322; on tadlīs in the Ṣaḥāḥayn 286; application of the Principle of Charity 286; opinion on Musnad Aḥmad 230

- Irenaeus 39, 41-42
- Işbahānī, Abū Nu'aym Ahmad b. 'Abdallāh (d. 430/1038) 62–63, 127, 133, 218; collection of Abū Hanīfa's hadīth 60; anti-Shiite polemic of 111; as student of al-Hākim 158; mustakhraj of 104, 108, 111–112, 135; rebuttal of
 - Muʿtazilites concerning ḥadīths
 - 177–178; theological creed of 143; use of hadīth in Shiite polemic 146;
 - use of Sahīhayn in takhrīj 221
- Isfahan, importance in the study of the Sahīhayn 134
- Isfarāyīnī, Abū Hāmid (d. 406/1016) 133, 134, 139, 143
- Isfarāyīnī, Abū Ishāq Ibrāhīm b. M. (d. 418/1027) 156, 194–196, 202, 209, 219, 253, 364, 366, 375; life and work 188–190; as polymath 241; on requirement for *isnād*s in using hadīth 64n50; stance on ijmā^c 145
- Ishbīlī, Abū Bakr M. Ibn Khayr (d. 575/1179) 63, 81n115
- Ismā'īl, Mawlā (Alawid ruler) (d. 1727) 345
- Ismā'īlī, Abū Bakr Ahmad (d. 371/ 981–2) 104, 129, 150, 153, 161, 214; life and works of 109–111; opinion on the Şahūhayn 130; importance of his mustakhraj 129
- Ismā'īlism—see Fātimids
- Isnād criticism—see Hadīth criticism
- Isnād, importance of elevation ('uluww) in 107; role in religion 45; role of books in 62; function and importance of the living isnād 60–64, 91, 107;—see also Transmission
- Iştakhrī, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Sa'īd (d. 404/1014) 180n108
- Iyād b. Mūsā, al-Qādī (d. 544/1149), work on al-Bukhārī's requirements for authenticity 70; evaluation of the Muwatta' 234, 278–279

Jābir b. Abdallāh 285

Jahāla (unknown transmitter) 163

- Jāḥiẓ, Abū 'Uthmān 'Amr b.
- Bahr (d. 255/869), hadīth requirements of 179; on authority
- of ḥadīth 146n168
- Jahmiyya 74, 77
- Jam' bayn al-Ṣaḥīḥayn 229
- Jāmi' al-kabīr 336n4
- Jamnia, Council of (ca. 90 CE) 35
- Jaşşāş, Abū Bakr Ahmad (d. 370/982) 109, 184, 186; stance on authority of hadīth 147
- Jawzaqī, Abū Bakr M. b. 'Abdallāh (d. 388/998) combined collection of the Şahīḥayn (al-Muttafaq) 84; format of his mustakhraj 218
- Jayyānī, Abū 'Alī al-Ḥusayn b. M. (d. 498/1105) 122n69, 132, 292n100, 293, 333, 340; criticism of the Ṣahīḥayn 291; interpretation of al-Ḥākim's requirements 165; role in ḥadīth canon 376
- Jazā'irī, Ţāhir (d. 1920) 252, 310, 322; stance on matn criticism 333; Tauyīh al-nazar ilā uşūl al-athar of 311
- Josiah (King of Israel) 26, 99
- Jubbā'ī, Abū 'Alī (d. 303/915/6) 179, 182
- Julūdī (d. 368/979) 136
- Jurjān 135; location and importance 128–129
- Juwaynī, Imām al-Haramayn 'Abd al-Mālik (d. 478/1085) 194, 196, 219, 253, 364, 366, 375; life and works 200–201; criticism of the Şahīhayn 258–259; Kītāb al-burhān of 17; on requirement of isnāds for using hadīths 63–64; opinion on al-Sijzī 202
- Juwaynī, Abū Muḥammad (d. 438/ 1047) 168
- Juynboll, G.H.A. 52n10
- $\mathcal{J}uz'$ (fascicule), definition and size of 61n39
- Kaʿbī—see al-Balkhī, Abū al-Qāsim
- Kalābādhī, Abū Naṣr Aḥmad (d. 398/ 1008) 122, 131, 134, 385
- Kalām 311, 358
- Kāmil fī du'afā' al-rijāl—see Ibn 'Adī
- Kanòn—see Canon
- Kanòn tès alètheias-see Canon
- Karābīsī, al-Husayn (d. 245/859) 71

- Karkhī, Abū al-Hasan 'Ubaydallāh b. al-Husayn (d. 340/952) 136, 252; view on hadīth 185–187
- Karrāmiyya 188–190
- Kashf al-asrār 227
- Kattānī, 'Abd al-Kabīr b. M. (d. 1914–15) 348
- Kattānī, M. b. Ja'far (d. 1927) 105
- Kemyā-ye saʿādat 355
- Kermode, Frank 21, 24, 25, 36, 41–43, 46, 144
- Ketāb-e nagd 228, 373
- Khalīlī, Abū Ya'lā al-Khalīl b. 'Abdallāh (d. 446/1054) 370; life and works 218–219; definition of shādhdh hadīth 249; Irshād fī ma'rifat 'ulamā' al-hadīth of 17; opinion of al-Hākim 158–159
- Khallāl, Abū Bakr al-Ḥanbalī (d. 311/ 923–4) 140
- Khallāl, Abū M. al-Ḥasan b. M. (d. 439/1047) 133
- Khalq af āl al-ibād—see al-Bukhārī
- Khan, Sir Sayyid Ahmad (d. 1898) 305–306
- khāṣṣa 57
- Khatīb al-Baghdādī, Ahmad b. 'Alī (d. 463/1071) 86, 90, 119, 130, 132, 136, 159, 163, 214-215, 282, 284, 286-287, 302, 332-223, 340, 371; opinion on Ibn Khuzayma's Sahīh 56n21; opinion on requirement for isnāds in using hadīth 64n50; Tārīkh Baghdād of 17, 87; role as editor in Tārīkh Baghdād 268; Tārīkh Baghdad in Andalusia 376; apology for criticizing al-Bukhārī 266; categorization of hadīth 252-253; conflict with the Hanbalīs 267; defection from the Hanbalī school 138; study of Sahīh al-Bukhārī 339; dependence of later biographies of al-Bukhārī and Muslim on him 274; use of the Sahīhayn for takhrīj 221; importance of the Sahihayn in hadith curriculum 221; discussion of using criticized transmitters 250; foundational role in hadīth tradition 288–289; Kītāb mūdih awhām al-jam' wa al-tafrīq 265-266; Mu^ctazilite teachers of of 179; reliance on al-Hākim as a source 65, 274; reliance on al-Hākim in his Tārīkh Baghdād 158; requirements for a muftā 243; role in the Ṣahīḥayn canonical culture 263–275; use of living isnāds 370

- Khatm (crescendo of reading) 339
- Khattābī, Abū Sulaymān Hamd (d. 388/988) 110, 118; life, works and study of Şahīh al-Bukhārī 134; opinion of Abū Dāwūd's Sunan and al-Bukhārī's Şahīh 149; vision of history 351
- Khațțābiyya 250
- Khilāf 116
- Khilāțī, Muḥammad b. 'Abbād (d. 652/ 1254) 226
- Khiraqī, Abū al-Qāsim 'Umar b. al-Ḥusayn (d. 334/946) 140, 191, 230
- Khurāsān, definition and major cities of 48n1
- Kh^wāje 'Abdallāh al-Anṣārī al-Harawī (d. 481/1089) 159, 219, 352–354
- Kifāya fī ilm uşūl al-riwāya 215
- Kirmānī, M. b. Yūsuf (d. 786/1384) 341, 348
- Kītāb al-ajwiba 'ammā ashkala al-Dāraqutnī 'alā Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim 132
- Kitāb al-asmā' wa al-şifāt 220
- Kitāb al-burhān 201
- Kitāb al-du'afā' al-kabīr—see al-Uqaylī
- Kitāb al-du'afā' wa ajwibatuhu 'alā as'ilat al-Bardha'ī—see Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī
- Kitāb al-faqīh wa al-mutafaqqih 252
- Kitāb al-hudūd fī al-uşūl 190
- Kitāb al-ibāna 197-198
- Kītāb al-Iklīl 156
- Kitāb al-'ilal of al-Dāraqutnī 131
- Kitāb al-'ilal of Ibn Hanbal 78n102
- Kitāb al-ilzāmāt 157
- Kītāb al-imāma wa al-radd 'alā al-rāfiḍa 112
- Kitāb al-majrūhīn—see Ibn Hibbān
- Kitāb al-masā'il 139
- Kitāb al-ma'ūna fī al-jadal 210
- Kitāb al-mawdūʿāt 293
- Kitāb al-mulakhkhaş 193, 232n69
- Kītāb al-mu'tamad 187, 223
- Kītāb al-sunna 133
- Kitāb al-tamhīd—see Ibn 'Abd al-Barr
- Kitāb al-tamyīz-see Muslim
- Kitāb ghurar al-fawā'id al-majmū'a fi bayān mā waqa'a fi Şahīh Muslim min al-ahādīth al-maqtū'a 294

- Kitāb tahdhīb al-āthār—see al-Ţabarī
- Kitāt al-ilzāmāt wa al-tatabbu^c 131
- Kūkhmaythanī, M. b. al-Ḥasan (d. 491/ 1098) 56n24
- Kulaynī, M. b. Ya'qūb (d. 329/ 940) 227
- Kurānī, Ibrāhīm b. Hasan (d. 1101/ 1689) 308
- Kurdī, Abū Ţāhir b. Ibrāhīm
- (d. 1732–33) 321 Kushmīhanī 121, 141
- Left of the Original interaction 74, 91
- Lafz of the Quran issue 74–81, 141, 220
- Laknawī, M. 'Abd al-Hayy (d. 1886–87) 162n36, 164n42; criticism of Şahīhayn 256
- Lālakā'ī, Abū al-Qāsim Hibatallāh b. al-Hasan (d. 418/1027–8) 119, 143; life and study of the Şahāhayn 133; use of Şahāhayn for takhrāj 218
- Layth b. Sa'd (d. 175/791) 285
- Levering, Miriam 25
- Levinson, Sanford 28
- Long Fourth Century 102
- Lucas, Scott C. 51
- Ma'mūn (caliph) 76
- Madhhab Traditionalists 305, 307; criticism of al-Albānī 324
- Madhhabs 135–138—see also Hanbalī, Shāfiʿī, Mālikī, Hanafī madhhab
- Madkhal ilā al-Iklīl—see al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī
- Madkhal ilā al-Ṣaḥīḥ—see al-Ḥākim al-Naysābūrī
- Madkhal ilā al-Sunan al-kubrā 219
- Madrasa 138, 339; curriculum of 368-369
- Mafhūm al-kalām 259
- Maḥāmilī, Abū 'Abdallāh al-Husayn b.
- Ismā'īl (d. 330/942) 90
- Maḥmūd al-Ghaznavī 188
- Majelle Law Code 323
- Makānat al-Ṣaḥīḥayn 14, 328
- Makdisi, George 77, 136, 372
- Makkī, Abū al-Zubayr M. b. Muslim (d. 126/743-44) 285, 326
- Malațī, Yūsuf b. Mūsā (d. 803/ 1400–01) 304
- Mālik b. Anas (d. 179/796) 9n7, 35n55, 49, 51, 81, 82, 88, 89, 198,

269, 282; as part of hadith canon 9n7;-see also Muwatta Mālikī Madhhab 368; role in canonization of the Sahihayn 137; use of Sahīhayn in takhrīj 225-226; view on proof value of hadith 193 Mālikshāh 373 Mamdūh, Mahmūd Sa'īd 327-329 Mamluk Cairo 321 Mamluks, madhhab of 235 Manār (journal) 321–322 Mankhūl min ta līgāt al-uşūl 259 Maqdisī, 'Abd al-Ghanī (d. 600/1203) 104n7 Maqdisī, Abū al-Fadl M. b. Ţāhir (d. 507/1113) 159, 167, 287, 352; definition of the hadīth canon 9n7; evaluation of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 248; study of transmitters of the Sahīhayn 122n69; use of hadīth in his Safwat al-tasawwuf 212; work on the requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 166 Maqdisī, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Mufaddal (d. 611/1214) 288 Marcion the Gnostic 39-40 Marghīnānī, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. Abī Bakr (d. 593/1196-7) 236 Māridīnī, Jamāl al-Dīn 236 Marīyyī, al-Muhallab b. Abī Şufra Ahmad (d. 435/1044) 376 Marjānī, Abū M. 348 Marrakesh 343, 344 Marwarzī, Abū 'Abdallāh M. b. Nasr (d. 294/906) 67–68, 113, 139, 143; Kitāb al-sunna of 139n141 Marwaziyya, Karīma 141 Marzubānī, M. b. 'Imrān (d. 384/ 994) 179 Māsarjisī, al-Hasan b. M. (d. 365/ 976) 61, 128, 173; mustakhraj of the Sahīhayn 126 Mashāriq al-anwār—see al-Ṣaghānī Mashhūr-see Hadīth Maslama b. Qāsim al-Qurțubī (d. 353/ 964) 94-96 Māwardī, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. M. (d. 450/1058) 222 Mawşilī, Abū al-Hafş 'Umar b. Badr (d. 622/1225) 226 Maymūna 314 Mayyānishī, 'Umar b. 'Abd al-Majīd (d. 583/1187) 168-169, 213

Māzarī, Abū 'Abdallāh M. b. 'Alī (d. 536/1141) 282, 291, 293-294, 333, 354 Melchert, Christopher 68, 77–79, 136, 138 - 139Menzies, Allan 22, 46, 33 Meri, Joseph 346 Metzger, Bruce 23, 40 Mihna (Inquisition) 76-77 Mingana, Alphonse 384–385 Misbāh fī 'uyūn ahādīth al-sihāh 104n7 Mishna 27, 107 Mīzān al-i tidāl fī nagd al-rijāl 290 Mizjājī, 'Abd al-Khāliq b. Abī Bakr (d. 1786-7) 167 Mizzī, Jamāl al-Dīn Yūsuf b. al-Zakī (d. 742/1341) 61n39, 356; on tadlis in the Sahihayn; application of the Principle of Charity 286 Modern Period, movements of revival and reform in 305–314 Modernism, Islamic 305-306 Modernity 305 Montanism 27, 41 Moses 74, 225 Mottahedeh, Roy 374 Muʿādh b. Jabal 201 Muʿāwiya 159 Mubtadi'a (heretics) 175–177 Mufti, different requirements for 241 - 243Mughulțāy, 'Alā' al-Dīn 'Abdallāh (d. 762/1361) 235, 233n75, 304 Muhaddith al-fādil—see al-Rāmahurmuzī Muhaddith-see Hadīth scholar M. b. al-Hasan b. Abī al-Fadl (d. 630/ 1232-33) 293 Mujaddadī, Sirāj Ahmad (d. 1815) 377 Mu'jam al-kabīr—see al-Ṭabarānī Mu'jam al-sahāba-see al-Baghawī, Abū al-Qāsim Mujarrad maqālāt al-Ash'arī 190 Mukhtasar al-Khiraqī 140, 191 Mukhtaşar al-Muzanī—see al-Muzanī Mulhid (atheist) 173n75 Mullā 'Alī b. Sultān al-Qārī al-Harawī (d. 1014/1606) 118, 308, 348; as example of eclectic Sunnism 365; on al-Ghazālī 356; on origins of al-Bukhārī's Sahīh 277; on ritual usage of Sahīh al-Bukhārī 342 Mullā Khāţir, Khalīl 14, 254, 328–330

- Mundhirī, 'Abd al-'Azīm (d. 656/
- 1258) 326

Muntazam—see Ibn al-Jawzī

- Musannaf-see Hadith collection
- Muslim b. al-Hajjāj, Abū al-Husayn al-Naysābūrī (d. 261/875) life and works 81-82; early biographies of 64-65; early evaluation of 128; attitude towards ahl al-ra'y 84; canonical depiction of conflict with al-Dhuhlī 273, 281–282; involvement in the lafz issue 85; division of society 57; his methodology according to al-Hakim 174; Kitāb al-tamyīz of 82; legal approach of 84; meeting with Abū Zur'a al-Rāzī 280-282; opinion of hadīth scholarship in his time 58; praise of in Navsābūr 125; showing his Sahīh to leading scholars of author's time 93n159; source of income 81; stance on 'an'an hadīth 82; stance on jahāla 163; subordination to al-Bukhārī in canonical culture 272; view on use of hadīth in law 54
- Musnad-see Hadith collection
- Mustadrak-see al-Hākim al-Naysābūrī
- Mustakhraj, definition of and motivation for 104-106; of al-Tirmidhī's Jāmi 150; of Sahih Ibn Khuzayma 150; of Abū Dāwūd's Sunan 150; of Ibn al-Jārūd's Muntaqā 150; of Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim-see Sahīh Muslim; of Sahīh al-Bukhārī—see Sahīh al-Bukhārī; of the Sahīhayn—see Sahīhayn
- Mustalahāt al-hadīth (technical terms of hadīth criticism)—see Hadīth
- Mustamlī, Abū Ishāq al-Balkhī (d. 376/986-7) 121, 385
- Mustasfā 259
- Mu'tazilism 136, 138, 146, 196, 305, 363; early history of 178-180; hadīth scholarship among 179–180; requirements for hadīth 165, 175–181; Sunni criticism of 177; role in Mihna 76-77; view on effect of $ijm\bar{a}$ on hadīth 187; views on the Sahīhayn 177–178
- Muttafaq—see al-Jawzaqī Muwațta' 9, 62, 71, 81, 195n159, 215, 226, 245, 320; composition of 51n6; as basis for Sahīhayn 231-232, 234; early evaluations of 233; number of Prophetic hadīths in 232n69; question of its superiority to the

- Sahīhayn 278; recensions of 35n55; relation to sahih books 150
- Muzakkī, Ibrāhīm b. M. (d. 362/
- 973) 127, 131
- Muzanī, Abū Ibrāhīm Ismāʿīl (d. 264/ 878) 78, 113, 125, 139, 143, 266, 332; Mukhtasar of 129, 134, 139-140, 143, 366
- Nadir Shah 318
- Najjād, Abū Bakr al-Baghdādī (d. 348/ 959-60) 141
- Najmī, Moḥammad Ṣādeq 14
- Naqd Kitāb al-Sijzī 203
- Narration-see Hadith
- Nasā'ī, Abū 'Abd al-Rahmān Ahmad b. Shu'avb (d. 303/915) 9, 55, 55n18, 89, 160, 246-247, 352, 357; comparison with al-Bukhārī and Muslim 213; criticism of al-Bukhārī 93, 267; stance on jahāla 163; status of his Sunan 148: Sunan of 323, 337, 337; khatm of his Sunan 339
- Nasafī, Abū Barakāt 'Abdallāh b. Ahmad (d. 710/1310) 238
- Nasafī, Abū Muțī Makhūl (d. 318/ 930) 237
- Nasafī, Ibrāhīm b. Ma'qil (d. 295/ 907-8) 121, 276, 376, 385
- Nāsirī, Abū al-'Abbās Ahmad (d. 1897) 345
- Nasr b. Ahmad al-Kindī 'Nasrak' (d. 293/905-6) 68
- Nawawī, Muḥyī al-Dīn Abū Yaḥyā Zakariyyā (d. 676/1277) 245, 255, 280, 291, 294, 296, 300, 303, 313, 316-317, 320, 329, 357; application of Principle of Charity to Muslim's Sahih 288-290; criticism of Sahih Muslim 296; defense of canonical culture 285; definition of hadīth canon 9n7; evaluation of the authenticity of the Sahīhayn 247; on the origins of Sahih al-Bukhārī 276–278; rebuttal of al-Dāraquțnī 295; role in the Sahīhayn canonical culture 263; use of Sahihayn in fatwās 246-247
- Naysābūr, importance in Islamic scholarship 124-128; study of the Sahīhayn in 135
- Naysābūrī, Abū Bakr al-Hasan 136 New Testament 99

Night of Power (laylat al-qadar) 339, 342, 343 Nihāyat al-maţlab fī dirāyat al-madhhab 201 Nizām al-Dīn Awliyā' (d. 725/1325) 377 Nizām al-Mulk, al-Hasan b. 'Alī (d. 485/1092) xviii, 3-4; 353,372; hadīth activities of xviii, 3; religious leanings of - 3 Nizāmiyya colleges, purpose and charter of 3 Occidentalist (mustaghrib) 307 Odyssey-see Homer Oral Torah 27 Orality in transmission-see Transmission Orthodoxy, Sunni 18; formation of 4-5;-see also Sunnism Pagels, Elaine 40 Paul, letters of 99 Persian poetry, canon of 40Poetics-see Aristotle Positionality, problem of 18 Praver, causes of invalidation of 113-114 Principle of Charity 30, 42–46, 262, 283, 291; in language 43, in literature 43; application to tadlīs in the Sahīhayn 285–286; application to the transmitters in the Sahihayn 286 - 291Prophet Muhammad, as locus of blessing 346–349; prayer upon 347–348; early explanation of prayers upon 347n51 Public Reading of texts 338-339 Punishment of the grave ('adhāb al-gabr) 75, 220 Qābisī, Abū al-Hasan 'Alī b. M. (d. 403/1012) 232n69, 376 Qādirī creed 175-176, 372-373 Qalʿajī, ʿAbd al-Muʿṭī Amīn 290 Qāmūs shatā'im al-Albānī 325 Qa'nabī, 'Abdallāh b. Maslama (d. 220-1/835-6) 81 Qanūbī, Saʿīd b. Mabrūk 14 Qāsim b. Aşbagh, Abū M. (d. 340/ 951) 137, 375; mustakhraj of 106 Qāsim b. M. b. Abī Bakr 48 Qāsimī, Jamāl al-Dīn (d. 1914) 310; Qawā'id al-taḥdīth of 311

Qatan b. Nusayr 92 Qațī[°]ī, Aḥmad b. Mālik (d. 368/979) 62n45, 132, 139 Qawārīrī, 'Ubaydallāh b. 'Umar (d. 235/849) Qazvīnī, Nāşir al-Dīn Abū al-Rashīd b. Abd al-Jalīl (d.ca. 560/1165) 227-228, 373; Ketāb-e nagd of 17 Qazwīnī, al-Hassān b. M. (d. 344/955) 85 Qī'ī, M. 152 Qiyās 72, 73n85 Qubūl al-akhbār—see Balkhī, Abū al-Qāsim Qur'ān, canonization of 35 Qushayrī, Abū al-Qāsim 'Abd al-Karīm (d. 465/1072) 62-63, 188; as Sunni 365 Rabī^c b. Sulaymān al-Murādī (d. 270/ 883) 113, 125, 139, 143 Radd 'alā al-zanādiga wa al-jahmiyya—see Ibn Hanbal Rāfi'ī, 'Abd al-Karīm b. M. (d. 623/ 1226) 340 definition of the hadīth canon 9n7 Rāfi'ī, M. b. 'Abd al-Karīm (d. 580/ 1184) definition of hadīth canon 9n7 Rāmahurmizī, al-Hasan b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān (d. 360/970–1) 88, 142, 269; mentioning al-Bukhārī's al-Tārīkh al-kabīr 97 Rashīd al-Dīn al-Ţabīb (d. 718/1318) 36-37, 337 Rayy 91, 93 Religious capital 63 Requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim 119, 149; books on 157; in the scholarship of al-Hākim 162-172; final word on al-Hakim's interpretation of 170; according to al-Bayhaqī 169–170; according to al-Hāzimī 166: according to Ibn al-'Arabī 166; according to al-Mayyānishī 168–169; according to Ibn al-Athīr 166-167; according to Ibn al-Jawzī 169; according to Ibn Manda 166; according to al-Maqdisī 166; according to 'Abd al-Khāliq al-Mizjājī 167; use in takhrīj of hadīths 212-213, 236 Revival and Reform movements 305-314

426

Rhianus of Crete 100

- Ridā, Rashīd (d. 1935) 305, 311, 321
- Rifā'ī, Yūsuf Hāshim 213
- Risāla fī wasl al-balāghāt al-arba 232
- Ritual, calendrical 342-344; political 344-346; supplicatory and medicinal 340-342 Robinson, Lilian S. 27
- Sa'dī, 'Abd al-Rahmān b. 'Abdallāh (d. after 1065/1655-6) 343 Sa'dian Dynasty 344
- Safwat al-tasawwuf 212
- Şaghānī, al-Hasan b. M. (d. 650/ 1252) 376-377; as editor of Sahih al-Bukhārī 384; definition of the hadīth canon 9n7; works on the Sahīhayn 226
- Şāhib b. 'Abbād (d. 385/995) 109 Sahīh al-Bukhārī, various stories of its origins 276-278; earliest mention of 96n171; textual authenticity of 384-386; plagiarism of 94-96; commentaries on 134, 376, 377; mustakhrajs of 129-130, 331; differences 135; mukhtaşar of 385-386; in recensions of editing of 121, 384; matn criticism of 110; Ibn Hajar's rebuttal of criticism of 295; structure and number of hadīths in 69-74; studies on Bukhārī's transmitters 122–123; transmission of 141; differences in transmissions of 121: unknown transmitters in 123;-see also Şahīhayn
- Sahīh al-musnad al-mukharraj 'alā Sahīh Muslim 113
- Sahīh Muslim, structure of 83; textual authenticity of 384-386; number of hadīths in 83-84; early evaluation of 127; early responses to 91–94; first *mustakhraj*s of 126; transmission of 140–141; geographical limitation of its transmission 142; matn criticism of 296; criticism of isnāds in 162; commentary on 376, 377; mukhtasar of 326; study of Muslim's transmitters 122; scholars who preferred it to Sahih al-Bukhārī 279; translation of 377; application of Principle of Charity to its transmitters 288, 294; al-Nawawī's rebuttal of criticism of 295;-see also Sahīhayn

Sahīh-see Hadīth

Sahīhayn, identification with their authors 268; number of hadīths in 84, 177-178; early evaluation 127, 304; early preference of of one over the other 130; number of shared transmitters in 84: transmission and editors of 292n100; transmitters of 120; studies on the transmitters in 122n69; musnad version of 131; mustakhrajs of 126, 131, 133; ritual functions of 11, 340-346; reason for use in ritual 362, 349; public reading of 4; first use as synecdoche in narrative 352–354; secondary source scholarship on 8-15; mursal hadīths in 251; claims about epistemological status of 253-255; criticism of 11, 300-304; matn criticism of 255-257, 296, 303-304; criticism of as part of transmission process 292n100; criticism of transmitters of 116, 287; criticism and rebuttal of 291-287, 297; Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī criticism of 257-259; and tadlis 283-286; tadlis in 302-303, 318, 326; superiority to the Muwatta' 278: textual authenticity of 384-386; as Canon 1 and Canon 2 - 38; canonical culture of 316, 330; function of its canonical culture 301; application of Principle of Charity to their transmitters 286–291; limits of the authority of 251-260; authority according to al-Ghazālī 211; as final references for scholars 244-246; written in only one volume 353n71; in Andalusia 375-376; in India 376-377; see also Sahīh al-Bukhārī, Sahīh Muslim Sahmī, Abū al-Qāsim Hamza b. Yūsuf (d. 427/1035-6) 130 Sahihayn Network, composition of 140 - 142Saʿīd b. al-Musayyab 49 Sa'īd b. al-Sakan (d. 353/964) 9n7, 55, 120, 153; composition of his Sahīh 148; vision of hadīth tradition

148; definition of the hadīth canon 9n7

- Saʿīd b. Marwān al-Baghdādī 123
- Said, Edward 27

- Sakhāwī, Shams al-Dīn M. b. 'Abd al-Raḥmān (d. 901/1497) 212, 240, 254, 339; Daw' al-lāmi' of 17; on prayer upon the Prophet 348
- Salafi movement 304-314; definition 305; different branches of of Traditionalist Salafis 309–310: historical vision of 309; importance of hadīth in 309; Modernist Salafis 305–314 passim; Traditionalist Salafis 305–314
- Samʿānī, Abū al-Muzaffar Mansūr (d. 489/1096) 194n157, 283; list of reliable hadīth books 242
- Samʿānī, Abū Saʿd ʿAbd al-Karīm (d. 562/1166) 356
- Samarqand 48n1
- Samarqandī, Abū al-Fath Naşr b. al-Hasan (fl. 470/1080) 340
- Samarqandī, Abū al-Layth al-Nasr b. M. (d. 373/983-4 or 393/1002-3) 140n145
- Sammān, Abū Saʿīd Ismāʿīl (d. 434 or 445/1042-3 or 1053-4) 179
- Sanan al-abyan wa al-mawrid al-am'an...see Ibn Rushayd
- San'ānī, M. b. Ismā'īl al-Amīr (d. 1768) 254, 301, 304, 309, 311, life and works 314-318; on Ibn 'Abd al-Wahhāb 310; rejection of the Sahihayn canonical culture 316–318
- Sanders, James 24, 99
- Saggāf, Hasan b. 'Alī 325
- Sarakhsī, M. b. Ahmad (d. ca. 490/1096) 184–186, 237; Kītāb al-mabsūt of 17
- Saraqustī, Ibn Razīn (d. 524/1129) definition of hadīth canon 9n7
- Sarrāj, Abū al-'Abbās (d. 313/925) 77 109, 128; role in Naysābūr 126
- Sayf al-hādd fī al-radd 'alā man akhadha bi-hadīth al-āhād fī masā'il al-i'tiqād 14
- Sayrī dar Sahīhayn: sayr wa barrasī dar do ketāb-e mohemm va madrak-e ahl-e sonnat 14
- Schacht, Joseph 33
- Seljuq State 3-4, 368
- Shadharāt al-dhahab fī akhbār man dhahab 277
- Shādhdh—see Hadīth
- Shāfi'ī Madhhab 132, 367-368; acceptance of al-Bukhārī and Muslim as Sunnis 143; early Shāfi'ī adherents 180n108;

formation of 136-139; major developers of 133; definition of in the 4th/10th century 140; link to Sufism 138n139; role in canonization of the Sahīhayn 135–143; shibboleths of 114; stance on the basmalah 114, 137; criticism of hadīths on the basmalah 296; strife and rivalry with Hanbalī school 4, 191, 203; link to Seljuq state 3

- Shāfi'ī, M. b. Idrīs (d. 204/819-20) 33, 54, 71, 78, 89, 143, 156, 332, 364; division of hadīths 54n14; division of society and knowledge 57; evaluation of the Muwatta' 233; leading students of 113; Shiite leanings 159–160; stance on $ijm\bar{a}^{c}$ 145, 320; Umm of 139; Musnad of 9n7
- Shāfi'ī/Ash'arī orthodoxy 154, 202; founders of 188–191; position on proof value of hadīth 187-191;see also Ash'arism
- Shakespeare, William 29, 247, 360
- Shāmil 201 Shamkhada the Oadarite 67
- Shantarīnī, 'Abdallāh b. Ahmad (d. 522/1128) 122n69
- Sharh al-luma 241
- Sharh al-sunna 141
- Sharh maʿānī al-akhbār 236
- Sharh madhāhib ahl al-sunna wa ma'rifat sharā'i' al-dīn 142
- Sharh usul i'tiqād ahl al-sunna wa al-jamā'a 119
- Shart al-Sahihayn/Shaykhayn-see Requirements of al-Bukhārī and Muslim
- Shāshī, Abū 'Alī Ahmad b. Ishāq (d. 344/955-6) 185; issue of attribution of his Uşūl 186n121
- Shawkānī, M. b. 'Alī (d. 1839) 309, 315
- Shaybānī, M. b. Hasan (d. 198/ 805) 364; recension of the Muwatta' 35
- Sheppard, Gerald T. 25, 335
- Shiism 112, 146, 176; life of Imāmī Shiites in the middle period 227–228; hadīth canon of 227; perspective on Sahihayn 14; use of Sahīhayn canon 228–229; as possible catalyst of hadīth canon 372-374

Shiite-see Shiism

- Shinqīţī, M. Habīb Allāh (d. 1944) 233
- Shīrāzī, Abū Bakr Ahmad b. 'Abdān
- (d. 388/998) 134–135 Shīrāzī, Abū Isḥāq Ibrāhīm b. ʿAlī
- (d. 476/1083) 132, 136, 188, 241, 366; inter-school debates 210
- Shuʿba b. al-Hajjāj (d. 160/776)
- 51-52, 82, 88
- Sibț al-'Ajamī, Aḥmad b. Ibrāhīm (d. 884/1479–80) 297
- Şiḥāḥ—see Ḥadīth canon
- Sijzī, Abū Naşr ʿUbaydallāh al-Wā'ilī (d. 444/1052) 194–195, 202, 209, 196–200, 363, 366, 375
- Sijzī, Mas'ūd b. 'Alī (d. 438–9/ 1046–8) 167
- Silafi, Abū Tāhir Ahmad (d. 576/ 1180) 367; synecdochic representation of the Prophet 337; definition of hadīth canon 9n7; on prayer upon the Prophet 348
- Sindī, Abū al-Hasan (d. 1773) 353n71
- Sindī, M. Hayāt (d. 1751) 308
- Sirjānī, Harb b. Ismā'īl (d. 280/ 893–94) 200
- Six Books—see Hadīth canon
- Şiyānat Şaḥīḥ Muslim 288, 293
- Smith, Jonathan Z. 21n4, 25, 31, 42, 46, 347
- Sokoto Caliphate 307, 319
- Songhay Empire 343
- Stoics 41
- Stroumsa, Guy 27–28, 35
- Subkī, Tāj al-Dīn 'Abd al-Wahhāb b. 'Alī (d. 771/1370) 71, 280, 341, 356; opinion on lafz issue 270
- Subkī, Taqī al-Dīn ʿAlī b. ʿAbd al-Kabīr (d. 756/1356) 286; criticism of Ibn Taymiyya 325
- Sufyān al-Thawrī (d. 161/778) 80, 87, 89; madhhab of 136; use of weak ḥadīths 59n35
- Sufyān b. 'Uyayna (d. 196/811) use of weak ḥadīths 59n35
- Suhrawardī, Abū Hafş 'Umar b. M. (d. 632/1234), 'Awārif al-ma'ārif of 17, 62; isnāds of 62–63
- Sulamī, M. b. al-Ḥusayn (d. 412/ 1021) 156
- Şu'lūkī, Abū Sahl (d. 369/980) 155
- Sunan Abī Dāwūd—see Abū Dāwūd al-Sijistānī
- Sunan Ibn Mājah—see Ibn Mājah

- Sunan al-Nasā ī—see al-Nasā ī
- Sunan al-kubrā—see Bayhaqī
- Sunan al-Tirmidhī—see al-Tirmidhī
- Sunan, the Four 9–10;—see also Hadīth canon
- Sunni—Shiite polemic 111–112
- Sunnism 198, 'revival' and institutionalization of 368–369, 372; communalism of 371; development of 363–367; narrative of history 350–351; tenets and nature of 363–364;—see also Ahl al-hadīth, Über-Sunnism
- Suyūţī, Jalāl al-Dīn 'Abd al-Rahmān (d. 911/1505) 293n103, 315; attempt to encompass whole sunna in his al-Jāmi' al-kabīr 336n4; call for an end to evaluating hadīths 244n118; on requirement for isnāds in using hadīth 64n50; opinion on Musnad Aḥmad 230n65
- Synecdoche, definition of 335–336; in narrative 352–358
- Tabaqāt al-ḥanābila 141, 196
- Tabarānī, Abū al-Qāsim Sulaymān (d. 360/971), hadīth collections and methodology 60–61, 172
- Ţabarī, Abū Ţayyib (d. 450/1058) 188
- Tabarī, M. b. Jarīr (d. 310/923) 89; hadīth compilation of 56; on agreed-upon hadīths 145; position regarding the ahl al-hadīth 78; real stance on the creation/lafz of the Quran 78n104, 79; Tafsīr of 228
- Tabrīzī, Tāj al-Dīn 317
- Tadhkirat al-huffāz—see al-Dhahabī
- Tadlīs (obfuscation in transmission)
- 283–286;—see also Sahīhayn Tafarrud 116
- Ţaḥāwī, Abū Ja'far Aḥmad b. M.
 (d. 321/933) 136; use of al-Bukhārī's works 217n23; use of
- his books by Hanafīs 235–236 Tahdhīb al-asmā' wa al-lughāt 276
- Tahdhīb al-nazar 109
- Ţāʿī, Ayyūb b. ʿĀʾidh 287
- Takhrīj—see Ḥadīth
- Talaqqī bi'l-qubūl—see Ijmā
- Talmud 107
- Tanbīh al-muslim ʿalā taʿaddī al-Albānī ʿalā Ṣaḥīḥ Muslim 327
- Tangīh al-anzār 314
- Tanūkhī, Ahmad b. Yūsuf 137

Tanūkhī, 'Alī b. M. (d. 342/953) 137 Tanūkhī, 'Alī b. Muhassin (d. 407/1016) 56n24 Taglīd (blind imitation/deference to experts) 308, 315, 358 Taqrīr al-asānīd fī tartīb al-masānīd 247 Targhīb wa al-tarhīb of al-Mundhirī 322 Tārīkh al-islām—see al-Dhahabī Tārīkh al-kabīr—see al-Bukhārī Tārīkh Baghdād—see al-Khaţīb al-Baghdādī Tārīkh Bukhārā of Ghunjār 274 Tārīkh Jurjān 130 Tārīkh Naysābūr—see al-Hākim Tārīkh Samarqand 274, 340 Tārīkh-e Bayhaq—see Ibn Funduq Tasriya (tying the udder of a milk animal to increase flow) 255 Tawassul (seeking the intercession of a 213 saint) 297 Tawdīh li-awhām al-wāqi'a fī al-Ṣahīh Tayālisī, Abū Dāwūd (d. 204/818) 51Taymī, Abū al-Qāsim Ismā'īl b. M. (d. 535/1140-41) 340 Text centered community 29, 337 Thamarāt al-nazar fī 'ilm al-athar 316 Thatcher, Margaret 306 Thesis of this book 5–8 Timbuktu 343 Tirmidhī, Abū 'Īsā M. b. 'Īsā (d. 279/ 892) 9, 55, 58n33, 89, 201, 246-247, 352, 376, 385; comparison with al-Bukhārī and Muslim 213; his Jāmi^c as synecdoche of the Prophet 337n7; Jāmi of 124, 234, 240, 323; status of his Jāmi^c 148 Torah 107 Tradition—see Hadīth Traditionalists, Madhhab-see Madhhab Traditionalists Traditionalists-see Ahl al-hadīth Transmission based jurists—see Ahl al-hadīth Transmission, effect of isnāds on the authenticity of hadīth 62, 62n45; need for isnāds and orality in 63-64 (and n46), 368n13; shift from isnāds to books 368–370; weakness of isnāds in later periods 242, 244–245;—see also Isnād Trojan War 100 Tsafrir, Nurit 136

Tubnī, Abū Marwān 'Abd al-Malik (d. 456/1064) 279 Turtūshī, Abū Bakr M. b. al-Walīd (d. 520/1126) 106n16, 354 Ţūsī, Abū al-Nadr M. (d. 344/ 955) 143 Tūsī, M. b. al-Hasan (d. 460/ 1067) 227 Tylor, E.B. 18 Über Sunnis 77–78, 80, 137, 363, 367; critics of al-Hakim 159; lack of interest in Sahīh Muslim in Baghdad 142-see also Sunnism, Hanbalī Madhhab, Hanbalī/ über-Sunnis 'Ulūw 107 Umar b. al-Khattāb 49 Umawī, Abū al-Walīd Hassān b. M. (d. 344/955) 128, 143 Umm Habība 304 Umm of al-Shāfi'ī 129 'Uqaylī, Abū Ja'far M. b. 'Amr (d. 323/934) 77n102, 142; reliance on al-Bukhārī's al-Tārīkh al-kabīr 97 Usman don Fodio (d. 1817) 319 Usūl al-khamsa 180 Uthmān b. 'Affān 35 Virgil 24 Voll, John O. 308 Wādih fī usūl al-fiqh 224 Wādi^cī, Muqbil b. Hādī (d. 2001) 312 Wahhābī Movement 307;—see also Salafī movement Wakī b. al-Jarrāh (d. 197/813) 64n50, 87 Waqf 156 Wāqifiyya 77 Waraqāt 200-2001 Warrāq, al-Hasan b. Hāmid (d. 403/ 1012–13) 141, 191n146 Wāsil b. 'Atā' (d. 131/750) 146n168 Wāsitī, Khalaf b. M. (d. ca. 400/ 1010) study of the Sahīhayn 133-134 Weak hadīth, use in law 53, 55, 59n35; use in law, tafsīr, history and fadā'il 59; Salafī rejection of 312;-see also Albānī Weber, Max 18 Weiss, Bernard 34–36 Wheeler, Brannon 32–33, 36 Wilson, N.L. 42

Yahyā b. Sa'īd al-Qattān (d. 198/ 813) 52, 75, 80, 82 Yahyā b. Yahyā al-Laythī (d. 234/848) 51n6 Yahyā b. Yahyā al-Tamīmī (d. 224-6/ 839-41) 81 Yūnīnī (d. 658/1260) 292n100, 394 Zabīdī, M. Murtadā (d. 1791) 237 Zāhiriyya Library 322

Zahn, Theodor 23

Zann 183n116, 253; among hadīth scholars vs. legal theorists 54

- Zaydism 315
- Zayla'ī, Jamāl al-Dīn 'Abdallāh b. Yūsuf (d. 762/1361), evaluation of al-Hākim's Mustadrak 171; Naşb al-rāya of 237; 256
- Zaydpūrī, 'Abd al-Awwal al-Husaynī (d. 968/1560) 377
- Zenodotus 100
- $\widetilde{Ziy\bar{a}da},$ see Addition Zurqānī, M. b. 'Abd al-Bāqī (d. 1710) 233